In City of Revere v. Massachusetts General Hospital, the Supreme Court applied to the medical care context the Bell v. Wolfish rule that pretrial detainees are entitled to be free of punishment under the Due Process Clause. In that case, the Court found the Due Process Clause requires the government to provide medical care to pretrial detainees in its custody, and those detainees must receive protections "at least as great as the Eighth Amendment protections available to a convicted prisoner" (emphasis added).[242] Even though pretrial detainees' claims that they have been denied adequate medical care are assessed under the Due Process Clause rather than under the Eighth Amendment,[243] many circuits have imported Estelle v. Gamble's[244] "deliberate indifference" test, which is based on the Eighth Amendment, to evaluate detainees'

---

237. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) ("[U]nder the Due Process Clause, a detainee may not be punished prior to an adjudication of guilt.").

238. U.S. Const. amend. VIII ("Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." (emphasis added)).

239. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872 n.16, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 n.16 (1979).

240. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872 n.16, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 n.16 (1979) ("Due process requires that a pretrial detainee not be punished.").

241. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 468 (1979) ("A court must decide whether the disability is imposed for the purpose of punishment or whether it is but an incident of some other legitimate governmental purpose.").

242. City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 611 (1983).

243. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872 n.16, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 n.16 (1979) ("[The] State does not acquire the power to punish with which the Eighth Amendment is concerned until after it has secured a formal adjudication of guilt in accordance with due process of law. Where the State seeks to impose punishment without such an adjudication, the pertinent constitutional guarantee is the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.") (citing Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 671-672, n.40 (1977)).

244. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 107, 97 S. Ct. 285, 293, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 262 (1976) (finding that "[a] medical decision not to order an X-ray, or like measures, does not represent cruel and unusual punishment. At most it is medical malpractice..."). For more information on the deliberate indifference standard, which requires showing more than negligence, please see Part B(2) of this Chapter.

claims.[245] Some courts have found delaying treatment for pretrial detainees violates due process because it punishes detainees and shows deliberate indifference to the serious medical needs of the detainees.[246]

The deliberate indifference test is subjective, not objective.[247] This means for an official to be found "deliberately indifferent," the official must have been aware there was a substantial risk of serious harm but failed to respond reasonably to the risk.[248] The official's conduct must go beyond mere negligence.[249]

The bottom line is that you, as a pretrial detainee, have at least the same rights that a convicted prisoner has to adequate and timely medical and psychiatric care. Your right comes from the Fourteenth Amendment, and may come from state statutes.[250] So, before filing your complaint, you should find out what the law is in your state.

(a) Your Right to Protection From Self-Harm and to Screening for Mental Illness

One application of the right to mental health care is the right to protection from self-harm and suicide. As a general rule, courts have found that jail staff and administrators have a duty to pretrial detainees to protect[251] and/or provide them with adequate psychiatric care.[252] Courts will only find jail officials liable for

---

245. See, e.g., Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10-12 (1st Cir. 1991) (holding that jail officials violated detainees' rights when they exhibited deliberate indifference to medical needs); Hill v. Nicodemus, 979 F.2d 987, 990-91 (4th Cir. 1992) (finding deliberate indifference is the proper standard under which to assess detainees' rights to medical and mental health care); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1186-87 (5th Cir. 1986) (finding pretrial detainees are entitled to at least the level of medical care required under the deliberate indifference test); Heflin v. Stewart County, 958 F.2d 709, 714 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that pretrial detainees must show jail acted with deliberate indifference to serious medical needs), overruled on other grounds by Monzon v. Parmer County, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43798 (N.D. Tex. June 15, 2007) (unpublished); Hall v. Ryan, 957 F.2d 402, 404–05 (7th Cir. 1992) (finding that pretrial detainees are at least entitled to protection from jailers' deliberate indifference); Bell v. Stigers, 937 F.2d 1340, 1342-43 (8th Cir. 1991) (holding that under either the 8th or 14th Amendments, deliberate indifference is the appropriate standard for assessing pretrial detainees' claims); Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1441 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) (finding deliberate indifference is the appropriate test for pretrial detainees' claims, but distinguishing other levels of culpability in the prison context); Howard v. Dickerson, 34 F.3d 978, 980 (10th Cir. 1994) (holding deliberate indifference test applies to pretrial detainees); Cottrell v. Caldwell, 85 F.3d 1480, 1490–91 (11th Cir. 1996) (rejecting a pretrial detainee's mistreatment claim because of a failure to show subjective deliberate indifference).

246. Redman v. County of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1443 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) ("We therefore hold that deliberate indifference is the level of culpability that pretrial detainees must establish for a violation of their personal security interests under the Fourteenth Amendment. We also hold that conduct that is so wanton or reckless with respect to the unjustified infliction of harm as is tantamount to a knowing willingness that it occur ... will also suffice to establish liability ..."); Terry ex rel. Terry v. Hill, 232 F. Supp. 2d 934, 943–44 (E.D. Ark. 2002) (holding it violates due process and the Eighth Amendment to subject pretrial detainees to an average wait of over eight months for admission to a hospital for mental health care); Swan v. Daniels, 923 F. Supp. 626, 631 (D. Del. 1995) (finding the court could apply either the Eighth or 14th Amendment to assess prisoner's claims, since both amendments provide equivalent protection).

247. See, e.g., Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) ("[A] finding of deliberate indifference requires ... that defendant's knowledge of a large risk can be inferred."); Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 636 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) ("We hold that the episodic act or omission of a state jail official does not violate a pretrial detainee's due process right to medical care or protection from suicide unless the official acted or failed to act with subjective deliberate indifference to the detainee's rights."); Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 154–55 (6th Cir. 1995); Conn v. City of Reno, No. 07-15572, 2010 U.S. App. LEXIS 729, at *3 (9th Cir. 2010) (unpublished)(overturning district court's grant of summary judgment in case where police officers detained plaintiff, witnessed her attempt at suicide, and failed to report her suicide, and where plaintiff successfully attempted suicide after a second arrest the following day).

248. Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 154–55 (6th Cir. 1995) (adopting and applying the Farmer v. Brennan subjective deliberate indifference test to a pretrial detainee's claim).

249. Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 154–55 (6th Cir. 1995) (adopting and applying the Farmer v. Brennan subjective deliberate indifference test to a pretrial detainee's claim).

250. See, e.g., Ark. Code Ann. § 5-2-305 (2006) (establishing a state hospital's duty to provide care for detainees with mental illness committed for evaluation or treatment).

251. Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 650 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (holding that the state has a duty to provide mental health care to suicidal pretrial detainees where to deny it would suggest deliberate indifference); Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) ("It is clearly established … that jail officials violate the due process rights of their detainees if they exhibit a deliberate indifference to the medical needs of the detainees that is tantamount to an intent to punish."); Hill v. Nicodemus, 979 F.2d 987, 991 (4th Cir. 1992) (holding that a pretrial detainee who had committed suicide was entitled to medical care, and its denial could be assessed under the deliberate indifference standard); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1187 (5th Cir. 1986) (holding that jail officials had a duty not to be deliberately indifferent to an inmate's psychiatric needs).

252. Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 650 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (holding that the state has a duty to failing to prevent a suicide or an attempt, if they knew or should have known that an inmate was suicidal.[253] The standard that courts typically apply to determine if the State failed to protect inmates from themselves or failed to provide mental health care is not negligence but rather deliberate indifference,[254] as outlined in Parts E(1)(a) and B(2) of this Chapter. Moreover, in a case of self-harm, finding "deliberate indifference requires a strong likelihood, rather than a mere possibility, that self-infliction of harm will occur."[255]

Similarly, courts have not established a clear rule requiring screening for mental health problems or suicidal tendencies upon arrival at a jail. Some courts have held incoming prisoners must be screened so that they can be provided with mental health care.[256] Other courts have found there is no duty to screen.[257]

(b) Your Right to Continuation of Drug Treatment

Though the general rule is that courts need not compel jails or prisons to provide specific types of treatment like methadone maintenance,[258] you do have a protected liberty interest in treatments that you are already receiving at the time you begin your incarceration. Since pretrial detainees retain as many of the rights they would otherwise have were they not detained, any unnecessary deprivation of liberty—like withdrawing methadone—violates their due process rights.[259] Additionally, withdrawal pain can be considered punishment, which is not allowed prior to trial or plea.[260] The only limit on this right is if the government can claim that it has a legitimate interest, like jail security or ensuring your presence at trial,[261] that would override your liberty interest. In addition to due process, if you are detained rather than released and are being denied methadone, you may be able to claim that you are not being treated the same as pretrial defendants who are out on pretrial release.[262] provide mental health care to suicidal pretrial detainees where to deny it would suggest deliberate indifference); Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991) ("It is clearly established … that jail officials violate the due process rights of their detainees if they exhibit a deliberate indifference to the medical needs of the detainees that is tantamount to an intent to punish."); Hill v. Nicodemus, 979 F.2d 987 (4th Cir. 1992) (holding that a pretrial detainee who had committed suicide was entitled to medical care, and its denial could be assessed under the deliberate indifference standard); Partridge v. Two Unknown Police Officers, 791 F.2d 1182, 1187 (5th Cir.) (holding that jail officials had a duty not to be deliberately indifferent to an inmate's psychiatric needs).

---

253. Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10–11 (1st Cir. 1991).

254. Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633, 643 (5th Cir. 1996) (en banc) (adopting a test of deliberate indifference for episodic acts of inadequate medical care or failure to protect).

255. Elliott v. Cheshire County, 940 F.2d 7, 10 (1st Cir. 1991).

256. Campbell v. McGruder, 580 F.2d 521, 548–50 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (creating an affirmative duty to screen pretrial detainees displaying unusual behavior for mental illness, and requiring treatment for their medical needs); Alberti v. Sheriff of Harris County, 406 F. Supp. 649, 677 (S.D. Tex. 1975) (ordering that jail establish an intake screening process to detect alcohol and drug abuse, and mental illness).

257. Belcher v. Oliver, 898 F.2d 32, 34–35 (4th Cir. 1990) (holding detainee's right to be free from punishment did not include right to be screened for mental illness or suicide risk); Gagne v. City of Galveston, 805 F.2d 558, 559 (5th Cir. 1986) (holding arresting officer had no duty to screen for suicidal tendencies); Danese v. Asman, 875 F.2d 1239, 1244 (6th Cir. 1989) ("It is one thing to ignore someone who has a serious injury and is asking for medical help; it is another to be required to screen prisoners correctly to find out if they need help."); Estate of Cartwright v. City of Concord, 856 F.2d 1437, 1439 (9th Cir. 1988) (upholding a finding that did not impose liability for failure to screen for mental illness).

258. See Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1188 (3d Cir. 1978) ("There is no constitutional right to methadone."); Hines v. Anderson, 439 F. Supp. 12, 17 (D. Minn. 1977) (finding no requirement that prison administer methadone as part of a drug maintenance program).

259. Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1185 (3d Cir. 1978) (finding that the facts in this case did not warrant depriving pretrial detainee's rights by refusing to continue his methadone treatment); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311–12 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (holding that it violates due process to deny prisoner the right to continue methadone treatment); s*ee generally* Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) (applying the Due Process Clause to assess pretrial detainees' conditions of confinement claims).

260. See Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1187 (3d Cir. 1978) ("A detainee ... may not be 'punished' at all."); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311 (N.D. Ohio 1974) ("[A] pretrial detainee should not be subjected to ... punishment or loss.")

261. Norris v. Frame, 585 F.2d 1183, 1189 (3d Cir. 1978) (providing that the state can only override a prisoner's liberty interest in limited circumstances: those inherent to confinement, necessary to guarantee jail security, or needed to ensure defendant's presence at trial); Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 311 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (finding pretrial detainees should lose only those liberties incident to confinement).

262. Cudnik v. Kreiger, 392 F. Supp. 305, 312 (N.D. Ohio 1974) (holding that those detained pretrial should not suffer greater deprivations—other than confinement—than those released pending trial).

2. Unwanted Treatment as a Pretrial Detainee

Just as you have the right to refuse medication while you are in prison,[263] you have the right to refuse treatment if you are a detainee awaiting trial.[264] However, your right to refuse medication is not absolute. Even though you have more rights as a detainee than as a convicted prisoner, the nature of the government interest in giving you medication is unique in this context. Specifically, the government may give you medication before trial in order to make you competent to stand trial.[265] However, the government may do this only if several conditions are met.[266] Similarly, there are several procedural checks in place to make sure that medicating you is absolutely necessary.[267] If you are a detainee in federal custody, for example, you are entitled to an administrative hearing for which you had prior notice and are provided representation, and at which you may appear, present evidence, cross-examine witnesses, and hear the testimony of your treating mental health professional.[268] You also may appeal a decision that you do not like.[269] The reason that there are so many checks is that you have a strong interest in defining your own treatment as well as conducting your criminal defense,[270] and so courts will be careful to make sure that your interests are appropriately balanced against the government's interests.[271]

(a) The Sell Test: Conditions the Government Must Meet Before Medicating You

In Sell v. United States,[272] the Supreme Court established the test for when it may be appropriate for the government to forcibly medicate you prior to trial for serious but non-violent crimes, and when it violates your rights to do so. There, the Court required the government to comply with all of the following conditions before medicating the pretrial detainee:

(i) Important Government Interests Are at Stake.[273]

The Court has held that determining a defendant's guilt or innocence for a "serious crime" is an important government interest.[274] However, there is no clear rule defining what "serious" means, though courts may measure it based on the sentence to which the charged crime exposes you.[275] One court, for instance, declined to fix a clear line defining what crimes are serious, but found that one exposing a 263. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–22, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1036, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990) (finding prisoner had a protected liberty interest under the Due Process Clause in avoiding unwanted medication).

264. Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127, 137, 112 S. Ct. 1810, 1816, 118 L. Ed. 2d 479, 490 (1992) (holding lower court erred by not acknowledging criminal defendant's liberty interest in avoiding unwanted antipsychotic drugs); see generally Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 545, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1877, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 472 (1979) (holding that pretrial detainees enjoy at least as much protection as convicted prisoners).

265. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 169, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2178, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 205 (2003) (concluding that the government may administer antipsychotic drugs to pretrial detainees in limited circumstances). In prison, in contrast, the government interest is often defined in terms of avoiding harm to self or others. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990).

266. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180–81, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211–12 (2003) (establishing a multi-part test for when a detainee may be medicated to restore competence to stand trial).

267. United States v. Brandon, 158 F.3d 947, 955 (6th Cir. 1998) (requiring judicial hearing on whether to medicate defendant before trial).

268. 28 C.F.R. § 549.43(a) (2007).

269. 28 C.F.R. § 549.43(a)(6) (2007).

270. See, e.g., Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127, 137, 112 S. Ct. 1810, 1816, 118 L. Ed. 2d 479, 491 (1992) (concluding that side effects from antipsychotic medication likely unfairly impaired prisoner's defense at trial); United States v. Brandon, 158 F.3d 947, 955 (6th Cir. 1998) (holding that courts should consider whether medication will affect the defendant's physical appearance at trial or as the defendant's ability to aid in the preparation of his own defense).

271. See United States v. Rivera-Guerrero, 377 F.3d 1064, 1071 (9th Cir. 2004) (finding that, due to the nature of the rights at stake, only federal district courts, not federal magistrates, may authorize the involuntary administration of medication).

272. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197 (2003).

273. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211 (2003).

274. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 211 (2003).

275. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 237 (4th Cir. 2005) (looking to the maximum statutory sentence to determine whether a crime is "serious"); United States v. Dallas, 461 F. Supp. 2d 1093, 1097 (D. Neb. 2006) ("The seriousness of the crime is measured by its maximum statutory penalty.").

defendant to a maximum of 10 years of imprisonment was serious.[276] Therefore, the government had an interest in trying the detainee in that case.[277]

(ii) No Special Circumstances Exist that Lessen the Government's Interest in Prosecution.[278]

If special circumstances exist, the government's interest in trying you will be less important. But, the Sell Court noted that, if the detainee is deemed dangerous to himself or others, the State may medicate him on those grounds instead, and need not reach the question of whether medication is necessary to enable him to stand trial.[279] In such a case, special circumstances might not lessen the government's interest, which would involve safety rather than ensuring a detainee could stand trial. You should note that the burden on the government is lower if it desires to medicate you for dangerousness reasons rather than to stand trial.[280]

(iii) Involuntary Medication "Significantly Further[s]" Government Interests, Making Defendant's Competence to Stand Trial Substantially Likely.[281]

Several courts have tried to define what "substantially likely" means. One court found that a 50% likelihood that the pretrial detainee would regain competency was not enough to justify giving him medication over his objection.[282] Another court held that a 70% success rate among other detainees was enough.[283] Yet another court has stated that an 80% chance was enough.[284] Though it is not clear exactly what counts as "substantially likely," the greater the percentage chance you will be restored to health—to which a psychiatrist will testify at your involuntary medication hearing—the smaller the chance you have of successfully claiming that the government should fail the Sell test on this basis. However, because the government must meet all of Sell's conditions, you still might be able to claim that you should not be medicated for other reasons. Furthermore, some courts have been skeptical of the practice of using statistical evidence of how likely a defendant is to regain competence,[285] and so you might be able to argue that the statistics themselves are flawed.

Courts are also concerned that side effects, even if not medically harmful, may alter the detainee in ways that are likely to affect his ability to assist in his defense.[286] Whether this will happen is another factor that courts should consider when deciding whether to allow you to be medicated before trial.

(iv) Involuntary Medication is Necessary to Further Government Interests, and Less Intrusive Means Are Unlikely to Achieve the Same Result.[287]

The Supreme Court requires the government to explore alternatives before resorting to the very invasive practice of giving you medication over your objection.[288] These means might include non-drug therapies, or a court order to the detainee backed by the court's power to punish him for contempt if he does not comply.[289]

---

276. United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 238 (4th Cir. 2005).

277. United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 238 (4th Cir. 2005).

278. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 180, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003) (finding that special circumstances, like the fact that the detainee is likely to be civilly confined for a length of time, might lessen the need to prosecute criminally and therefore lessen the need to medicate to stand trial).

279. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 182–83, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185–86, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 213–14 (2003) (finding that if the government can instead seek civil commitment, where the detainee may be medicated because of risk to self or others, it should do that prior to seeking to medicate to stand trial); United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1159 n.2 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (finding that courts should conduct a Washington v. Harper dangerousness assessment prior to a trial competence one); United States v. White, 431 F.3d 431, 434–35 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding government should have sought a dangerousness assessment first).

280. See United States v. Rodman, 446 F. Supp. 2d 487, 496 (D.S.C. 2006).

281. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003) (noting that the use of drugs must be "in the patient's best medical interest in light of his medical condition" and must take into account the chance of side effects).

282. United States v. Rivera-Morales, 365 F. Supp. 2d 1139, 1141 (S.D. Cal. 2005).

283. United States v. Gomes, 387 F.3d 157, 161 (2d Cir. 2004).

284. United States v. Bradley, 417 F.3d 1107, 1115 (10th Cir. 2005).

285. United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1162 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (doubting the "predictive value and applicability of the government's statistic regarding the likelihood of success").

286. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

287. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

(v) Medication is Medically Appropriate (in the Detainee's Best Interest).[290]

If the State is trying to medicate you, the drugs must be in your best interest. If the side effects are too dangerous, for example, a court may deny the government's request to medicate you.[291] And, courts have held that the government must provide evidence as to how the drugs are likely to affect you specifically, rather than people generally.[292]

(b) Other Procedural Requirements

The Sell case involves what is called your "substantive due process" right to avoid unwanted intrusions into your personal liberty, and assesses your interests against the government's interests. You also have the right to certain procedures before your rights are taken away. For example, you are entitled to a hearing before you are forcibly medicated. If the government seeks to medicate you for dangerousness, it must give you at minimum an administrative hearing.[293] If, however, it is trying to restore your competence to stand trial, you are entitled to a full judicial hearing in a court.[294] In both cases, you have the right to protections like notice, representation, and the right to present evidence. The precise procedural requirements vary by state.

Another safeguard that courts have established is the burden of proof that the government must meet when trying to forcibly administer medication to pretrial detainees. Though not all federal circuits have ruled on this question, the general rule is that the government must show medication is necessary by "clear and convincing evidence."[295] Although clear and convincing is not as difficult a standard to meet as "beyond a reasonable doubt," which is the standard in criminal cases, it is still very hard to meet. Furthermore, the government may not use conclusory evidence—or evidence that presumes the point it is trying to make—to prove its case.[296] Though these protections do not offer you an absolute right to avoid treatment, they make it more difficult for the State to take away your rights.

F. Where to Go for Help

In most states, there are organizations called Protection and Advocacy ("P&A") agencies that protect and advocate for the rights of people with mental illnesses, and investigate reports of abuse and neglect in facilities that care for or treat individuals with mental illnesses. These facilities—which may be public or private—include hospitals, nursing homes, homeless shelters, jails, and prisons. P&As may advocate for prisoners and investigate issues that come up during transportation or admission to such treatment facilities, during residency in them, or within ninety days after discharge from them.[297]

---

288. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

289. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

290. Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 181, 123 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 156 L. Ed. 2d 197, 212 (2003).

291. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 242 (4th Cir. 2005) (requiring government to state what the likely side effects will be, and whether the benefits of treatment will outweigh them); United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1163 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (finding antipsychotic drugs can have severe side effects, and the government had not met its burden of showing that the benefits of giving them to the detainee outweighed the risks).

292. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 241 (4th Cir. 2005) (finding fault with government's failure to provide evidence about this particular detainee).

293. See United States v. White, 431 F.3d 431, 435 (5th Cir. 2005) (finding that the federal government set up a regulatory scheme that entitled pretrial detainee to an administrative hearing on the issue of forcible medication).

294. United State v. Brandon, 158 F.3d 947, 955–56 (6th Cir. 1998) (finding that judicial, rather than administrative, hearing is necessary because those with legal training make determinations at a judicial hearing).

295. United States v. Gomes, 387 F.3d 157, 160 (2d Cir. 2004) (requiring the government to make its case for involuntary medication with clear and convincing proof); United States v. Bradley, 417 F.3d 1107, 1114 (10th Cir. 2005) (finding that because important interests are involved, the government must prove its case by clear and convincing evidence); United States v. Cruz-Martinez, 436 F. Supp. 2d 1157, 1160 n.3 (S.D. Cal. 2006) ("follow[ing] the weight of the case law in adopting the 'clear and convincing' burden of proof.").

296. See United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227, 240 (4th Cir. 2005) (government failed to explain how it reached its conclusions about alleged necessity to medicate pretrial detainee).

297. This general definition of protection agencies was taken from U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Servs. Nat'l Mental Health Info. Ctr., Center for Mental Health Services: Protection and Advocacy, http://www.mentalhealth.samhsa.gov/cmhs/p&a (last visited Feb. 14, 2010).

G. Conclusion

This Chapter explains your rights as a prisoner with mental illness. It covers the basic information you will need to understand how the law applies to prisoners with mental illness, your right to receive treatment, and your limited right to refuse unwanted treatment and transfers. For a list of organizations that might be able to help you with legal issues related to your mental illness, please write to the JLM.

APPENDIX A

RESOURCES FOR PRISONERS WITH MENTAL ILLNESS

The following is a list of organizations, including P&As, that you might wish to contact for help with legal issues related to your mental illness. This list is not complete, and every state should have at least one P&A that assists people with mental illness. To find out the name and contact information for the P&A in your area, contact the National Disability Rights Network, 900 Second Street NE, Suite 211, Washington, D.C. 20002; Phone: (202) 408-9514, TTY: (202) 408-9521, Fax: (202) 408-9520.

National Organization
The Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law
1101 15th Street NW, Suite 1212
Washington, DC 20005
Phone: (202) 467-5730
Fax: (202) 223-0409
http://www.bazelon.org

California
Disability Rights California
100 Howe Avenue, Suite 185-N
Sacramento, CA 95825
Phone: (916) 488-9955
Toll Free: (800) 776-5746
TTY: (800) 719-5798
http://www.pai-ca.org

Florida
Advocacy Center for Persons with Disabilities, Inc.
2728 Centerview Drive, Suite 102
Tallahassee, FL 32301
Phone: (850) 488-9071
Toll Free: (800) 342-0823 (in-state)
Fax: (850) 488-8640
TDD: (800) 346-4127
http://www.advocacycenter.org

Massachusetts
Disability Law Center, Inc.
11 Beacon Street, Suite 925
Boston, MA 02108
Phone: (617) 723-8455
Toll Free: (800) 872-9992
TTY: (800) 381-0577
Fax: (617) 723-9125
http://www.dlc-ma.org/index.htm

New York
The Urban Justice Center
123 William Street, 16th Floor
New York, NY, 10038
Phone: (646) 602-5600
Toll Free: (877) 647-5291
Fax: (212) 533-4598
http://www.urbanjustice.org/
Counties served: Bronx, Brooklyn, Manhattan, Queens

Disability Advocates, Inc.
5 Clinton Square, 3rd Floor
Albany, NY 12207
Phone: (518) 432-7861
Toll Free: (800) 993-8982
Fax: (518) 427-6561
http://www.disabilityadvocates.info/
Counties served: Albany, Columbia, Dutchess, Fulton, Greene, Montgomery, Orange, Putnam, Rensselaer, Rockland, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Sullivan, Ulster, Westchester

New York State Commission on Quality of Care and Advocacy for Persons with Disabilities ("CQCAPD")
401 State Street
Schenectady, NY 12305
Toll Free: (800) 624-4143 (Voice/TTY/Spanish)
Fax: (518) 388-2860
http://www.cqcapd.state.ny.us

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.
100 Court Street, P.O. Box 989
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
Phone: (518) 563-4022
Toll Free: (800) 722-7380
Fax: (518) 563-4058
http://www.lasnny.org/
Counties served: Franklin, Clinton, Essex, Hamilton

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.
17 Hodskin Street
Canton, NY 13617
Phone: (315) 386-4586
Toll Free: (800) 822-8283
Fax: (315) 386-2868
http://www.lasnny.org/
Counties served: St. Lawrence, St. Regis Indian Reservation

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.
112 Spring Street
Saratoga Springs, NY 12866
Phone: (518) 587-5188
Toll free: (800) 870-8343
Fax: (518) 587-0959
http://www.lasnny.org/
Counties served: Saratoga, Warren, Washington

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.
1 Kimball Street
Amsterdam, NY 12010
Phone: (518) 842-9466
Toll free: (800) 821-8347
Fax: (518) 843-1792
http://www.lasnny.org/
Counties served: Fulton, Montgomery, Schoharie

Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.
55 Colvin Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
Phone: (518) 462-6765
Toll free: (800) 462-2922
Fax: (518) 427-8352
http://www.lasnny.org
Counties Served: Albany, Columbia, Greene, Rensselaer, Schenectady

New York Lawyers for the Public Interest
151 West 30th Street, 11th Floor
New York, NY 10001-4007
Phone: (212) 244-4664
Fax: (212) 244-4570
http://nylpi.org
Counties served: Bronx, Brooklyn, Manhattan, Queens, Richmond

Neighborhood Legal Services, Inc.
237 Main Street, 4th Floor
Buffalo, NY 14203
Phone: (716) 847-0650
TTY: (716) 847-1322
Fax: (716) 847-0227
http://www.nls.org/
Counties served: Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Ontario, Orleans, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, Yates

Legal Services of Central New York, Inc.
472 South Salina Street, Suite 300B
Syracuse, NY 13202
Phone: (315) 703-6500
Fax: (315) 475-2706
http://www.lscny.org/
Counties served: Broome, Cayuga, Chemung, Chenango, Cortland, Delaware, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Madison, Oneida, Onondaga, Otsego, Oswego, Schuyler, Tompkins, Tioga

Touro College Clinic Program
Jacob D. Fuchsberg Law Center
225 Eastview Drive
Central Islip, NY 11722
Phone: (631) 761-7080
Fax: (631) 421-2675
Counties served: Nassau, Suffolk

Texas

Advocacy, Inc.
7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Suite 171-E
Austin, TX 78757-1024
Phone: (512) 454-4816
Toll Free: (800) 252-9108 (Voice/TDD)
Fax: (512) 323-0902
(only in county and city jails)
http://www.advocacyinc.org

APPENDIX B

CONTACT INFORMATION FOR DISABILITY ADVOCATES, INC. V. NEW YORK STATE OFFICE OF MENTAL HEALTH

Disability Advocates, Inc.
5 Clinton Square, 3rd Floor
Albany, NY 12207
Phone: (518) 432-7861
Toll Free: (800) 993-8982
Fax: (518) 427-6561
www.disability-advocates.org

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York
102 Prospect Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
Prisons Served: Auburn, Butler, Camp Georgetown, Monterey Shock, Camp Pharsalia, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Southport, Watertown, Willard

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York
41 State Street, Suite M112
Albany, NY 12207
Prisons Served: Arthurkill, Bayview, Beacon, Bedford Hills, Mt. McGregor, Summit Shock, CNYPC, Coxsackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecombe, Fishkill, Fulton, Great Meadow, Greene, Greenhaven, Hale Creek, Hudson, Lincoln, Marcy, Midstate, Mid-Orange, Mohawk, Oneida, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Walsh, Washington, Woodbourne

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York
Statler Towers, Suite 1360
107 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14202
Prisons Served: Albion, Attica, Buffalo, Collins, Gowanda, Groveland, Lakeview, Livingston, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, Wyoming

Prisoners' Legal Services of New York
121 Bridge Street, Suite 202
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
Prisons Served: Adirondack, Altona, Bare Hill, Camp Gabriels, Chateaugay, Clinton, Franklin, Gouverneur, Lyon Mountain, Moriah Shock, Ogdensburg, Riverview, Upstate

Prisoners' Rights Project
The Legal Aid Society
199 Water Street, 6th Floor
New York, NY 10038
Phone: (212) 577-3346

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 30: Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Prisoners

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 30

SPECIAL INFORMATION FOR LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL, AND TRANSGENDER PRISONERS*

A. Introduction

Lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender ("LGBT") prisoners face the same challenges as other prisoners, but due to prejudice about sexual orientation and gender identity, LGBT prisoners often encounter additional difficulties.

Many of the issues unique to LGBT prisoners have not been litigated extensively.[1] And many of the issues that have been litigated may change significantly in light of a relatively new Supreme Court decision.[2] The outcomes of these claims are now less predictable. This unpredictability, combined with the fact that homophobia and transphobia may play a role in many judges' and juries' decision-making process, means that LGBT prisoners face uphill battles when they bring claims in court. For this reason, you should consider contacting an LGBT impact litigation organization to see if its lawyers would be willing to take your case.[3] For a list of such organizations, see Appendix A at the end of this Chapter. This is especially important if you are seeking to apply new theories about sexual orientation or gender identity to your case. Even if such an organization cannot take your case, someone may be able to refer you to an attorney who has experience working with LGBT plaintiffs.

Throughout this Chapter, the term "transgender" is used to indicate a broad spectrum of people whose identity or lived experiences do not conform to those that are typically associated with the sex assigned at birth. This includes non-, pre-, and post-operative transgendered people; people who live part or all of the time as a gender other than the one assigned to them at birth; people with intersex conditions; cross-dressers; masculine women; and feminine men. Gender identity is used to describe the gender a person identifies as, regardless of whether that gender is the same as the one they were assigned at birth.

This Chapter attempts to address the most pressing concerns of LGBT prisoners. Part B of this Chapter discusses important Supreme Court cases and how they may affect past and future prison regulations. Part C explains what to do if you are being treated unfairly because of your sexual orientation or gender identity. Part D discusses your remedies if you feel that homophobic or transphobic beliefs led to jury bias in your conviction. Part E addresses your right to control your gender identity while in prison and includes a discussion of your right to gender-related medical care such as hormone treatment. Part F explains your right to confidentiality regarding your sexual orientation or gender identity. Part G addresses assault and harassment by prison officials and other prisoners. Part H discusses protective custody and housing placements for transgender prisoners. Part I discusses visitation rights. Finally, Part J discusses your right to receive LGBT literature.

As you read this Chapter, you should always keep in mind that Title 42 of the United States Code, Section 1983 (known as "Section 1983"), is a federal statute that permits you to sue a person who, while acting on behalf of the state, violates either one of your federal statutory rights or one of your constitutional rights, such as your right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment or your right to equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment. If you are a state prisoner and your rights

---

* This Chapter was revised by Meredith Duffy, based on previous versions by Jen Higgins and Kari Hong. Special thanks to Shannon Minter and Courtney Joslin of the National Center for Lesbian Rights (NCLR), Craig Cowie of the ACLU National Prison Project, Leslie Cooper of the ACLU Gay and Lesbian Project, Jennifer Levi of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD), and Prof. Philip Genty of Columbia Law School's Prisoners and Families Clinic for their valuable comments.

1. Unfortunately, some legal decisions of significance to LGBT prisoners are unreported—that is, they do not appear in the Federal Reporter or Federal Supplement volumes available in prison law libraries. In the JLM, these cases have citations like "U.S. App. LEXIS 12345 (unpublished)." Make sure you read Chapter 2 of the JLM for important information about unpublished cases. At the very least, even if you cannot cite an unpublished case in your claim, the case may help you predict the outcome of a similar lawsuit.

2. See the next section for a lengthy discussion of Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2483, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508 (2003).

3. Impact litigation organizations litigate cases where the law is unresolved with the hope of creating favorable law for future cases. A list of such organizations appears in Appendix A at the end of this Chapter.

have been violated by prison officials, you should also check state and local laws. Depending on where you are located, bringing a lawsuit under Section 1983 may be your best option.[4] For a more detailed explanation of Section 1983, see Chapter 16 of the JLM. It is also very important to be aware of the constraints placed on prisoner litigation by the Prisoner Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). Please read Chapter 14 of the JLM for a more detailed explanation of the PLRA before filing any lawsuit.

B. Changes in the Law

This part begins by briefly explaining a relatively recent and very important Supreme Court case, Lawrence v. Texas, in which the Court ruled that states cannot pass laws prohibiting homosexual acts. This case will be discussed alongside Bowers v. Hardwick,[5] which was overruled by Lawrence v. Texas, and Romer v. Evans,[6] which may affect claims brought by LGBT prisoners. Finally, this part discusses the general changes to the law that Lawrence and Romer might bring about. Because many of the cases discussed in this Chapter are based explicitly on the reasoning in Bowers, the issues may be open to new interpretation because of Lawrence and Romer. Please note that while both Bowers and Lawrence deal specifically with sexual orientation, they may also affect claims brought by transgendered prisoners because prison officials may perceive a transgendered prisoner to be homosexual, regardless of actual sexual orientation.

1. Lawrence v. Texas and Due Process Claims

In June 2003, the United States Supreme Court found a Texas law unconstitutional that made homosexual sex between consenting adults a crime.[7] While the practical effect of the decision may have little immediate impact on you or the conditions of confinement that you face, the Lawrence decision may ultimately have far reaching consequences. In the ruling, the Court held that the right to privacy, as guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment, includes the right to engage in consensual intimate or sexual activity, including same-sex activity.[8]

The vast majority of the cases in this Chapter were decided before Lawrence. Because of this, many cases in this Chapter still use the earlier reasoning in another famous Supreme Court case, Bowers v. Hardwick.[9] Bowers, decided in 1986, was in many ways the exact legal opposite of Lawrence, and cases that would have relied upon the ruling in Bowers may now be decided differently, since Lawrence is now the law.

Because of the far reaching consequences of Lawrence and because the decision is still relatively new, it is hard to know how courts will now treat LGBT claims.

(a) Bowers v. Hardwick

Bowers v. Hardwick was a Supreme Court case that found the constitutional right to privacy did not extend to homosexual acts between consenting adults.[10] Generally, the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution[11] prohibits the government from infringing upon fundamental rights unless there is a sufficient justification for the government's interference. The question of which rights are "fundamental" has been the subject of many court battles. The Supreme Court has held in the past that very private decisions, such as the decision to use birth control or have an abortion, are protected under the Fourteenth Amendment because they involve a fundamental right to privacy.[12] In Bowers, the Court held that the right to engage in

---

4. To challenge the conduct of an official or employee of the federal government, you must bring a Bivens action. You can find an explanation of how to do this in Chapter 16 of the JLM.

5. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 186–87, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 2841–42, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140, 140–41 (1986).

6. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 626–27, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1624–25, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 859 (1996).

7. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508 (2003).

8. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2478, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 518 (2003).

9. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 186–87, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 2841–42, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140, 140–41 (1986).

10. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 186–87, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 2841–42, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140, 140–41 (1986).

11. "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1.

12. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485–86, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 515–16 (1965) (articulating the importance of marriage as a right of privacy); Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 154, 93 S. Ct. 705, 727, 35 L. Ed. 2d 147, 177–78 (1973) (holding that the abortion decision falls within the right of personal privacy, but qualifying that it must be considered against some important state interests).

consensual homosexual acts is not protected under the right to privacy and that states could prohibit homosexual acts merely on the basis of views that consider homosexuality immoral.[13]

(i) The End of Bowers

When the Supreme Court decided Lawrence v. Texas, it explicitly overruled Bowers v. Hardwick.[14] As a result, many of the cases relying on Bowers and refusing to question the unequal treatment of LGBT prisoners might now be questionable. Several important issues arise after Lawrence. Keep them in mind if you are thinking about bringing suit about your treatment in prison.

First, Lawrence says that under the Constitution, all adults, including LGBT individuals, have the right to engage in intimate conduct with another adult in private.[15] This means that private, consensual homosexual sex is no longer a crime. This does not mean that you have the right to engage in sex in prison, but it probably does mean that prison officials cannot treat you differently because you identify as or are perceived to be LGBT.

Second, one Supreme Court Justice wrote in a concurring opinion in Lawrence that moral disapproval is an insufficient reason to treat people differently, relying on a prior Supreme Court opinion.[16] While that is not the holding of the Lawrence case, its use by a Justice in Lawrence indicates that the rule may be useful in court when arguing that your rights have been infringed because of your sexual orientation.

Third, Lawrence makes all the cases that relied on Bowers open to attack. When you are considering whether or not to bring a claim, pay close attention to whether Bowers played a role in any negative cases in your jurisdiction. If you feel that a case relied heavily on Bowers and negatively affects your case, contact one of the impact litigation organizations listed in the Appendix A at the end of this Chapter. It may be possible to argue that the negative case no longer applies since Bowers was overruled.

(b) The Unknown Effect of Lawrence

Because Lawrence was decided fairly recently, it is hard to know how far-reaching its effects will be. Because the case holds same-sex conduct is entitled to at least some legal protections, Lawrence may have the power to influence a vast number of cases regarding LGBT rights. But courts have been hesitant to read Lawrence broadly enough to establish a basis for LGBT rights beyond cases that are factually similar to Lawrence. For instance, sometimes courts will use other precedents—such as Romer v. Evans,[17] which is discussed below and deals with equal protection—to avoid the Lawrence question.[18]

At least one case post-Lawrence has declined to extend Lawrence to the point where it would protect all kinds of homosexual conduct in prison. In Willson v. Buss, a prisoner sued the superintendent of his prison for the right to receive magazines with homosexual content.[19] The court noted that Lawrence had overruled Bowers and that there was a constitutionally-protected right in open society to engage in homosexual relationships. However, the court made a point of saying that the right does not necessarily extend to the prison context, where constitutional rights may be limited by prison officials for necessary reasons.[20]

---

13. Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 196, 106 S. Ct. 2841, 2846–47, 92 L. Ed. 2d 140, 149 (1986).

14. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2484, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 525 (2003) ("Bowers was not correct when it was decided, and it is not correct today. It ought not to remain binding precedent. Bowers v. Hardwick should be and now is overruled.").

15. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 567, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2478, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 518 (2003) ("When sexuality finds overt expression in intimate conduct with another person, the conduct can be but one element in a personal bond that is more enduring. The liberty protected by the Constitution allows homosexual persons the right to make this choice.").

16. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 582, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2486, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 528 (2003) (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("Moral disapproval of this group, like a bare desire to harm the group, is an interest that is insufficient to satisfy rational basis review under the Equal Protection Clause."); see also Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 634, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1629, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 867 (1996) (holding that action based on a bare desire to harm could not constitute a legitimate government interest, and so violated the Equal Protection Clause).

17. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 626–27, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1624–25, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 859 (1996).

18. See, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532–33 (5th Cir. 2004) (relying on Romer in holding the law clearly established a denial of protection to a prisoner because of his sexuality violated the Equal Protection Clause).

19. Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 784 (N.D. Ind. 2005).

20. Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 786 (N.D. Ind. 2005). See Part J of this Chapter for further discussion of your right to receive LGBT literature while in prison.

2. Romer v. Evans and the Equal Protection Clause

While the ruling in Lawrence v. Texas was based upon the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and the right to privacy, an alternative basis for claims affecting LGBT prisoners is the Equal Protection Clause. The Equal Protection Clause prohibits the government from treating different classes of people differently unless there is a sufficient, legitimate governmental purpose in doing so.[21] The leading case affecting LGBT people bringing equal protection claims is Romer v. Evans.[22]

In considering equal protection claims, courts apply different legal standards to different classifications of people. It is more likely that a law will be found unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment when a higher standard of legal scrutiny applies. For example, if the government makes a distinction based upon race, it must show that the contested classification based on race is necessary to achieve a compelling government interest. This is known as a "strict scrutiny" legal standard. For a distinction based on gender, the contested classification must be substantially related to an important government objective. This standard is called an "intermediate scrutiny" legal standard. Other classifications, such as those based on age, only need to be rationally related to a legitimate government purpose to survive an equal protection challenge. This standard is known as "rational basis" legal review.

In Romer v. Evans, the plaintiffs challenged an amendment to a state constitution that invalidated and prohibited local laws that barred discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. In hearing the case, the Supreme Court had to decide which level of scrutiny, from those described above, to apply to distinctions or classifications based on sexual orientation. While the Court held that classification based on sexual orientation is only entitled to a rational basis review, the lowest legal standard, the Court still invalidated the amendment under this rational basis test. The Court found that the only purpose behind the law was "animus [hatred] toward the class [homosexuals] that it affects," and held that neither animus nor hatred were legitimate government purposes.[23]

Romer v. Evans is significant for two reasons. First, it establishes that distinctions based on sexual orientation will be evaluated under the rational basis review test, not a stricter test. Second, it demonstrates a willingness on the part of the Supreme Court to use the rational basis test to protect the interests of LGBT people. Previously, it had been very hard to win an equal protection challenge under the rational basis test. So, while Romer v. Evans was a disappointment to LGBT people in that the Court did not extend a higher level of scrutiny to classifications based on sexual orientation, it is helpful because it shows how rational basis review can be used to successfully challenge policies that discriminate based on sexual orientation. In Johnson v. Johnson, for example, the Fifth Circuit relied on Romer v. Evans in discussing claims against prison officials.[24] In this case, a homosexual inmate alleged that officials failed to protect him from violence and rapes by other prisoners, even after he alerted officials of the assaults. The Court noted that:

> It is clearly established that all prison inmates are entitled to reasonable protection from sexual assault. ... Neither the Supreme Court nor this court has recognized sexual orientation as a suspect classification [or protected group]; nevertheless, a state violates the Equal Protection Clause if it disadvantages homosexuals for reasons lacking any rational relationship to legitimate governmental aims.[25]

3. A Practical Example

To help you figure out how Lawrence v. Texas and Romer v. Evans can work together to protect LGBT rights in prison, it may be useful to briefly examine a past case about a lesbian prisoner, Doe v. Sparks,[26] which was decided before Lawrence and Romer and to analyze how it might have been decided differently if it had been decided after both Lawrence and Romer.

In Doe v. Sparks, a lesbian prisoner was denied a visitation by her girlfriend.[27] The prison claimed that allowing homosexual visitation could incite anti-gay violence in the prison. The prisoner tried to bring a

---

21. For further discussion of the federal Equal Protection Clause, see Part B(2)(g) of Chapter 16.
22. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 626–27, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1624–25, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 859 (1996).
23. Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 626–27, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1624–25, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 859 (1996).
24. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532 (5th Cir. 2004).
25. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532 (5th Cir. 2004).
26. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227 (W.D. Pa. 1990).
27. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

federal equal protection claim, saying that she was being unfairly targeted for being gay, and that the prison's reasons for denying her girlfriend's visit were not rationally related to a legitimate government purpose. The court, in considering the prisoner's claim, acknowledged that "the Equal Protection Clause dictates equal administration of rights and privileges, such as visitation, between similarly situated persons."[28]

Still, the court went on to decide that denying homosexuals visitation rights was not a violation of the federal Equal Protection Clause. The court determined that Bowers v. Hardwick prevented LGBT people from being treated as a "class" for equal protection purposes. The court also found that any group that is defined by sexual preference could not bring an equal protection claim.[29]

This case may have been decided differently under Romer v. Evans and Lawrence v. Texas. In Doe, the Court relied on Bowers v. Hardwick to conclude that since homosexual acts were not protected activities, homosexuals could not bring an equal protection claim based upon their sexual orientation. After Romer, a court hearing a case identical to Doe would instead analyze the visitation policy as an equal protection claim using the rational basis review test, and might be more likely to inquire more thoroughly into the government purpose served by the policy. In addition, since Lawrence overruled Bowers and held that homosexual conduct is entitled to some protection, the prisoner would have a better chance today of bringing a claim based upon her right to privacy, although as we saw in Willson v. Buss,[30] not all homosexual conduct or activity is protected in the prison context, even after Lawrence.

Thus, after Lawrence, the prisoner in Doe might now have a much stronger claim that the policy discriminated against her due to her homosexuality and interfered with her right to privacy.[31]

C. Unequal Treatment Because of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity

1. Equal Protection

The Equal Protection Clause prohibits the government from treating different classes of people differently unless there is a sufficiently legitimate purpose for doing so.[32] If you believe that benefits are being withheld from you and that they are not being withheld from heterosexual prisoners, you may bring a Section 1983 claim against the prison or prison officials for violation of your equal protection rights. To do this successfully, you must convince the court that (1) "similarly situated" prisoners are treated differently by the prison; and (2) the difference between their treatment and your treatment is not justified by being somehow rationally related to a legitimate penological (prison-related) interest. In other words, the prison rule or policy that results in your being treated differently must have a common-sense connection to a valid goal or concern of the prison. For a more thorough discussion of equal protection claims, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law."

When faced with claims by LGBT prisoners that they are being treated differently than heterosexual prisoners, prisons have often tried to justify their actions by claiming that different treatment is necessary to protect LGBT prisoners, who are often more vulnerable to attack than other prisoners. For instance, two cases in the Sixth Circuit involved LGBT prisoners who, having been denied the opportunity to participate in religious services while in prison, brought suit under Section 1983 for a violation of their First Amendment rights. In both cases, the prison argued that because the LGBT prisoner was vulnerable to attack, his participation in the services posed a security risk. The restriction on the prisoner's First

---

28. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 231 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

29. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 232 (W.D. Pa. 1990) ("We hold that conduct which is not in itself protected by substantive due process, natural right, or some source of substantive protection cannot be the basis of an equal protection challenge by the class which engages in the conduct."). However, it should be noted that the court did hold that under Pennsylvania state law, homosexuals could not be discriminated against and thus struck down the visitation policy. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 232–34 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

30. Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 786 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (finding that the right to homosexual relationships does not extend to all contexts, specifically the receipt of homosexual magazines by prisoners).

31. For further discussion on how Doe might be decided today, see Derrick Farrell, Crime and Punishment Law Chapter: Correctional Facilities: Prisoners' Visitation Rights, The Effect of Overton v. Bazetta and Lawrence v. Texas, 5 Geo. J. Gender & L. 167, at 173–74 (2004); Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women's Rights L. Rep. 357, at 384–404 (2009).

32. U.S. Const. amend. XIV.

Amendment rights, the prison argued, served the valid penological interest of prison security and so was justified.[33]

Several LGBT prisoners have, with some success, sued prison officials, claiming they were terminated from their prison jobs because they are LGBT. For instance, in Holmes v. Artuz, a federal court in New York noted that a gay prisoner who alleged he was removed from his food service prison job may have stated a claim under Section 1983 for violation of his equal protection rights.[34] The court did not decide whether the equal protection guarantee of the Constitution had been violated because the plaintiff, appearing without counsel, had not presented enough information on which to base that decision.[35] However, the court was clearly sympathetic to the prisoner's claim, and the opinion contains strong language indicating that the state would have to show, rather than merely assert, that its decision was rationally related to the state's interest in maintaining security.[36]

2. Sex Discrimination

Although your chances of prevailing on an equal protection claim may have increased substantially after Lawrence v. Texas and Romer v. Evans, you might also have a chance of prevailing if you state your grievance in terms of sex discrimination as opposed to sexual orientation discrimination.[37] Title VII of the 33. Brown v. Johnson, 743 F.2d 408, 412–13 (6th Cir. 1984) (holding a prison's total ban on group worship services by a church for gay people was reasonably related to the state interest in maintaining internal security in the prison); but see Phelps v. Dunn, 965 F.2d 93, 100 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that a genuine issue of material fact existed as to whether a gay prisoner alleging he was denied permission to attend religious services was in fact so denied, and whether he posed a security risk because he was gay); see also Harper v. Wallingford, 877 F.2d 728, 733 (9th Cir. 1989) (affirming summary judgment for defendant prison because allowing plaintiff prisoner to receive mailings from North American Man/Boy Love Association would make him a likely victim of inmate violence); Star v. Gramley, 815 F. Supp. 276, 278–79 (C.D. Ill. 1993) (granting summary judgment to prison that refused to allow a prisoner in a men's facility to wear dresses and skirts because it could pose a security threat by promoting or provoking sexual activity or assault).

---

34. Holmes v. Artuz, No. 95 Civ. 2309 (SS), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15926, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 1995) (unpublished); but see Counce v. Kemna, No. 02-6065-CV-SJ-HFS-P, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4021, at *9–10 (W.D. Mo. Mar. 8, 2005) (unpublished) (granting defendant prison officials qualified immunity in case where plaintiff alleged job discrimination based on his sexual orientation).

35. The plaintiff was granted leave to replead (plead again). Holmes v. Artuz, No. 95 Civ. 2309 (SS), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15926, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 1995) (unpublished).

36. The Holmes court reasoned as follows:

> Defendants argue that "the decision to reassign plaintiff from his job in food service is rationally related to a legitimate state interest in preserving order in the correction facility mess hall (sic)." However, defendants proffer no explanation of what this "rational relationship" might be. A person's sexual orientation, standing alone, does not reasonably, rationally or self-evidently implicate mess hall security concerns. It is not sufficient to assert, as defendants do in their motion papers, that the prison's exclusionary policy is designed to prevent "potential disciplinary and security problems which could arise from heterosexual inmates' reaction to and interaction with homosexual and/or transsexual inmates who serve and prepare food" in the mess hall. Defendants as yet have offered no evidence that these alleged disciplinary and security problems are real threats to prison life, or that the exclusionary policy is a rational response to such threats if they do exist.

Holmes v. Artuz, No. 95 Civ. 2309 (SS), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15926, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 1995) (unpublished) (citations omitted); see also Johnson v. Knable, decision reported at 862 F.2d 314 (4th Cir. 1988), opinion reported in full at No. 88-7729, 1988 WL 119136, at *1 (4th Cir. Oct. 31, 1988) (unpublished) (vacating lower court's summary judgment dismissal of an equal protection claim brought by a gay prisoner after he was allegedly denied a job in the prison's education department because he was gay, and remanding for further proceedings, noting that "[i]f [the plaintiff] was denied a prison work assignment simply because of his sexual orientation, his equal protection rights may have been violated"); Kelley v. Vaughn, 760 F. Supp. 161, 163–64 (W.D. Mo. 1991) (denying defendant's motion to dismiss on the ground that a gay prisoner, bringing an action against the correctional center's food service manager to challenge his removal from his job as bakery worker, might have a valid equal protection claim); Howard v. Cherish, 575 F. Supp. 34, 36 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (stating, although it was not the case in the facts before the court, that a gay prisoner who claimed he was punished because he was gay would have a claim under § 1983 if he had shown evidence in his claim that he was discriminated against solely because of his sexual preferences); but see Fuller v. Rich, 925 F. Supp. 459, 463 (N.D. Tex. 1995) (finding that mistaken rumors that a gay prisoner was HIV-positive were enough to raise a legitimate safety concern that justified firing him from food handling job).

37. There is only one known case that has used a sex discrimination theory in the prisoner context. See Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1200–02 (9th Cir. 2000) (discussing claim that attack by prison guard was at least in part due to sex discrimination, as guard was not interested in prisoner sexually until his discovery of her "true" sex). It is difficult to predict, then, how courts would respond, and you should be mindful of the consequences under the Prison Litigation Reform Act of filing claims deemed frivolous by the court. See Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation

Civil Rights Act of 1964 creates a federal cause of action for "discrimination because of ... sex,"[38] and has been held to prohibit sex discrimination against both men and women.[39] Sex discrimination is discrimination that occurs based on whether you are a man or a woman and does not directly cover sexual orientation or sexual preference discrimination. But, LGBT persons are sometimes able to use a theory of "sex-stereotyping" to argue they have suffered from sex discrimination. This is useful because courts subject laws and policies that treat people differently according to their sex to "intermediate scrutiny." Intermediate scrutiny is a higher level of scrutiny than "rational basis scrutiny," which is the test applied to claims of discrimination for sexual orientation. Intermediate scrutiny requires the prisoner to show a substantial relationship between a prison rule and a legitimate goal of the prison to justify a sex-based classification.[40]

Sex-stereotyping claims cover claims of discrimination against people for not conforming to the expected behavior of their sex. The Supreme Court recognized this cause of action in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, finding sex discrimination when an accounting firm told an employee she had to "walk, talk, and dress more femininely, style her hair, and wear make-up and jewelry" to get a promotion.[41] This case is particularly useful for transgender prisoners who suffer from discrimination in prison. For many years, courts have been unsympathetic to transgender plaintiffs, particularly in prisons. But, several cases have held that Price Waterhouse protects transgender people and overrules previous decisions, like Ulane v. Eastern Airlines, Inc.,[42] which denied transgender people protection under Title VII and similar sex discrimination laws.[43]

Sex-stereotyping can also be used by lesbian, gay, and bisexual people in making discrimination claims. For example, if you are a gay man and you believe you were fired from your prison job because you are gay, you could argue that you are a man who desires male sexual partners and therefore you were fired, where a female prisoner who desired male sexual partners (and who is thus similarly situated to you) would not have been fired.[44] By framing the argument in this way, you can perhaps get the court to be more rigorous in its review of the prison officials' actions.

Reform Act."

38. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) (2000). Numerous state statutes also prohibit sex discrimination; some apply the same standard as Title VII, while others define discrimination more broadly.

39. See, e.g., Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Servs. 523 U.S. 75, 78, 118 S. Ct. 998, 1001, 140 L. Ed. 2d 201, 206 (1998); Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. v. EEOC, 462 U.S. 669, 682, 103 S. Ct. 2622, 2630, 77 L. Ed. 2d 89, 101 (1983).

40. See JLM, Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law."

41. Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 235, 109 S. Ct. 1175, 1782, 104 L. Ed. 2d 268, 278 (1989).

42. Ulane v. Eastern Airlines, Inc., 742 F.2d 1081, 1084-1085 (7th Cir. 1984) (construing "sex" in Title VII narrowly to mean only anatomical sex rather than gender); see also Holloway v. Arthur Andersen, 566 F.2d 659, 661 (9th Cir. 1977) (affirming trial court decision "that Title VII does not embrace transsexual discrimination").

43. See Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1201 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding Price Waterhouse's logic overruled "the initial judicial approach" in cases like Holloway); Smith v. City of Salem, Ohio, 378 F.3d 566, 573 (6th Cir. 2004) ("It is true that, in the past, federal appellate courts regarded Title VII as barring discrimination based only on 'sex' (referring to an individual's anatomical and biological characteristics), but not on 'gender' (referring to socially-constructed norms associated with a person's sex) ... However, [this] approach ... has been eviscerated by Price Waterhouse."); Schroer v. Billington, 525 F. Supp. 2d 58, 63 (D.D.C. 2007) ("Title VII is violated when an employer discriminates against any employee, transsexual or not, because he or she has failed to act or appear sufficiently masculine or feminine enough for an employer."); Mitchell v. Axcan Scandipharm, Inc., No. 05-243, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6521, at *3 (W.D. Pa. Feb. 17, 2006) (unpublished) ("Plaintiff claims that he was fired because he began to present as a female. He claims that he was the victim of discrimination and a hostile work environment created by defendant due to plaintiff's appearance and gender-related behavior. These allegations, if true, state a claim under Title VII."); Kastl v. Maricopa County Cmty. College Dist., No. 02-1531-PHX-SRB, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29825, at *7 (D. Ariz. June 3, 2004) (unpublished) (finding plaintiff's allegation that she was required to use the men's restroom stated a claim under Title VII where plaintiff was a biological female born with male genitalia); Tronetti v. TLC Healthnet Lakeshore Hosp., No. 03-CV-0375E(Sc), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23757, at *12 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2003) (unpublished) ("This Court is not bound by the Ulane decisions. More importantly, the Ulane decisions predate the Supreme Court's decision in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 109 S. Ct. 1775, 104 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1989), which undermined the reasoning of the Ulane decisions."); but see Etsitty v. Utah Transit Auth., No. 2:04CV616 DS, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12634, at *10–12 (D. Utah June 24, 2005) ("The Price Waterhouse prohibition against sex stereotyping should not be applied to transsexuals … [because] there is a huge difference between a woman who does not behave as femininely as her employer thinks she should, and a man who is attempting to change his sex and appearance to be a woman. Such drastic action cannot be fairly characterized as a mere failure to conform to stereotypes.").

44. See Rosa v. Park West Bank & Trust Co., 214 F.3d 213, 214–15 (1st Cir. 2000) (holding that it was possible that a bank that refused a loan application made by a man wearing a dress until he went home and changed into "male

3. State Laws

Many state laws (and constitutions) provide greater protection to LGBT people than the federal Constitution does, as interpreted by the courts. Examples are the Minnesota State Constitution[45] and California's Unruh Civil Rights Act.[46] You should research your state's laws to find out if you could have a stronger statutory claim under those laws than the constitutional claims (discussed in the above two subsections) you could make. If you are in a state with LGBT-friendly statutes, you can bring a claim under a state statute as a "pendent claim" (supplemental to your Section 1983 claim) in federal court, or you can bring the state claim alone in state court. Also, sometimes state laws have been used by courts to determine what constitutes a violation of the federal Equal Protection Clause.[47]

D. Jury Bias

The Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution guarantees defendants the right to trial by a fair and impartial jury in all criminal prosecutions.[48] If you suspect that homophobic or transphobic attitudes among the jurors who delivered the guilty verdict against you prevented them from making an impartial decision about your conviction, you may have grounds to challenge your conviction.[49]

Your right to a fair and impartial jury is supposed to be protected by a process called "voir dire." Voir dire happens before the trial begins. During voir dire, prospective jurors are asked questions so that the judge and the lawyers can learn more about them. Usually the judge asks the questions, although in some jurisdictions the lawyers also ask questions, and in many jurisdictions the lawyers are allowed to submit questions to the judge. Generally, the lawyers from each side are permitted to "strike," or exclude, jurors based on their answers to the questions. The lawyers have an unlimited opportunity to exclude jurors "for cause," which means they can exclude those whom they believe to be biased. The judge, too, has an obligation to exclude any prospective juror she believes to be biased.[50]

You might have a claim that your right to trial by an impartial jury was violated if:

(1) The court failed or refused to question jurors during voir dire about their attitudes towards gay or transgender people, and your sexual orientation or gender identity was raised at trial;[51]
(2) The court selected a juror even though that juror had indicated that, due to his homophobia or transphobia, he would have trouble being impartial[52]; or attire" had engaged in sex discrimination because it likely would not have refused a loan application to a woman wearing a dress); Baehr v. Lewin, 852 P.2d 44, 82, 74 Haw. 530, 580 (Haw. 1993) (holding that a state statute restricting the marital relation to one man and one woman should be subjected to strict scrutiny under the equal protection clause of the state constitution because it made a sex-based classification).

---

45. Minn. Const. art. I, § 2.

46. Cal. Civ. Code § 51 (2007).

47. See Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 232 (W.D. Pa. 1990) (finding that even though federal law allowed discrimination based on sexual activity, Pennsylvania State law did not, and Pennsylvania law could be used to evaluate the decision to bar a lesbian partner from visitation).

48. See Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 721–22, 81 S. Ct. 1639, 1641–42, 6 L. Ed. 2d 751, 755–56 (1961).

49. There is evidence that lesbians are more likely to be convicted than heterosexual women, perhaps indicating that jurors' homophobia regularly plays an inappropriate role in their decision processes. Lesbians also serve longer sentences than heterosexual women. Ruthann Robson, Sappho Goes to Law School 36 (1998).

50. In New York, a prosecuting attorney or a judge may not assume that a gay juror will be biased in favor of other homosexuals involved in the trial. So, simply the fact that both a defendant and a juror are gay should not be "cause" for dismissing the juror. See People v. Viggiani, 105 Misc. 2d 210, 214, 431 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982 (N.Y. Crim. Ct. N.Y. County 1980) ("To say that this entire group of citizens who may be otherwise qualified, would be unable to sit as impartial jurors in this case merely because of their homosexuality, is tantamount to a denial of equal protection under the United States Constitution.").

51. In conducting voir dire, the trial court judge is required to permit at least some questioning with respect to any material issue that may actually or potentially arise at trial. Aldridge v. United States, 283 U.S. 308, 311–13, 51 S. Ct. 470, 472, 75 L. Ed. 1054, 1056–57 (1931) (finding voir dire unfair where trial judge "failed to ask any question which could be deemed to cover the subject," in order to uncover a "disqualifying state of mind," in this instance, racial prejudice). The standard of review of jury voir dire is that the trial court's discretion must be exercised consistently with "the essential demands of fairness." Aldridge v. United States, 283 U.S. 308, 310, 51 S. Ct. 470, 471, 75 L. Ed. 1054, 1056 (1931). Nevertheless, the trial court is given wide latitude to determine how best to conduct the voir dire, and failure to ask specific questions is reversed only for abuse of this discretion. Rosales-Lopez v. United States, 451 U.S. 182, 190–91, 101 S. Ct. 1629, 1635–36, 68 L. Ed. 2d 22, 29–30 (1981).

52. See State v. Johnson, 706 So. 2d 468, 477–78 (La. Ct. App. 1998) (finding that it was proper to release one

(3) The prosecutor conducting the voir dire excluded all the gay or transgender people from the pool of prospective jurors because they were gay or transgender.[53]

A handful of prisoners have challenged their sentences or convictions for alleged anti-gay jury bias, with limited success. For example, in Owens v. Hanks, a Seventh Circuit case, a gay prisoner whose sexual orientation was raised in testimony during his murder trial petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus, contending, among other things, that he was denied an impartial jury because the court chose several jurors who had expressed their bias against gay people during jury selection.[54] The court found that these expressions of juror bias did not make his trial unfair because there was testimony at trial that witnesses for both the prosecution and the defense were gay, and so any prejudice on the part of the jurors regarding sexuality affected both parties.[55] If both parties are not affected, such a claim might be more likely to succeed.

On the other hand, a New Jersey court reversed the conviction of a defendant on appeal, finding that the trial court had deprived him of his fundamental right to be present during an individual voir dire from which spectators were excluded. At the voir dire, questions were asked about prospective jurors' attitudes toward homosexuality. The defendant had expressly requested to be present.[56] The court held that "[s]ince ... the evidence suggested that defendant was bisexual because he was a frequent patron of gay bars, it was important that defendant be present so that he could have formed his own impressions of the jurors' demeanor and visceral reactions when they responded to the questions about homosexuality."[57]

Though the case law is sparse, some cases indicate you might be granted a retrial if homosexuals were purposefully excluded from the jury. In People v. Viggiani, a New York state case, the court decided jurors could not be excluded from a jury "for cause" merely because they had a same-sex orientation and so did a participant in the trial.[58] The California Court of Appeals ruled in People v. Garcia that the prosecution could not use its peremptory challenges to exclude all lesbians from a jury. It found that homosexuals juror for anti-gay bias but improper to release a second juror, who claimed that if he knew defendant was gay he would "almost automatically" convict, because the second was merely parroting the released juror in an attempt to get out of jury duty and was therefore not actually biased).

---

53. Some courts have ruled that jurors cannot be removed "for cause" from a jury just for being gay. See, e.g., People v. Viggiani, 105 Misc. 2d 210, 214, 431 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982 (N.Y. Crim. Ct. N.Y. County 1980) ("To say that [citizens] who may be otherwise qualified, would be unable to sit as impartial jurors in this case, merely because of their homosexuality is tantamount to a denial of equal protection under the United States Constitution."). Other courts have ruled that homosexuals may constitute a "class" of individuals that may not be entirely excluded from a jury. See, e.g., People v. Garcia, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339, 343–44, 77 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1275–77 (Cal. Ct. App. 2000) (holding that "exclusion of lesbians and gay men [from the jury pool] on the basis of group bias violates the California Constitution").

54. For example, one impaneled juror stated at voir dire that "she would unwittingly be influenced by a witness' homosexuality because she believe[d] it [was] morally wrong." Owens v. Hanks, No. 96-1124, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 15465, at *3 (7th Cir. June 25, 1996) (unpublished). Another stated that she did not approve of homosexuality and "would be less likely to believe a homosexual." Owens v. Hanks, No. 96-1124, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 15465, at *3 (7th Cir. June 25, 1996) (unpublished). Please note, however, that Owens v. Hanks is an unpublished opinion and therefore may not be an acceptable case to cite in some jurisdictions.

55. Owens v. Hanks, No. 96-1124, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 15465, at *5–6 (7th Cir. June 25, 1996) (unpublished); see also Lingar v. Bowersox, 176 F.3d 453, 457–59 (8th Cir. 1999) (finding the admission of testimony that defendant was gay during the penalty phase of his trial for murder was harmless and did not contribute to the jury's finding, because it was brief and because the State did not refer to it during closing argument); United States v. Click, 807 F.2d 847, 850 (9th Cir. 1987) (finding refusal by trial court to ask questions of prospective jurors during voir dire to determine if they harbored bias against gay people did not amount to an abuse of discretion and that the proposed evidence was irrelevant, where trial judge had believed such questions would "unnecessarily call attention to [the defendant's] effeminate mannerisms"); State v. Lambert, 528 A.2d 890, 892 (Me. 1987) (finding no abuse of discretion where "questions concerning a personal involvement with sexual abuse, presumably including sexual abuse by a homosexual, were asked of the potential jurors in [a] confidential questionnaire," and "additional questions asked [to jurors en masse] did not contain a potential for such undue embarrassment to a potential juror as to require individual voir dire").

56. State v. Dishon, 687 A.2d 1074, 1082, 297 N.J. Super. 254, 269 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1997).

57. State v. Dishon, 687 A.2d 1074, 1082, 297 N.J. Super. 254, 269–70 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1997).

58. See People v. Viggiani, 105 Misc. 2d 210, 214, 431 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982 (N.Y. Crim. Ct. N.Y. County 1980) ("To say that this entire group of citizens who may be otherwise qualified, would be unable to sit as impartial jurors in this case merely because of their homosexuality, is tantamount to a denial of equal protection under the United States Constitution.").

constitute a "cognizable class" and that completely barring them from a jury violated the California constitution.[59]

Although it cannot be predicted with any certainty, the claim that LGBT individuals form a class that cannot be barred from jury service is probably stronger after Lawrence v. Texas. Before Lawrence, some courts ruled that homosexuals could be barred from jury service because they were presumptively criminals. Not only are homosexuals no longer presumptively criminal in any state, but Lawrence v. Texas and Romer v. Evans also call into question any government action that is backed by stereotypical beliefs about the inferiority of a class of people.

If you believe homophobic or transphobic bias played a role in the selection of your jury, you may be able to convince a court to vacate or reverse the judgment against you, or to set aside your sentence.

E. Your Right to Control Your Gender Presentation While in Prison

Transgender prisoners often have difficulty expressing their gender while in prison. These difficulties range from denial of access to gender-related medical care to denial of access to personal effects like clothes and cosmetics.

1. Access to Gender-Related Medical Care

Many transgender prisoners seek access to gender-related medical care while in prison. The most common requests are for hormone treatments and gender reassignment surgery. For general information about your right to adequate medical care while in prison, see Chapter 23 of the JLM.

(a) Access to Gender Reassignment Surgery

Courts generally do not require a prison to pay for or conduct any surgery, either genital or non-genital, related to a prisoner's gender identity or transition.[60] Some states have even gone so far as to legislate a prohibition on prisoner sex-reassignment surgery.[61] But, if you experience health complications as a result of a prior gender-related surgery, you are entitled to the medical care necessary to treat those complications.

(b) Access to Hormonal Treatment

The federal Bureau of Prisons' medical policy is to "maintain a transsexual [sic] inmate at the level of change existing upon admission."[62] Nevertheless, many federal and state prisons have refused to provide hormone treatment to transgender prisoners, even though the cost of hormone treatment does not necessarily exceed the costs of other routine medical treatments administered to the general prison population.[63] In addition, prisons may deny hormone treatments if you do not have a doctor's prescription to show that you were previously taking hormones.

If you were undergoing hormone therapy at the time you were incarcerated, and prison officials deny you access to the treatment while you are in prison, you can sue those officials for violation of your constitutional right to medical care. As you will see in the following subsections, the issue of whether a transgender person is entitled to hormone therapy while in prison has been litigated extensively. In most cases, courts have

---

59. People v. Garcia, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 339, 343–44, 77 Cal. App. 4th 1269, 1275–77 (Cal. Ct. App. 2000).

60. Darren Rosenblum, "Trapped" in Sing Sing: Transgendered Prisoners Caught in the Gender Binarism, 6 Mich. J. Gender & L. 499, 543 (2000); see also Lewis v. Berg, No. 9:00-CV-1433, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39571, at *22, *30 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 10, 2005) (unpublished) (finding it reasonable for prison grievance committee to deny prisoner's request for gender reassignment and cosmetic surgery and refer her back to medical personnel for other appropriate treatment).

61. See Inmate Sex Change Prevention Act, Wis. Stat. § 302.386(5m) (2007).

62. The Bureau's policy reads as follows:

> It is the policy of the [Bureau of Prisons] to maintain a transsexual inmate at the level of change existing upon admission. Should the Clinical Director determine that either progressive or regressive treatment changes are indicated, the Medical Director must approve these prior to implementation. The use of hormones to maintain secondary sexual characteristics may be continued at approximately the same levels as prior to incarceration (with appropriate documentation from community physicians/hospitals) and with the Medical Director's approval.

Farmer v. Moritsugu, 163 F.3d 610, 611–12 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (citing U.S. Dept. of Justice, Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 6000.04, Health Services Manual, ch. 15, § 4 (1994)).

63. Darren Rosenblum, "Trapped" in Sing Sing: Transgendered Prisoners Caught in the Gender Binarism, 6 Mich. J. Gender & L. 499, 546 (2000).

found for the prison officials, but recently several courts have required prisons to provide transgender prisoners with hormonal treatment as long as they were undergoing such treatment before entering prison.[64]

(i) Serious Medical Need and Deliberate Indifference

The Supreme Court established in Estelle v. Gamble that "deliberate indifference" to a prisoner's "serious medical needs" violates that prisoner's Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.[65]

Circuit courts have consistently considered "transsexualism," also known in this context as "gender dysphoria" or "gender identity disorder,"[66] a "serious medical need" for the purpose of the Estelle standard.[67] Many federal courts have held that transgender prisoners are therefore constitutionally entitled to some type of medical treatment for their condition. Nevertheless, most of these courts have held transgender prisoners do not have a constitutional right to any particular type of treatment, so long as they receive some kind of treatment, such as psychological counseling.[68] Under these rulings, prison officials do not violate the Eighth Amendment when, in the exercise of their professional judgment, they refuse to implement a prisoner's requested course of treatment.[69] Accordingly, most courts that have considered the question have

---

64. See Phillips v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 731 F. Supp. 792, 800–01 (W.D. Mich. 1990) (granting transgender prisoner's request for a preliminary injunction requiring prison officials to provide her with estrogen therapy where she had taken estrogen for the 16 years prior to incarceration); Gammett v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., No. CV05-257-S-MHW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55564 (D. Idaho July 27, 2007) (unpublished) (granting prisoner's request for a preliminary injunction to provide estrogen therapy but only after self-castration required the provision of some type of hormone). Because many prisons refuse to prescribe hormones to prisoners who do not have a previous doctor's prescription, prisoners who had been getting hormones through informal means may have an additional challenge in bringing suit.

65. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976). For general information about your right to adequate medical care while in prison, see Chapter 23 of the JLM.

66. Activists disagree as to whether or not characterizing transgender identities as medical conditions is strategically wise. On the one hand, it sometimes provides transgender people in and out of prison with access to gender-related medical treatment; on the other hand, these diagnoses often regulate gender expressions and may limit the ability of transgender people who are unable or choose not to access gender-related medical care to have their gender recognized. See, e.g., Dean Spade, *Resisting Medicine, Re/modeling Gende*r, 18 Berkeley Women's L.J. 15 (2003).

67. See, e.g., Cuoco v. Moritsugu, 222 F.3d 99, 106 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that inmate who claimed her constitutional rights were violated because she was denied estrogen treatments had a serious medical need as a transsexual); White v. Farrier, 849 F.2d 322, 325 (8th Cir. 1988) (finding that "transsexualism is a very complex medical and psychological problem" that constitutes a serious medical need); Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 413 (7th Cir. 1987) (finding a transgender prisoner who is entitled to some type of medical care had a serious medical need); Kosilek v. Maloney, 221 F. Supp. 2d 156, 162 (D. Mass. 2002) (holding plaintiff 's transgender healthcare was a serious medical need and prison officials were required to provide treatment, including psychotherapy with a professional experienced in treating gender identity disorder and potentially also including hormone therapy or gender reassignment surgery); but see Long v. Nix, 86 F.3d 761, 765 n.3 (8th Cir. 1996) (noting that court's holding in White that transgenderism is a "serious medical need" may be in doubt in light of Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994)).

68. See, e.g., Meriwether v. Faulker, 821 F.2d 408, 413 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding that a transgender prisoner is entitled to some type of medical treatment but has no constitutional right to any one particular type of treatment where another form of treatment is made available).

69. See De'Lonta v. Angelone, 330 F.3d 630, 635 (4th Cir. 2003) (finding prisoner with gender identify disorder was not entitled to continued hormone therapy, but was entitled to treatment for compulsion to self-mutilate after her hormone treatment was stopped); Long v. Nix, 86 F.3d 761, 765 (8th Cir. 1996) (holding a prison official was not deliberately indifferent for choosing a different course of treatment than the tranquilizers recommended by the prisoner's expert, where the prison medical staff tried to evaluate the prisoner's psychological condition and the prisoner failed to cooperate); White v. Farrier, 849 F.2d 322, 327 (8th Cir. 1988) (a different diagnosis by prison medical staff than by prisoner's experts does not itself establish deliberate indifference, since doctors are entitled to exercise their medical judgment; a prisoner is not entitled to hormone treatment if the prison instead decides to provide her with psychotherapy); Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 413 (7th Cir. 1987) (holding a transgender prisoner is entitled to some type of medical treatment but has no constitutional right to any one particular type of treatment); Supre v. Ricketts, 792 F.2d 958, 963 (10th Cir. 1986) (holding that prison officials are not required to administer estrogen to treat transsexuals because it is one of a variety of treatment options and there is no medical consensus that it is the best option; therefore a transsexual denied estrogen treatment may have a claim for medical malpractice, but not for deliberate indifference); Kosilek v. Maloney, 221 F. Supp. 2d 156, 162 (D. Mass. 2002) (holding that prison could deny transsexual prisoner hormones or sex reassignment surgery if it considered them too much of a security threat, but was required to provide at least some kind of treatment, such as psychotherapy); Madera v. Corr. Med. Sys., No. 90-1657, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11878, at *10 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 5, 1990) (unpublished) ("[T]here is no absolute constitutional right denied transgendered prisoners' requests for hormonal treatment while still upholding their right to medical care.[70]

Several more recent federal court decisions, however, suggest that courts are beginning to carve out a limited exception and recognize circumstances in which the provision of hormonal therapy by prisons should be mandatory. In Phillips v. Michigan Department of Corrections, for example, a Michigan federal court granted a preliminary injunction directing prison officials to provide estrogen therapy to a thirty-four-year-old transgender woman. The prisoner had been taking estrogen since she was a teenager and had been experiencing physical transformation and severe depression as a result of being prevented from continuing her estrogen treatment in prison.[71] The Phillips court held that denying hormonal treatment in this case caused "irreparable harm" and violated the Eighth Amendment:

> It is one thing to fail to provide an inmate with care that would improve his or her medical state, such as refusing sex reassignment surgery or to operate on a long-endured cyst. Taking measures which actually reverse the effects of years of healing medical treatment ... is measurably worse, making the cruel and unusual determination much easier.[72] to hormonal treatments for a transsexual any more than there is for any other specific therapy requested by a prisoner."); Farmer v. Carlson, 685 F. Supp. 1335, 1340 (M.D. Pa. 1988) (finding denial of plaintiff's estrogen medication did not stem from a deliberate indifference to her medical needs but instead resulted from an informed medical opinion, and therefore plaintiff did not have a legal claim of deliberate indifference); Lamb v. Mascher, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) (found for defendants who provided psychological treatment to a transgender prisoner but refused to provide hormones, stating, "the key question in this case is whether defendants have provided plaintiff with some type of treatment, regardless of whether it is what plaintiff desires"). The courts' refusal to recognize a specific right to hormone therapy, and the recognition instead of a broader right to medical care, has on at least one occasion prevented prison officials from avoiding liability by claiming qualified immunity. In a Ninth Circuit case, prison officials sued by a prisoner whose hormonal therapy they had terminated argued that because prisoners suffering from gender dysphoria have no clearly established right to female hormone therapy, the officers were entitled to qualified immunity. The Ninth Circuit rejected the officials' claim, holding that "with respect to prisoner medical claims, the right at issue should be defined as a prisoner's 8th Amendment right 'to officials who are not deliberately indifferent to serious medical needs,'" and not as a right to something more specific. South v. Gomez, decision reported at 211 F.3d 1275 (9th Cir. 2000), opinion reported in full at No. 99-15976, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 3200, at *4 (9th Cir. Feb. 25, 2000) (unpublished). See Chapter 16 of the JLM for an explanation of qualified immunity and other defenses to § 1983 suits.

---

70. In Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 671–72 (7th Cir. 1997), a court recognized what these other courts have not: that, at least sometimes, no treatment other than hormone therapy will be effective for transsexual prisoners. Nevertheless, the Maggert court held prisons should not be required to provide hormonal therapy—not because other treatments would work, but because such therapy exceeds the minimal treatment prisons are required to provide. Though a prison is required by the 8th Amendment to provide a prisoner with medical care, it need not provide care as good as the prisoner would receive if he were a free person; prisoners are entitled only to minimum care. Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 671–72 (7th Cir. 1997) (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992)). The Maggert court reasoned that because neither public nor private health insurance programs typically pay for sex reassignment, it would be inaccessible to most transgender prisoners even if they were not in prison. "Making the treatment a constitutional duty of prisons would give prisoners a degree of medical care that they could not obtain if they obeyed the law. ... [This would lead to] transsexuals committing crimes because it is the only route to obtaining a cure." Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 672 (7th Cir. 1997). See also Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (assuming that transsexualism is a serious medical need, the denial of hormone therapy was not deliberate indifference because of the length of the plaintiff's term, the prison's inability to perform sex change operations, the lack of medical necessity for the hormone, and the disruption to all-male prisons).

71. Phillips v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 731 F. Supp. 792 (W.D. Mich. 1990).

72. Phillips v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 731 F. Supp. 792, 800 (W.D. Mich. 1990); see also De'Lonta v. Angelone, 330 F.3d 630, 634 (4th Cir. 2003) (holding that termination of a transgender prisoner's hormone treatment could constitute deliberate indifference where such treatment was terminated because of prison policy rather than because of medical judgment); South v. Gomez, decision reported at 211 F.3d 1275 (9th Cir. 2000), opinion reported in full at No. 99-15976, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 3200, at *5–6 (9th Cir. Feb. 25, 2000) (unpublished) (distinguishing between failing to provide hormonal therapy in the first instance and abruptly terminating an existing prescription; when a prisoner was already receiving hormones at the time of her transfer to a prison, it was a violation of her 8th Amendment rights for that prison to halt all hormone treatment at once rather than end it gradually); Wolfe v. Horn, 130 F. Supp. 2d 648, 653 (E.D. Pa. 2001) (ruling that where a prison doctor discontinued a patient's hormone treatment that she had been receiving for almost a year, there was "at least a fact question as to whether each of the defendants was deliberately indifferent to treating [the plaintiff's] gender identity disorder"). The Wolfe court found that, while it may be defensible for a prison to reject demands for hormonal therapy by transgender prisoners who did not take hormones outside of the prison setting,

A recent New York district court case is especially encouraging, as it found a prison denying a transgender prisoner hormone therapy violated the Eighth Amendment. In Brooks v. Berg, the plaintiff only began to officially identify himself as a transgender person while in prison and so was not using hormonal therapy when he entered prison. The court therefore did away with other courts' distinction between prisoners already using hormone therapy at the time of entry into prison and those seeking to start hormone therapy after entry into prison.[73]

Despite these encouraging developments in a few federal courts, courts in many other jurisdictions have continued to deny claims by transgender prisoners for hormonal treatment.[74] Prisoners who are unable to demonstrate that they previously received hormone treatment before incarceration face an uphill battle. For example, in Brown v. Zavaras, the court held that estrogen treatment specifically was not necessary because the plaintiff had not received such treatment prior to incarceration.[75] Nevertheless, receiving hormone therapy prior to incarceration does not guarantee access to similar treatment while incarcerated.[76] Recent cases indicate that the original determination made by prison medical personnel, rather than prior treatment history, will be given the greatest weight by the courts.[77]

2. Access to Personal Items Associated with Gender Identity

Clothing, cosmetics, jewelry, and personal care products are often significant components of a person's gender presentation. Prisons vary as to whether they permit prisoners to access the clothing of their choice and other personal items.[78] Prisoners have challenged prison policies that deny them access to certain kinds of clothing and products, as well as specific refusals of prison staff to provide them with such property, under Section 1983. In both situations, prisoners allege that the prison policies and refusals violate their constitutional rights. These challenges have been largely unsuccessful, however, because courts show significant deference to prison officials' decisions about how to oversee daily life in prison.

---

the case is different when prison officials terminate medical treatment that was previously recommended and administered by a medical professional outside of the prison.

73. Brooks v. Berg, 270 F. Supp. 2d 302, 312 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (finding an 8th Amendment violation where prisoner was not permitted to begin hormonal therapy while in prison; the court reasoned that the "prison policy … makes a seemingly arbitrary distinction between inmates who were and were not diagnosed with GID prior to incarceration," rather than a distinction based on medical judgment). Defendants also admitted that the New York Department of Correctional Services' policy did not prevent a prisoner who was first diagnosed with gender dysphoria while incarcerated from potentially receiving hormone replacement treatments.

74. See, e.g., Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding that denial of hormone therapy and sex change operation does not constitute deliberate indifference when the prison's medical director found no medical necessity for such treatment and the prison was unable to perform a sex change operation); Farmer v. Moritsugu, 163 F.3d 610, 615 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (denying prisoner's claim against the medical director of the Bureau of Prisons because he was not in a position to diagnose and treat individual patients); Maggert v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 672 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that prisons are not required to provide hormone therapy because it is unnecessary and expensive, and because gender dysphoria is not a serious enough condition).

75. Brown v. Zavaras, 63 F.3d 967, 970 n.2 (10th Cir. 1995).

76. See, e.g., Stevens v. Williams, No. CV-05-1790-ST, 2008 WL 916991, at *12–13 (D. Or. Mar. 27, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that prisoner, who had received hormone therapy in the past, had previously and unsuccessfully litigated his denial of continued hormone therapy while in prison and therefore was barred from relitigating this claim in federal court); Scribner v. Surapaneni, No. 1:05-CV-642, 2006 WL 3761976, at *5 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 21, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that despite prisoner's prior hormone therapy treatment, including treatment while incarcerated, he was not entitled to continued treatment after treating physician found that sex-reassignment surgery was highly unlikely and that the prisoner's age increased concerns about the negative side effects of continued treatment).

77. See, e.g., Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Criminal Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (deferring to treating physician's recommendations).

78. See, e.g., Tates v. Blanas, CIV S-00-2539, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26029, at *31 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 11, 2003) (unpublished) (rejecting a categorical rule that denies a prisoner a bra simply because he is a transgender or is housed in a men's ward; the possibility that the bra could be misused as a weapon or noose must be balanced against any medical or psychological harm resulting from denial of a bra); Lucrecia v. Samples, No. C-93-3651-VRW, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15607, at *1–2, *15–16 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 1995) (unpublished) (noting that transgender prisoner was permitted access to "female clothing and amenities" in one prison, but denying relief for second facility's refusal of permission to wear female undergarments because of significant penological interests and lack of demonstration that wearing the female undergarments was a medical necessity).

Claims under the First Amendment generally fail in the face of arguments by prisons that restrictions on dress, jewelry, and makeup are justified by legitimate penological interests.[79] Several courts have noted that such deprivations are simply not of a constitutional nature.[80]

As one court stated:

> "Because routine discomfort is part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society, only those deprivations denying the minimal civilized measures of life's necessities are sufficiently grave to form the basis of an Eighth Amendment violation." ... Cosmetic products are not among the minimal civilized measure of life's necessities.[81]

Additionally, courts have held that different grooming regulations for male and female prisoners do not trigger a prisoner's equal protection rights.[82]

F. Your Right to Confidentiality Regarding Your Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity

If you are an LGBT prisoner, you may not have disclosed your sexual orientation or transgender status to fellow prisoners. The disclosure by a prison official of your sexual orientation or gender identity could subject you to harassment or abuse by other officials or fellow prisoners. If a prison official has told others that you are gay, lesbian, transgender, or bisexual, you might have a claim under Section 1983 that the official violated your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment and/or your right to privacy under the Fourteenth Amendment.

1. Disclosure of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity as an Eighth Amendment Violation

(a) Sexual Orientation

One case specifically addresses a prisoner's Eighth Amendment right to be free from disclosure of his or her sexual orientation. Thomas v. District of Columbia involved a corrections officer at the Maximum Security Facility in Lorton, Virginia, who allegedly sexually harassed a prisoner and spread rumors that the prisoner was gay and a "snitch."[83] As a result of these rumors, the prisoner claimed he suffered emotional

---

79. See, e.g., Star v. Gramley, 815 F. Supp. 276, 278–79 (C.D. Ill. 1993) (holding that restrictions on clothing prisoners can wear are reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest and hence do not violate the 1st Amendment; allowing prison to prevent a prisoner from wearing women's makeup and apparel on the ground that the prisoner would be more vulnerable to attack if he dressed that way); Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) (denying request by transgender prisoner for cosmetics and female clothing, and holding that "prison authorities must have the discretion to decide what clothing will be tolerated in a male prison"); Ahkeen v. Parker, No. 02A01-9812-CV-00349, 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 14, at *25 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 10, 2000) (unpublished) (upholding prison policy denying men the right to wear earrings, which was challenged on equal protection grounds, because by discouraging transsexual dressing the policy discouraged sexual assaults); s*ee also* Claybrooks v. Tennessee Dept. of Corr., No. 98-6271, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15174, at * 3 (6th Cir. July 6, 1999) (unpublished) (affirming lower court's dismissal of transgender prisoner's § 1983 claim for denial of female clothing, not on constitutional grounds, but on the grounds that the Tennessee Department of Corrections is immune from suit in federal court under the 11th Amendment because it is a state agency and the state has not waived immunity).

80. Remember that in order to bring a successful § 1983 claim, you must allege a violation of a federal constitutional or statutory right. See Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) (failing to be "convinced that a denial of female clothing and cosmetics is a constitutional violation"); Ahkeen v. Parker, No. 02A01-9812-CV-00349, 2000 Tenn. App. LEXIS 14, at *22 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 10, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that confiscation of the prisoner's earrings by prison officials did not violate the prisoner's privacy rights, as "loss of freedom of choice and privacy are inherent incidents of confinement" (quoting Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 528, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 404 (1984))); Murray v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 95-5204, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 1716, at *7–8 (6th Cir. Jan. 28, 1997) (unpublished) (holding that denial of access to hair and skin products that transgender prisoner claimed were necessary for her to maintain a feminine appearance did not state a constitutional claim).

81. Murray v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 95-5204, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 1716, at *7–8 (6th Cir. Jan. 28, 1997) (unpublished) (quoting Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992)).

82. See, e.g., Hill v. Estelle, 537 F.2d 214, 215–16 (5th Cir. 1976) (holding that difference in application of state prison regulations, in failing to enforce hair length regulations against female prisoners, impinged on no fundamental right, created no suspect classification, and did not constitute violation of equal protection); Poe v. Werner, 386 F. Supp. 1014, 1019 (M.D. Pa. 1974) (holding that state prison hair length regulation does not violate the Equal Protection Clause, even though it does restrict female hair length or style).

83. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 3 (D.D.C. 1995). See also Montero v. Crusie, 153 F. Supp. 2d distress and feared for his safety when confronted and threatened with bodily harm by other prisoners. The prisoner sued the corrections officer under Section 1983, claiming the officer had violated his Eighth Amendment rights, and the officer moved to dismiss the complaint.[84]

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia found that the prisoner had stated a valid Eighth Amendment claim against the officer.[85] The court held that the officer's "alleged conduct, the physical harm with which [the prisoner] was threatened, and the psychic injuries that are alleged to have resulted from such unnecessary, cruel, and outrageous conduct, are sufficiently harmful to make out an Eighth Amendment excessive force claim."[86]

The rumors about the prisoner's homosexuality were just one part of the abuse the officer allegedly visited on the prisoner, and it is impossible to know whether in the absence of the other allegations the court would have reached the same conclusion. However, there is language in Thomas that, when read in the context of other Section 1983 cases, could be useful to prisoners bringing suits against prison officials who have revealed their sexual orientation or gender identity to other prisoners.

(b) Gender Identity

If you are a transgender prisoner, you might have a stronger desire for privacy when bathing and changing clothes than traditionally gendered prisoners. If this is not provided, you may bring a claim against the prison for violating your privacy and/or Eighth Amendment rights. The court will balance your interests against the prison's interest in security and will usually find in favor of the prison.[87]

2. Disclosure of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity as Fourteenth Amendment Violation

The Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees the right to privacy regarding disclosure of certain personal information.[88] These holdings come out of a Supreme Court tradition of finding a general right to privacy in the Constitution that protects certain intimate matters.[89] Further, many other courts have also found that a constitutional right of privacy protects against disclosure of some kinds of personal information.[90] If a prison official discloses private 368, 376–77 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (denying summary judgment for correctional officers who spread rumor that prisoner was gay and tried to incite fight between him and other prisoners).

84. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 3 (D.D.C. 1995).

85. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 5 (D.D.C. 1995) (denying the defendant's motion to dismiss and allowing the case to go to trial).

86. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 1995).

87. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527–28, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200–01, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 403–04 (1984) (holding that a prisoner's expectation of privacy always yields to what must be considered the paramount interest in institutional security). See, e.g., Pollock v. Brigano, 130 Ohio App. 3d 505, 511–12, 720 N.E.2d 571, 576 (Ohio App. 1998) (relying on Hudson v. Palmer to hold that "privacy concerns" of transgender prisoner who was forced to shower, change clothes, and use the toilet in front of other prisoners "[did not] rise above the paramount need for institutional security for the other prisoners and the staff" of the prison and that the claims of "lack of privacy do not constitute cruel and unusual punishment under the 8th Amendment because prison policy" had penological justification).

88. See, e.g., Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599–600, 97 S. Ct. 869, 876–77, 51 L. Ed. 2d 64, 73–74 (1977) (holding that the "individual interest in avoiding disclosure of personal matters" is one of the interests protected by a constitutional zone of privacy, but ultimately finding that a New York statute requiring that the state be provided with a copy of prescriptions for certain drugs did not violate the constitution because it included appropriate confidentiality protections and furthered a legitimate state interest); New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 760, 102 S. Ct. 3348, 3356, L. Ed. 2d 1113, 1125 (1982) (approving Whalen v. Roe and its holding that privacy embraces the individual interest in avoiding disclosure of private matters, holding that a New York statute prohibiting distribution of certain types of materials did not fall under 1st Amendment protection).

89. See, e.g., Griswold v. Connecticut 381 U.S. 479, 485–86, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 515–16 (1965) (holding that prohibiting the use of contraceptives violates the Constitution because the marital relationship is one that lies within the zone of privacy created by several constitutional guarantees); Roe v. Wade 410 U.S. 113, 153, 93 S. Ct. 705, 727, 35 L. Ed. 2d 147, 177 (1973) (holding that the constitutional right to privacy includes a woman's decision whether or not to have an abortion).

90. See, e.g., Bloch v. Ribar, 156 F.3d 673, 683–84 (6th Cir. 1998) (holding that there is a right to privacy of information and a constitutional right to avoiding unwarranted disclosure of certain types of private information that concern a fundamental liberty interest); Eastwood v. Dept.. of Corr., 846 F.2d 627, 631 (10th Cir. 1988) (finding the right to privacy is violated "when an individual is forced to disclose information regarding personal sexual matters," which in this case involved forced disclosure of plaintiff's sexual history to an employer when she complained of sexual assault); information about you, you could be subject to harassment or abuse by other officials or fellow prisoners. If this has happened to you, you might be able to bring a claim under Section 1983 against the official who made the disclosure for violating your constitutional right to privacy. While many cases have focused on disclosure of medical information, you might be able to bring a similar claim for unwarranted disclosure of other personal information.

(a) Privacy Regarding Gender Identity

The Second Circuit has found that a person's transgender status is among those constitutionally protected personal matters, and that a prison official may not violate a prisoner's right to privacy through disclosure of gender identity when that disclosure is not "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."[91] In other words, the prison official must have a legitimate reason, related to the prison system's goals, for giving away such private information.

Because it is hard to imagine a situation in which a prison could claim a legitimate interest in "outing" a transgendered prisoner, you might succeed if you bring a Section 1983 claim arguing that a prison official who told others that you were transgendered violated your right to privacy. In Powell v. Schriver, a transgendered prisoner argued that a corrections officer had violated her constitutional right to privacy when the officer told another corrections officer in the presence of other prison staff and prisoners that she had undergone gender reassignment surgery. The Second Circuit held the corrections officer's "gratuitous disclosure" of the prisoner's "confidential medical information as humor or gossip ... [was] not reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest" and therefore violated her right to privacy.[92] Because the sharing of personal information had no real legitimate reason, it was a violation of the prisoner's constitutional right to privacy. Keep in mind, however, that Powell focused on the prisoner's transgender status as a medical condition, and not on the sexual orientation of the prisoner.[93]

(b) Privacy Regarding Sexual Orientation

Importantly, at least one court has also held that sexual orientation is one of those "personal matters" protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.[94] There is also at least one case containing such a privacy claim

---

Thorne v. City of El Segundo, 726 F.2d 459, 468 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 979, 105 S. Ct. 380, 83 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1984)

("The interests [plaintiff] raises in the privacy of her sexual activities are within the zone protected by the constitution."). The cases involving prisoners' rights to privacy largely involve disclosure of medical information. See, e.g., Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 110–13 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding the disclosure of a prisoner's confidential medical information regarding transsexual status as humor or gossip is not reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest and therefore violates prisoner's constitutional right to privacy); Nolley v. County of Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715, 728–36 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (finding that red stickers disclosing plaintiff's HIV status to non-medical staff and automatic segregation of HIV-positive prisoners violated constitutional and statutory rights to privacy); Doe v. Coughlin, 697 F. Supp. 1234, 1238–41 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that the identification of prisoners with HIV and/or AIDS violated their right to privacy and that "the prisoners subject to this program must be afforded at least some protection against the non-consensual disclosure of their diagnosis").

91. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999). See also Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (holding that a regulation that violates inmates' constitutional rights is only valid if it is "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests").

92. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999) (emphasis added). Despite this finding, the Powell court ultimately found for the corrections officer because that officer was protected by qualified immunity. Qualified immunity shields government officials from liability for damages on account of their performance of discretionary official functions "insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known." Powell v. Shriver, 175 F.3d 107, 113 (2d Cir. 1999) (quoting Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 2738, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 410 (1982)). The Powell court found that the right of a prisoner to maintain the privacy of her "transsexualism" was not clearly established at the time the defendant in Powell made the disclosure, so he could not be held liable. Since the Powell case was decided, however, a court within the Second Circuit would likely find that the right to privacy about one's gender identity is "clearly established."

93. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999).

94. See Sterling v. Borough of Minersville, 232 F.3d 190, 196 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that the disclosure—or even threat of disclosure—of a person's sexual orientation by a state actor constitutes a violation of the person's constitutional right to privacy because sexual orientation is an "intimate aspect of [one's] personality entitled to privacy protection" and "it is difficult to imagine a more private matter than one's sexuality and a less likely probability that the government would have a legitimate interest in disclosure of sexual identity").

brought by a prisoner specifically related to sexual orientation,[95] though it is important to recognize that the novelty of your claim makes it somewhat unlikely to succeed. Keep in mind, however, that in Lawrence v. Texas,[96] the Supreme Court held that homosexual activity was within the zone of privacy protected by the Constitution. After Lawrence, a privacy claim might be much stronger.

3. Potential Obstacles to Suit

The Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA") prohibits actions for emotional distress without related physical injury (that rises above a de minimis, or minimal, level). Therefore, a prison official's violation of your right to confidentiality would have to create a risk of serious harm to be actionable under the U.S. Constitution. For more information, review JLM, Chapter 14 on the PLRA.

If this rule prevents you from bringing suit under the U.S. Constitution, you may still have a state law remedy available to you. Many states recognize the tort of invasion of privacy. If the state in which you are incarcerated recognizes this tort, and has waived Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity, you can sue for disclosure of your sexual orientation or gender identity under state law.[97]

G. Assault and Harassment

1. Assault[98]

LGBT prisoners are often more vulnerable than other prisoners to assault (including sexual assault) at the hands of both fellow prisoners and guards, and to illegal searches by prison guards. If you have experienced such assault, you may be able to bring a Section 1983 claim for violation of your Eighth Amendment rights against prison officials either for assaulting you or for failing to protect you from assault.

You should read Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," and Chapter 24, "Your Right to Be Free From Assault" of the JLM if you are considering bringing a suit against prison officials for assault.

(a) Assault by Prison Employees

The Eighth Amendment protects you from punishment that is cruel or unusual.[99] Courts have been reluctant to find constitutional violations when prison officials use force to maintain or restore security within the prison.[100] However, if the force has no identifiable purpose and is simply meant to harm the prisoner, an official may be found to have used excessive force.

To show that an assault by a prison official violates the Eighth Amendment, you must prove that: (1) the prison official acted "maliciously and sadistically"; and (2) the injury you suffered was sufficiently severe (this means the injury is not de minimis).[101] This standard was explained by the Supreme Court in Hudson v. McMillian, and is known as "the Hudson standard."

To determine whether an official acted maliciously and sadistically, courts will consider factors such as:

(1) The extent of the injury suffered;[102]

(2) The need for the official to have used force under the circumstances;

---

95. See Johnson v. Riggs, No. 03-C-219, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44428, at *36–39 (E.D. Wis. Sept. 15, 2005) (recognizing Sterling's right to privacy in one's sexual orientation in the prison context and denying any sort of legitimate penological purpose in disclosing this information without prisoner's consent, but finding for the defendant on grounds of qualified immunity).

96. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2484, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 525–26 (2003) (holding that the "petitioners are entitled to respect for their private lives" and the state "cannot demean their existence or control their destiny by making their private sexual conduct a crime," relying on the right to liberty under the due process clause and noting that there is an area of personal liberty that the government may not enter).

97. For more information on state tort actions, see Chapter 17 of the JLM.

98. See Chapter 24 of the JLM for information on assault in prisons generally.

99. U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

100. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6–7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 998–99, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992).

101. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992).

102. While the injury does not have to be "significant" to prevail on an 8th Amendment claim, the extent of the injury "may suggest 'whether the use of force could plausibly have been thought necessary' in a particular situation 'or instead evinced such wantonness with respect to the unjustified infliction of harm as is tantamount to a knowing willingness that it occur.'" Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (quoting Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261–62 (1986)).

(3) The relationship between the need to use force and the amount of force that was actually used;
(4) The size of the threat as a prison official would reasonably perceive it; and
(5) Efforts made by prison guards to lessen the severity of a serious use of force.[103]

Under the Hudson standard, you do not need to show you suffered serious injury, but you must show that you suffered some physical injury. The extent of your injury is one of the factors a court will consider in determining whether the use of force violated the Eighth Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment. Also, the PLRA prohibits actions for emotional distress without some accompanying physical injury.[104]

(b) Assault by Other Prisoners

If you have been attacked or feel at risk of attack by fellow prisoners, you may bring suit under Section 1983 to claim that prison officials who failed to protect you violated your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.[105]

To show that a prison official violated the Eighth Amendment by failing to protect you from assault by other prisoners, you must prove that: (1) the prison official exhibited "deliberate indifference" to your health or safety by disregarding an excessive risk to it; and (2) the injury you suffered was severe.[106]

Deliberate indifference is a standard that is harder to meet than negligence, but not as difficult as the standard of "malicious and sadistic intent."[107] Generally, if prison officials were negligent, it means that they should have known of a danger or failed to take the precautions a reasonable person would have taken. If prison officials were acting with malicious and sadistic intent, it would mean that they acted with the intention of causing you harm. Deliberate indifference is between those two standards; generally, it means that the prison officials were aware of a substantial risk to your safety but ignored it.

The leading case for Section 1983 claims involving assault and deliberate indifference is Farmer v. Brennan, in which a transgender prisoner brought a Section 1983 suit based on prison officials' failure to protect her from other prisoners because of her feminine appearance.[108] The Supreme Court defined "deliberate indifference" as the failure of prison officials to act when they know of a "substantial risk of serious harm."[109] The Court went on to say that an "inference from circumstantial evidence" could be used to demonstrate that prison officials had knowledge of a risk.[110] "Circumstantial evidence" is evidence that tends to show something as being true. This means that a prisoner can present evidence showing that it is likely that the prison officials knew of the risk, even if there is no "direct evidence" (such as statements from the officials or documented complaints from the prisoner) that shows this risk.

One important thing to keep in mind is that the "inference from circumstantial evidence" does not mean that an official can be held responsible for something he should have known but did not know. Rather, it means the circumstantial evidence should demonstrate that the official actually knew of something he denies knowing.

Under Farmer v. Brennan, you do not have to wait until you have actually been attacked to bring a viable Section 1983 claim of deliberate indifference. If prison officials did not protect you from a mere risk of harm, they may still have deprived you of your rights under the Eighth Amendment. Your status as gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgendered may make it easier for you to prove that you are at risk of harm. If prison officials know your status, then they know you are at a higher risk for harm. For example, in Greene

---

103. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992).

104. The Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) also requires that you exhaust administrative options before bringing an action under § 1983. See Chapter 14 of the JLM for more information on the PLRA and its requirements.

105. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 826, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 837 (1994) (holding unanimously that prison officials can be liable for damages if they are deliberately indifferent in failing to protect prisoners from harm caused by other prisoners).

106. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (holding that a prison official cannot be liable under the 8th Amendment for denying a prisoner humane confinement conditions unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to prisoner's health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and must draw that inference).

107. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 835, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1978, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 824 (1994).

108. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 831, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 821 (1994).

109. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994).

110. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828 (1994).

v. Bowles, the Sixth Circuit recognized an Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim where the warden admitted knowing that the plaintiff was placed in protective custody because she was transsexual and that a "predatory inmate" was being housed in the same unit.[111] The court held a vulnerable (e.g. gay or transsexual) prisoner could prove prison officials knew of a substantial risk to his safety by showing the officials knew of the prisoner's vulnerable status, and of the general risk to his safety from other prisoners, even if they did not know of any specific danger.[112] Although it may be easier to prove you are at risk if you are such a vulnerable prisoner, you should still report any threats against you so that officials know about any specific problems, because there must be a substantial risk to actually prove deliberate indifference.[113]

In your complaint, you should ask for a temporary injunction while your case is pending. An injunction is an order from a court making the prison officials take or not take a certain action. In your case, you may seek an injunction to be immediately transferred into protective custody while your claim is pending. Note, however, that for the court to grant temporary injunctive relief you will have to show that you are likely to prevail, or win, in your case. You should also be aware that, under the PLRA, any temporary injunction that a court grants you is likely to expire before your case is resolved.

Because the PLRA also bars prisoners from suing for emotional or mental distress without an accompanying physical injury, and punishes prisoners who file multiple lawsuits that courts deem "frivolous" or that fail to state a claim, you should be certain that your claim is one a court will recognize as valid. Be sure to review Chapter 14 of the JLM on the PLRA and Chapter 16 of the JLM on Section 1983 suits.

(c) Sexual Assault

Sexual assault includes rape and unwanted physical contact of a sexual nature, such as fondling someone else's breasts and/or genitals. Generally, bringing a Section 1983 suit for sexual assault in prison requires the same elements of proof explained above for physical assaults.[114] That is, if a prison official sexually assaults you, you must show that the prison official acted maliciously, and that you suffered harm. If another prisoner assaulted you, you need to show that prison officials acted with deliberate indifference and that you suffered harm.[115]

In addition, Title 18 of the United States Code, Section 2243, criminalizes sexual intercourse or any type of sexual contact between persons with "custodial, supervisory or disciplinary" authority and prisoners in federal correctional facilities.[116] Moreover, Section 2241 makes it a felony to use or threaten force to engage in sexual intercourse in a federal prison.[117] Many states also have laws criminalizing sexual contact between prison officials and prisoners. See Chapter 24 of the JLM for more information about assaults.

---

111. Greene v. Bowles 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004). Note that the plaintiff in Greene was actually attacked and severely beaten by the other prisoner.

112. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004) ("[A] prison official cannot 'escape liability ... by showing that, while he was aware of an obvious, substantial risk to inmate safety, he did not know that the complainant was especially likely to be assaulted by the specific prisoner who eventually committed the assault.'" (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994))). The court also noted that deliberate indifference can be shown alternatively by proving that prison officials knew that a predatory prisoner presented a substantial risk to a large class of prisoners without segregation or other protective measures.

113. See Purvis v. Ponte, 929 F.2d 822, 825–26 (1st Cir. 1991) (per curiam) (stating the 8th Amendment was not violated when prisoner alleged general fear of "gay bashing" and suspicions that homophobic cellmates threatened his physical safety, since he did not show likelihood that violence would occur and officials had tried six different cellmates).

114. See Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that there are 8th Amendment limitations to imprisonment and that sexual abuse is unconstitutional); Hovater v. Robinson, 1 F.3d 1063, 1068 (10th Cir. 1993) (stating that "an inmate has a constitutional right to be secure in her bodily integrity and free from attack by prison guards" (citing Alberti v. Klevenhagen, 790 F.2d 1220, 1224 (5th Cir. 1986))).

115. See, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 527 (5th Cir. 2004) (finding a deliberate indifference claim where prison officials continued to house a gay prisoner in the general population where he was gang raped and sold as a sexual slave for over 18 months); Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 84 (6th Cir. 1995) (holding that a warden who knows of a risk of physical and sexual assault posed to a vulnerable prisoner and fails to take reasonable steps to protect against such abuse may be found to have acted with deliberate indifference).

116. 18 U.S.C. § 2243 (2006).

117. 18 U.S.C. § 2241 (2006).

2. Harassment

(a) Sexual Harassment

Sexual harassment is common in prisons, and LGBT prisoners are often even more vulnerable to such harassment than are other prisoners.[118] Federal courts have recognized that sexual harassment of prisoners by prison staff can constitute a constitutional tort, violating prisoners' Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.[119] A constitutional tort is an action for damages that you can bring against a government or individual defendants if they violate your constitutional rights. A prisoner can state an Eighth Amendment claim for sexual harassment only if the alleged harassment is so harmful that it could be considered a departure from "the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society," and only if the defendant acted with intent to harm the prisoner.[120] As explained below, prisoners generally do not succeed in claims against prison staff for sexual harassment involving words alone. However, prisoners have succeeded in claims against prison staff for sexual harassment that did involve repeated physical touching or assault or that threatened the prisoner's safety.[121]

The 1996 passage of the PLRA made it much harder for a prisoner to succeed in a sexual harassment claim against prison staff. While the PLRA does not explicitly state that prisoners cannot sue for sexual harassment, it does say they cannot recover damages "for mental or emotional injury ... without a prior showing of physical injury."[122] Many courts have interpreted this to mean that you cannot receive money damages for sexual harassment unless you were physically hurt by the harasser.[123] But other sorts of relief,

---

118. "In a questionnaire ... administered to eighty self-identified homosexual inmates, fifty-three percent reported that they had been frequently victimized via 'sexual innuendo, sexual harassment, verbal and physical threats.'" James E. Robertson, Cruel and Unusual Punishment in United States Prisons: Sexual Harassment Among Male Inmates, 36 Am. Crim. L. Rev. 1, 17 (1999) (quoting Wayne S. Wooden and Jay Parker, Men Behind Bars 134 (1982)). The Wooden & Parker study also found white prisoners were more likely to be sexually harassed than Latino or African-American ones.

119. See Daskalea v. District of Columbia, 227 F.3d 433, 441–50 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (finding the District of Columbia deliberately indifferent to a pattern of particularly heinous and widespread sexual harassment and abuse of female prisoners, including forced stripteases); Schwenk v. Hartford, 204 F.3d 1187, 1196–97 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that a pre-operative male-to-female transsexual inmate's 8th Amendment rights were violated by a guard's attempted rape, which constituted sexual assault offensive to human dignity); Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 860–61 (2d Cir. 1997) (noting that sexual abuse by corrections officers could be an 8th Amendment violation, but ultimately holding that the particular allegations of verbal harassment and bodily contact made by prisoner were not sufficiently serious to be a violation); Freitas v. Ault, 109 F.3d 1335, 1338 (8th Cir. 1997) (recognizing sexual harassment as a constitutional claim where plaintiff alleges that the harassment objectively caused physical or psychological pain and that the officer acted with a sufficiently culpable state of mind); Johnson v. Phelan, 69 F.3d 144, 147 (7th Cir. 1995) (noting that "a prisoner has a remedy for deliberate harassment, on account of sex, by guards of either sex"); Minifield v. Butikofer, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 904 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (dismissing plaintiff's sexual harassment claim because, although the Ninth Circuit has recognized that sexual harassment may constitute a claim for an 8th Amendment violation, the court has specifically differentiated between sexual harassment that involves verbal abuse and that which involves allegations of physical assault, finding only physical assault to violate the Constitution). See also James E. Robertson, Cruel and Unusual Punishment in United States Prisons: Sexual Harassment Among Male Inmates, 36 Am. Crim L. Rev. 1, 19–23 (1999) (looking at cases both involving physical contact and no physical contact).

120. Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 3–4 (D.D.C. 1995) (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8 (1992)).

121. Watson v. Jones, 980 F.2d 1165, 1165–66 (8th Cir. 1992) (finding a valid 8th Amendment claim where correctional officer sexually harassed two prisoners on an almost daily basis for two months by conducting deliberate examination of their genitalia and anuses); Webb v. Foreman, No. 93 Civ. 8579 (JGK), 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15227, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 16, 1996) (unpublished) (holding that when a guard conducts a strip search that includes grabbing the prisoner's genitals, the conduct may be a valid 8th Amendment claim); Thomas v. District of Columbia, 887 F. Supp. 1, 4–5 (D.D.C. 1995) (finding a valid 8th Amendment claim where correctional officer harassed prisoner and spread rumors that he was gay, thereby endangering him).

122. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (2006).

123. Cobb v. Kelly, No. 4:07CV108-P-A, 2007 WL 2159315, at *1 (N.D. Miss. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when plaintiff's case manager fondled his genitals); Smith v. Shady, No. 3:CV-05-2663, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24754, at *5–6 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 8, 2006) (unpublished) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when correctional officer held and fondled prisoner's penis); Ashann-Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 563, 565–66 (W.D. Va. 2000) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when corrections officers viewed prisoner naked and encouraged him to masturbate); but see Kemner v. Hemphill, 199 F. Supp. 2d 1264, 1270 (N.D. Fla. 2002) (finding prisoner who was forced to perform oral sex on fellow prisoner suffered physical injury sufficient to satisfy PLRA's physical injury requirement).

like injunctions (where you ask the court to order someone to stop or start some action other than the payment of money damages), may be available to you.[124] For this reason it is important to learn about the PLRA, particularly its physical injury requirement, before you file a suit.[125]

(b) Verbal Harassment

Prisoners who try to sue based on verbal harassment face two obstacles: (1) an interpretation of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment exempting verbal harassment; and (2) the PLRA's physical injury requirement. Courts often find that words alone, no matter how abusive, do not violate the Eighth Amendment.[126] So, claims by prisoners against prison staff for harassment consisting only of words generally do not succeed.[127]

Additionally, even where prisoners have alleged valid Eighth Amendment violations, courts have often determined that the PLRA bars the suits if there is not a physical injury.[128] For instance, harassment by prison staff has been found to violate the Eighth Amendment when it includes threats of attack with a lethal weapon.[129] But where no physical injury results, some courts have determined that these cases are barred by the PLRA's physical injury requirement.[130] Also, some courts have held the PLRA blocks the recovery of money damages in cases where harassing language or threats are accompanied by groping or abusive touching.[131]

---

124. Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 462–63 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding that even where the PLRA bars recovery of monetary damages, injunctive relief remains available).

125. See Chapter 14 of the JLM.

126. See, e.g., Adkins v. Rodriguez, 59 F.3d 1034, 1037 (10th Cir. 1995) (holding that a jail deputy who had made comments to a female prisoner about her body and his own sexual prowess, and entered her cell, stood over her bed, and told her she had nice breasts, engaged in "outrageous and unacceptable" conduct, but that the conduct did not violate the 8th Amendment, because it did not include "physical intimidation"); Minifield v. Butikofer, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 903 (N.D. Cal. 2004) ("Allegations of verbal harassment and abuse fail to state [an 8th Amendment] claim cognizable under 42 U.S.C. § 1983."); Ellis v. Meade, 887 F. Supp. 324, 328–29 (D. Me. 1995) (holding that a correctional officer allegedly tapping or spanking a prisoner's buttocks and asking "How's the little guy doing?" did not violate the 8th Amendment because the comment was isolated and carried no threat of violence); Maclean v. Secor, 876 F. Supp. 695, 698–99 (E.D. Pa. 1995) (holding that threats alone do not constitute a constitutional claim even if the threatened prisoner has a particular vulnerability to assault).

127. See, e.g., Austin v. Terhune, 367 F.3d 1167, 1171–72 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that a guard who exposed genitalia to a prisoner from a glass-walled control booth for a 30–40 second "isolated incident" was not sufficiently serious to constitute an 8th Amendment violation, and noting generally that "[a]lthough prisoners have a right to be free from sexual abuse, whether at the hands of fellow inmates or prison guards … the Eighth Amendment's protections do not necessarily extend to mere verbal sexual harassment"); DeWalt v. Carter, 224 F.3d 607, 612 (7th Cir. 2000) (finding that a guard's use of sexually explicit and racially derogatory language was not a constitutional violation, stating that "[s]tanding alone, simple verbal harassment does not constitute cruel and unusual punishment, deprive a prisoner of a protected liberty interest, or deny a prisoner equal protection of the laws"); Barney v. Pulsipher, 143 F.3d 1299, 1310 n.11 (10th Cir. 1998) (holding that verbal harassment and intimidation alone, without allegations of sexual assault, was insufficient to state an 8th Amendment cause of action); Blueford v. Prunty, 108 F.3d 251, 254–55 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that prison guard engaging in "vulgar same-sex trash talk" with prisoners was entitled to qualified immunity because a prisoner's right to be free from such behavior was not clearly established at the time the behavior took place). In some cases, allegations of touching may still fail to rise to the level of a constitutional violation. See, e.g., Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 859–61 (2d Cir. 1997) (finding that a prisoner's claim that female officer touched his genitals and pushed her breasts and genitals against his body did not rise to a violation of the prisoner's constitutional rights). See, however, Chapter 24 of the JLM, which cites cases holding that prisoners may recover for psychological injury inflicted by prison staff.

128. See Chapter 14 of the JLM for more information on the PLRA.

129. See, e.g., Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1523–25 (10th Cir. 1992) (finding some forms of verbal harassment can inflict cruel and unusual punishment when they involve threatened use of lethal weapons); Burton v. Livingstone, 791 F.2d 97, 99–100 (8th Cir. 1986); Douglas v. Marino, 684 F. Supp. 395, 397–98 (D.N.J. 1988).

130. See, e.g., Walker v. Akers, No. 98-C-3199, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14995, at *15–17 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 22, 1999) (unpublished) (holding that the PLRA's physical injury requirement bars the recovery of monetary damages where corrections officer threatened prisoner and held electric stun gun to his head).

131. See, e.g., Cobb v. Kelly, No. 4:07CV108-P-A, 2007 WL 2159315, at *1 (N.D. Miss. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when plaintiff's case manager fondled his genitals); Smith v. Shady, No. 3:CV-05-2663, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24754, at *5–6 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 8, 2006) (unpublished) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement not met when correctional officer held and fondled prisoner's penis); Ashann-Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 563, 565–66 (W.D. Va. 2000) (finding PLRA's physical injury requirement was not met when female corrections officers viewed male prisoner naked and encouraged him to masturbate).

H. Housing and Protective Custody

1. Housing Issues for Transgendered Prisoners[132]

Like most other institutions, prisons are structured around the assumptions that all people are easily classified as either male or female, gender is assigned at birth, and a person's gender remains constant throughout life. These assumptions present extraordinary hardship for transgendered, intersex, and other gender-variant prisoners, as the overwhelming majority of prisons recognize only two genders and segregate male from female prisoners.

Prison authorities rarely recognize the gender identity of transgendered prisoners. Transgendered prisoners are generally housed either according to the gender they were assigned at birth or by their genitalia.[133] Because few transgender people are able to access genital gender reassignment surgery, large numbers of transgender prisoners are housed in facilities for a gender with which they do not identify.

To date, the gendered housing policies of prisons placing transsexual prisoners in housing for genders with which they do not identify have not been successfully challenged in court.[134] The Supreme Court has explicitly held that prisoners do not have a constitutional right to choose their place of confinement.[135] Moreover, courts generally look to prison officials' choices about how to manage their institutions,[136] and classification within prisons has not been found to violate a liberty interest.[137]

Courts have been especially hostile towards the requests of transgender prisoners for transfer to gender-appropriate facilities.[138] Thus, it is unlikely that you will be able to successfully challenge your housing

---

132. All known transgendered prisoners who have filed lawsuits contesting their conditions of imprisonment that have resulted in reported opinions have been male-to-female (MTF) transgendered people. This of course does not mean that female-to-male (FTM) transgender prisoners do not face challenges while incarcerated. If you are a FTM prisoner who wishes to sue officials of the prison in which you are housed, the lack of precedent for such cases should not stop you from doing so. But, it might be advisable to contact an impact litigation organization specializing in transgender rights for help in preparing your claim. See Appendix A of this Chapter for information on these organizations.

133. See, e.g., Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 829–30, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820 (1994) (noting that a preoperative male-to-female transgender prisoner was housed in male housing despite receiving hormone treatments and dressing femininely); Farmer v. Haas, 990 F.2d 319, 320 (7th Cir. 1993) (noting plaintiff's incarceration with the male population despite undergoing estrogen therapy and receiving silicone breast implants). But see Crosby v. Reynolds, 763 F. Supp. 666, 669–70 (D. Me. 1991) (upholding placement of pre-operative transgender person undergoing hormone treatment, at her request and on the recommendation of the jail's contract physician, within the female population, even in the face of a challenge by the prisoner's female cellmate, who alleged it was a violation of her right to privacy); Lucrecia v. Samples, No. C-93-3651-VRW, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15607, at *1–2 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 1995) (unpublished) (noting that prisoner who "had not as yet completed the transformation" from male to female, while incarcerated in a federal prison, "lived within a female housing unit as a female").

134. See, e.g., Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 415 (7th Cir. 1987) (denying transgender prisoner's equal protection claim for not being classified as a woman and housed with female prisoners on ground that a prison administrative decision may give rise to an equal protection claim only if the plaintiff can establish "state officials had purposefully and intentionally discriminated against" her); Lucrecia v. Samples, No. C-93-3651-VRW, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15607, at *14–15 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 16, 1995) (unpublished) (holding a transgender prisoner's legal challenge alleging that her incarceration in a male cell violated due process must fail because no liberty interest was infringed and "housing decisions are within the discretion of prison officials"); Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986) ("Prison authorities must be given great deference to formulate rules and regulations that satisfy a rational purpose and segregation of the sexes is a rational purpose."). See Chapter 22 of the JLM for more information on challenging administrative decisions.

135. Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 216, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2534, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 454 (1976) (reversing lower court decision ruling in favor of plaintiff prisoners who sought injunctive and declaratory relief for being transferred to prisons with less desirable conditions following a fire at their previous facility).

136. See, e.g., Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 482, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2299, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429 (1995) ("[F]ederal courts ought to afford appropriate deference and flexibility to state officials trying to manage a volatile environment."); Grayson v. Rison, 945 F.2d 1064, 1067 (9th Cir. 1991) ("When prison officials have legitimate administrative authority, such as the discretion to move inmates from prison to prison or from cell to cell, the Due Process Clause imposes few restrictions on the use of that authority."); McCray v. Sullivan, 509 F.2d 1332, 1334 (5th Cir. 1975) ("The federal courts are extremely reluctant to limit the freedom of prison officials to classify prisoners as they in their broad discretion determine appropriate").

137. For example, prisoners who have challenged their classification on other bases, such as security or gang classifications, have also been unsuccessful. See Chapter 31 of the JLM for a detailed discussion of legal challenges to security classification decisions and the definition of liberty interests in the prison context.

138. As one federal court noted in response to a male-to-female transgender prisoner's request for transfer to a classification in court. If being housed with the general population is difficult or harmful for you, however, you can request to be placed in segregation or protective custody.

2. Segregation and Protective Custody

Many state prisons segregate LGBT prisoners from the general prison population, either because the prisoner asks for this or the prison officials decide to do this. In the past, the separation of LGBT-identified prisoners from heterosexual prisoners was used to punish LGBT people or was sometimes based on the false assumption that because a prisoner was not heterosexual, he would be more likely to sexually assault other prisoners in the general population.

Today, segregation of LGBT prisoners in state or municipal institutions is often done to protect LGBT prisoners, who might be more vulnerable to attack from other prisoners. While protecting LGBT prisoners may be good, the conditions of protective custody often are not.[139] By law, the warden in a federal prison may not segregate an LGBT prisoner solely for his or her own protection.[140] This really means that, absent other circumstances or threats, a warden may not segregate someone only for being LGBT.

Segregation means different things in different prisons. Some prisons house a high enough number of LGBT prisoners that they have a wing for people identifying themselves as LGBT; other prisons can offer only single rooms, or certain cells within a larger segregation unit, for the occasional LGBT prisoner.[141]

(a) Getting Into Protective Custody

If you have been placed in general population and have experienced ill treatment there (attack or threat of attack), you may request to be transferred into protective custody through administrative channels.[142]

If your request is not granted when brought through administrative channels, including all administrative appeals processes, you may bring a Section 1983 claim against prison officials for violating your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. As explained in Part G of this Chapter, a prison official may be held liable under Section 1983 for violating the Eighth Amendment if he acted with "deliberate indifference" to your health or safety—that is, if he knew you faced a substantial risk of serious harm but disregarded that risk by not taking reasonable action to stop it.[143] In general, the more serious the threats or attacks against you and the more evidence you can produce that the prison officials knew about the risk but did nothing, the better your chances of winning in court.

---

women's prison, "[a] male prisoner cannot be housed in a women's prison. Even though a transfer may relieve plaintiff's anxieties, clearly a violation of the women's rights would be at issue." Lamb v. Maschner, 633 F. Supp. 351, 353 (D. Kan. 1986).

139. Furthermore, at least one federal court has found the practice of placing LGBT prisoners in isolation wards to violate the Due Process Clause of the Constitution. See R.G. v. Koller, 415 F. Supp. 2d 1129, 1154–55 (D. Haw. 2006).

140. "The Warden may not refer an inmate for placement in a control unit ... on the basis that the inmate is a protection case, e.g., a homosexual, an informant, etc., unless the inmate meets other criteria as described in paragraph (b) of this section." 28 C.F.R. § 541.41(c)(2) (2007).

141. The New York City prison system, for example, provides separate housing for gay inmates. Darren Rosenblum, "Trapped" in Sing Sing: Transgender Prisoners Caught in the Gender Binarism, 6 Mich. J. Gender & L. 499, 524 (2000). The Los Angeles County Jail includes a "homosexual ward" separate from the general prison population where (as of 1990) 350 gay prisoners were housed. Patricia Klein Lerner, Jailer Learns Gay Culture to Foil Straight Inmates, L.A. Times, Dec. 27, 1990, at B1. See also Falls v. Nesbitt, 966 F.2d 375, 376 (8th Cir. 1992) (describing a "special section of the prison reserved for those prisoners who are slight of build, physically weaker than the typical inmate, preyed upon, or, in many cases, homosexuals"); McCray v. Bennett, 467 F. Supp. 187, 190 (M.D. Ala. 1978) (describing segregation unit housing for, among others, "[k]nown homosexuals," inmates who have histories of institutional violence, and those who are being punished for violating prison rules); Inmates of Milwaukee Cnty. Jail v. Peterson, 353 F. Supp. 1157, 1160–61 (E.D. Wis. 1973) (describing cell block housing for, among others, homosexuals and narcotic addicts undergoing treatment or detoxification).

142. See Chapter 31 of the JLM, "Security Classification and Gang Validation," for more information on requesting protective custody.

143. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (holding that "a prison official cannot be found liable under the 8th Amendment for denying an inmate humane conditions of confinement unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference"). See Chapter 16 of the JLM for more information about § 1983 and the deliberate indifference standard.

Few Section 1983 suits about the failure to house a prisoner in protective custody have been brought by LGBT prisoners,[144] but several courts have recognized the vulnerability in prison of people who do not fit with traditional gender norms.[145] Before Farmer v. Brennan, the few such claims that were filed had very limited success.[146] The Farmer Court's extensive discussion of the meaning of "deliberate indifference," however, may make it easier to win on such claims.[147] Also strengthening the deliberate indifference argument of LGBT prisoners is the fact that courts have acknowledged the heightened vulnerability of prisoners known to be LGBT or who might be thought to be LGBT in giving lighter sentences,[148] and prison officials have argued that LGBT prisoners are particularly vulnerable in order to justify denying them benefits or services.[149] These cases may make it more difficult for a prison official to prove he did not have the required knowledge that LGBT prisoners are at risk. If you plan to bring a Section 1983 claim for violation of your Eighth Amendment rights, be sure to also read Chapter 16 of the JLM.

(b) Getting Out of Protective Custody

Although segregation from the general prison population may afford LGBT prisoners protection from harassment and assault, the conditions of segregated cells are often worse than those in general population. Also, segregation may make you ineligible for work detail and may deny you access to libraries and other facilities, visitation, proper medical treatment,[150] and other privileges available in general population.[151]

---

144. But see Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1994) (allowing an 8th Amendment claim by a transgender prisoner to go forward where she was placed in the general population and subsequently sexually assaulted, even though the prisoner did not express safety concerns beforehand).

145. See, e.g., Taylor v. Michigan Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 82–84 (6th Cir. 1995) (noting that "small, youthful prisoners are especially vulnerable to sexual pressure"); Young v. Quinlan, 960 F.2d 351, 362 (3d Cir. 1992) (noting that "fellow inmates subjected [plaintiff] to sexual assault on several documented occasions, most likely because of [plaintiff]'s youthful appearance and slight stature"); United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526–27 (2d Cir. 1991) (noting that "even if [plaintiff] is not gay or bisexual, his physical appearance, insofar as it departs from traditional notions of an acceptable masculine demeanor, may make him ... susceptible to homophobic attacks ...."). See also Chapter 24 of the JLM and Part G(1) of this Chapter.

146. See, e.g., Purvis v. Ponte, 929 F.2d 822, 825–27 (1st Cir. 1991) (holding that the 8th Amendment rights of a prisoner were not violated even after he stated a general fear of "gay bashing" and a suspicion that homophobic cellmates threatened his physical safety, since prisoner presented no evidence of strong likelihood that violence would occur and officials had tried six different cellmates); Falls v. Nesbitt, 966 F.2d 375, 380 (8th Cir. 1992) (holding that guard who failed to protect gay prisoner from a cellmate who ultimately stabbed him was not deliberately indifferent). But see Young v. Quinlan, 960 F.2d 351, 362–63 (3d Cir. 1992) (holding that the rights of a prisoner described as small, young, and effeminate may have been violated when he was subjected to sexual assaults by other prisoners after officials in the federal prison where he was housed ignored his requests for protection), superseded by statute on other grounds.

147. But see Poole v. Yeazel, No. 94-3199, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 16195, at *3–4 (7th Cir. June 29, 1995) (unpublished) (holding that a guard who knew prisoner had been "labeled a homosexual" did not exhibit deliberate indifference when he failed to protect him from attack, rather "at best the defendants negligently failed to recognize a potential for assault," a failure that does not rise to the level of a constitutional deprivation).

148. The U.S. Sentencing Guidelines are advisory guidelines that assist judges' decisions in sentencing for federal crimes. Before 2005, federal courts had to follow the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines, but federal courts permitted what were called "downward departures" or reduced sentences when sentencing defendants known to be gay or who might be perceived to be gay, in order to protect these defendants from prison abuse. See United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 525–26 (2d Cir. 1991) (finding downward departure of convicted homosexual's sentence was authorized, under the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines as interpreted in United States v. Lara, 905 F.2d 599 (2d Cir. 1990), to ensure his safety in prison due to his feminine features which would make him vulnerable to attack by other prisoners); see also United States v. Wilke, 156 F.3d 749, 754–55 (7th Cir. 1998) (departing from sentencing guidelines because of prisoner's sexual orientation and demeanor). Note that the Federal Sentencing Commission has discouraged, but not prohibited, the use of physical appearance alone in determining a prisoner's potential for victimization and thus reduction in sentence. See Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 107, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 2050–51, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392, 418 (1996) (recognizing that use of physical appearance was discouraged by the Commission).

149. See Part B(3) of this Chapter.

150. If you are in protective custody and believe you are being denied proper medical treatment, read Chapter 23 of the JLM on medical treatment.

151. See, e.g., Hansard v. Barrett, 980 F.2d 1059, 1065 (6th Cir. 1992) (finding evidence insufficient to establish that gay inmates were denied equal opportunity to discretionary reductions in sentences, in violation of equal protection, after being moved to administrative segregation). However, the Hall of Justice Jail for gay prisoners in Los Angeles is "better in many respects than in the main jail," in that "[t]elevisions and telephones are on every row. The atmosphere is more relaxed and it is less crowded. The Hall of Justice Jail has 60 fewer prisoners than the 1,800 for which it was designed. The County Jail, designed for 5,276 inmates, has 6,482." Patricia Klein Lerner, Jailer Learns Gay Culture to

If you have been placed in segregation and wish to be housed among the general population, you may request transfer through administrative channels.[152] If unsuccessful, you may file a complaint under Section 1983 and claim that the physical conditions of your segregation violate your Eighth Amendment rights or that the decision to place you in segregation is a violation of your equal protection rights. A Section 1983 claim seeking transfer out of protective custody is far less likely to succeed than an administrative claim requesting transfer into protective custody. Courts have held involuntary segregation—even for non-punitive reasons—does not infringe a liberty interest except in narrow circumstances.[153]

For example, in one Seventh Circuit case, the court noted that, while it sympathized with the prisoner's desire not to be segregated, it had to take into account that there might not be feasible alternatives to the prisoner's prolonged segregation.[154] Nevertheless, the court did not dismiss the plaintiff's claim as a matter of law and remanded the case to the district court to determine the actual conditions of the prisoner's confinement and the existence of any feasible alternatives.[155]

(c) Challenging the Conditions of Protective Custody

If you cannot or do not want to secure a transfer out of protective custody, but the conditions under which you are living in such custody are bad, you may bring a claim under Section 1983 for:

(1) Violation of your Eighth Amendment right against cruel and unusual punishment (if, for example, the cell is unsanitary, or you are not being provided with food and water often enough);[156] or
(2) Violation of your equal protection rights (if conditions in protective custody are much worse than those in the cells where the general population is housed and the difference is not justified by a legitimate interest, such as security).[157]

I. Visitation Rights: Special Issues for LGBT Prisoners

Most state prisons and all federal prisons have policies that, subject to restrictions, allow prisoners to visit with their family members. Unfortunately, because many of these policies define "family" narrowly, LGBT prisoners whose partners wish to visit them in prison may face special difficulties. Prisoners do not have an absolute right to visitation.[158] Even though prisons may place limitations on visitation or exclude visitation all together, those limitations can only be put in place if the prison has a legitimate penological objective for them. The rehabilitation of prisoners and the security of the prison are justifications that will be accepted by a court if they are proven.[159] A prison official cannot merely assert that limitations on your

---

Foil Straight Inmates, L.A. Times, Dec. 27, 1990, at B1.

152. See Chapter 31 of the JLM, "Security Classification and Gang Validation."

153. See, e.g., Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 580 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that "'absent extraordinary circumstances, administrative segregation as such, being an incident to the ordinary life of a prisoner, will never be a ground for a constitutional claim' because it 'simply does not constitute a deprivation of a constitutionally cognizable liberty interest'" (quoting Pichardo v. Kinker, 73 F.3d 612, 612–13 (5th Cir. 1996)); Collins v. Sullivan, 392 F. Supp. 621, 626 n.12 (M.D. Ala. 1975) (holding that placing an allegedly gay prisoner in a one-man cell for medical reasons was legitimate). See also Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

154. Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 417 (7th Cir. 1987) ("Given her transsexual identity ... it is unlikely that prison officials would be able to protect her from the violence, sexual assault and harassment about which she complains.").

155. Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 417–18 (7th Cir. 1987).

156. See Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 303, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 282 (1991) (holding that challenges to physical living conditions of prisons are governed by the deliberate indifference standard). For an explanation of the deliberate indifference standard, see Part G(1)(b) of this Chapter.

157. See, e.g., Williams v. Lane, 851 F.2d 867, 881–82 (7th Cir. 1988) (holding state provisions for programming and living conditions for protective custody prisoners violated the Equal Protection Clause because they were unequal in comparison with general population prisoners, and not justified by security concerns). But see Griffin v. Coughlin, 743 F. Supp. 1006, 1009–16 (N.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding that differences in treatment of protective custody prisoners at Clinton Correctional Facility with those in other protective custody units in New York State and with those in special programs did not violate equal protection rights of protective custody prisoners). For more information about what you need to prove to prevail on a § 1983 equal protection claim in prison, see Chapter 16 of the JLM and Part C(1) of this Chapter.

158. Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 585–89, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3232–34, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438, 446–49 (1984) (finding the denial of visitation appropriate when the denial furthered legitimate governmental purposes and was not for the purpose of punishment).

159. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 547, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1878, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 473 (1979) ("Even when an institutional restriction infringes a specific constitutional guarantee, such as the First Amendment, the practice must be visitation privileges serve security or rehabilitation interests; the officials must instead show that the visitation policies actually further the objectives they claim and that prisoners are given adequate "procedural safeguards."[160] This means that if a prison forbids you to visit with your partner on the grounds that homosexuality poses a security risk to the institution, you can challenge the policy on the grounds that this objective is not actually advanced by the denial of visitation. Although the visitation policies vary from state to state, and state policies vary from the policies in federal prison, the justifications prison officials use are similar everywhere. The rest of this part will help explain why prisons have denied LGBT prisoners the right to visitation and whether or not those policies can be challenged.

1. Federal Prison Visiting Guidelines

If you are in a federal prison and you want to have regular visitors, you must submit a list of proposed visitors to prison staff members.[161] When prison officials are deciding whether to allow the people on your list to visit you, they will divide your visitors into three categories: (1) members of the immediate family; (2) other relatives; and (3) friends and associates.

Members of your immediate family include your spouse and children. In order to exclude a member of your immediate family, prison officials would have to show "strong circumstances" which justify excluding them.[162] To exclude a relative who is not a member of your immediate family (including aunts, uncles, and cousins), the prison must have a specific reason.[163] To exclude friends and associates, a prison official only needs to show that they "could reasonably create a threat to security."[164]

Unfortunately for LGBT prisoners, federal law prohibits treating a same-sex partner as either a member of the immediate family or as another relative. The federal regulations do not explicitly preclude prisons from counting same-sex partners as immediate family members. Instead, same-sex partners simply do not appear on the list of immediate family members, presumably indicating that they cannot be given the designation of immediate family member.[165] Even in states like Vermont, where domestic partners are recognized as spouses for many state purposes, domestic partners will still not be treated as spouses by federal prisons in those states.[166] In May 2004, Massachusetts began issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples.[167] In May 2008, California began issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples as well,[168] and Connecticut followed in November 2008.[169] None of these marriages will count as "marriages" for federal purposes, including in federal prisons, though court challenges are likely to be brought. The Defense of Marriage Act mandates that no state need recognize same-sex unions from other states and also, for federal purposes, defines "spouse" as "a person of the opposite sex who is a husband or a wife." [170] Because of this law, anyone who is not related to you—including your partner or your girlfriend/boyfriend—will be classified in the third category as a friend or associate.

Classification in the third category means that prison officials only need to reasonably fear that your visitor will harm security or your rehabilitation in order to exclude them. In the past, prison officials have generally given two reasons for strict visitation policies for LGBT prisoners. The first reason was evaluated in the light of the central objective of prison administration, safeguarding institutional security.").

---

160. See Rudolph v. Locke, 594 F.2d 1076, 1077 (5th Cir. 1979) (stating that courts must determine if given justifications actually further stated purposes); Hamilton v. Saxbe, 428 F. Supp. 1101, 1112 (N.D. Ga. 1976) (stating that officials may not arbitrarily deny a prisoner's visitation request but must provide a meaningful written response).

161. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44 (2007).

162. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44(a) (2007).

163. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44(b) (2007).

164. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44(c) (2007).

165. 28 C.F.R. § 540.44 (2007).

166. Baker v. State, 744 A.2d 864, 170 Vt. 194 (Vt. 1999).

167. Goodridge v. Dept. of Pub. Health, 798 N.E.2d 941, 949–50, 440 Mass. 309 (Mass. 2003). See also Pam Belluck, Massachusetts Arrives at Moment for Same-Sex Marriage, N.Y. Times, May 17, 2004, at A1.

168. In re Marriage Cases, 183 P.3d 384, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 (Cal. 2008). See also Jesse McKinley, A Landmark Day in California as Same-Sex Marriages Begin to Take Hold, N.Y. Times, Jun. 17, 2008, at A19. However, same-sex marriages were later banned in California by the passage of Proposition 8 during the 2008 elections, and the fate of those same-sex marriages performed prior to the ban remains uncertain. See Jesse McKinley and Laurie Goodstein, Bans in 3 States on Gay Marriage, N.Y. Times, Nov. 6, 2008, at A1.

169. Kerrigan v. Comm'r of Pub. Health, 957 A.2d 407, 411 (Conn. 2008). See also Lisa W. Foderaro, Gay Marriage Begins in Connecticut, N.Y. Times, Nov. 12, 2008, at A1.

170. 1 U.S.C. § 7 (2006).

rehabilitation. Since homosexual sex was illegal in several states and could be outlawed by the federal government, it was possible for prison officials to claim that allowing prisoners visitation with same-sex partners harmed their rehabilitation. After Lawrence v. Texas,[171] this reason is inadequate. Lawrence held that a state cannot outlaw homosexual sex. Since a state cannot outlaw homosexual sex, it is difficult to imagine how a state could have a rehabilitative interest in preventing homosexual activity.

The other more common justification given for restricting a homosexual prisoner's visitation was security. Prison officials have sometimes tried to claim that allowing a homosexual's partner to visit or allowing homosexuals to show affection during visitation would open the gay prisoner up to possible violence and retribution.[172] While this justification has worked in other contexts (notably the right to receive LGBT literature—see Part J of this Chapter), courts have often been harsh on prison officials who try to restrict visitation policies. In Doe v. Sparks,[173] prison officials had a policy that allowed heterosexual boyfriends or girlfriends to visit prisoners but did not allow same-sex partners to visit. The prison officials claimed that the policy against homosexual visitation furthered the purpose of promoting the internal security of the prison. Although this case challenged a state prison policy, the case was decided under constitutional equal protection standards. The court looked closely at the "security" reasons given by the prison. In this case, visitors were not allowed any physical contact, nor was the relationship between the prisoner and the visitor announced in any way. The court said that there was no way for other prisoners to know of the same-sex relationship between the prisoner and the visitor, and therefore any threat to the security of the prison was "so remote as to be arbitrary."[174] The court found that the prison policy was not reasonably related to security concerns and therefore violated the Fourteenth Amendment.

A similar outcome was reached in a case where prison officials denied a gay prisoner the ability to kiss and hug his visiting partner. In Whitmire v. Arizona,[175] prison policy allowed prisoners to kiss and hug family members and heterosexual partners briefly at the beginning and end of visits. The prison claimed that allowing a homosexual prisoner to hug and kiss his partner would cause other prisoners to label him as gay and therefore open him up to attack from other prisoners. In this case, the prisoner was openly gay—he both told other prisoners and the court felt that it was implied since he had no problem showing homosexual affection. The court held the prison policy lacked "a common-sense connection" to security since the prisoner was already labeled as gay—or was at least willing to be so labeled.[176] The court thus determined that the prison was potentially in violation of the prisoner's First, Third, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights.

These cases show that if a federal prison denies you the same visitation privileges as heterosexual prisoners merely because of your sexual orientation, you may have a strong claim.

2. New York Visitation Policies

New York state's visitation policies are very similar to those of the federal government, with some notable differences. A New York prison's visitation policies should allow visits at times designed to "encourage maximum visiting"; contact visits are generally to be allowed and encouraged; and the prison should not limit the number of visits unless the safety and security of the prison is threatened.[177]

Also like federal prisons, New York prisons require that prisoners submit a list of visitors they would like to have visit.[178] These visitors will be admitted unless prison officials can show some legitimate security reason for excluding them.[179] While prison officials generally have a lot of discretion in deciding what constitutes a safety concern, keep in mind that your prison will probably have to follow the same general rules as federal prisons. Merely stating that your same-sex partner would cause a security concern is likely not enough.[180]

---

171. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 578, 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2483, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508 (2003).

172. See Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that there is no common sense basis for prisons to prevent, for safety reasons, displays of affection between same sex couples when a prisoner is openly gay).

173. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

174. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

175. Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135 (9th Cir. 2002).

176. Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136 (9th Cir. 2002).

177. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 200.2(b)(2) (1995).

178. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 200.2(a)(1) (1995).

179. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 200.2(b)(2) (1995).

180. See Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990) (striking down prison policy against visits by homosexual prisoners' partners on grounds that the connection between the policy and the supposed security concerns

New York prisons generally allow physical contact between prisoners and visitors.[181] This contact can involve a small amount of kissing, hugging, and hand-holding (as long as it all takes place in plain view). All of this can occur at the beginning and end of a visit, and brief kisses and embraces should also be allowed during the course of the visit as long as it does not offend other prisoners' sense of decency.[182] The "decency" exception in the New York visitation guidelines might mean that a prison official could try to deny you physical contact with your same-sex partner. If prison officials try to prevent you from engaging in the same physical contact with your partner that heterosexual prisoners are allowed to engage in, you may have a valid claim under both federal and state law.[183]

(a) New York's Family Reunion Program

Currently, New York has a Family Reunion Program that allows close family members a chance for more private visits with prisoners.[184] Unfortunately, the program only applies to close relatives and spouses who are in legal marriages and so does not apply to same-sex partners.[185]

Because of the way the law is written, partners of homosexual prisoners are not eligible for the Family Reunion Program. New York state courts have upheld treating prisoners differently based on whether or not they are married,[186] but these cases generally involve treatment of heterosexual, unmarried prisoners. No challenge to the Family Reunion Program by homosexual partners based on federal or New York law has been reported to date. If you are a homosexual prisoner with a domestic partner who is being denied visitation under the Family Reunion Program, it might be worth contacting one of the impact litigation groups listed at the end of this Chapter about possible federal or state equal protection claims.

(b) New York City's Domestic Partnership Laws

Unlike the rest of New York state and the federal government, New York City's Domestic Partnership Law requires city correctional facilities to give registered domestic partners of prisoners the same visitation rights as those granted to married couples.[187] This not only means that your domestic partner can visit you under the same rules governing married couples but also that domestic partners may visit other family members in the same way that heterosexual spouses may.

Very little case law involving the Domestic Partnership Law exists. This may reflect the fact that prisons are treating domestic partners in the same manner as heterosexual spouses, or it may reflect the relative newness of the Domestic Partnership Law. At the very least, the law has been upheld under challenges from various opposition groups.[188]

J. Right to Receive LGBT Literature[189]

Under Thornburgh v. Abbott, prisons may restrict your right to receive publications that may cause a threat to the daily operation of the prison. [190] In other words, you may not be able to receive publications if the policy is supposed to address is too remote).

---

181. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 200.4(k) (1995).

182. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 200.4(k)(1)–(4) (1995).

183. See generally Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135–36 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that there is no common-sense basis for prisons to prevent, for safety reasons, displays of affection between same sex couples when a prisoner is openly gay and similar displays of affection are permitted for heterosexual couples).

184. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 220.1 (1995).

185. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 220.3 (1995). Note, however, that the governor of New York issued an executive order on May 14, 2008, requiring all state agencies to recognize same-sex marriages legally performed in other jurisdictions. See Jeremy W. Peters, New York to Back Same-Sex Unions from Elsewhere, N.Y. Times, May 29, 2008, at A1. Though not all agencies have enacted these changes yet, if you married your same-sex partner in Massachusetts, for instance, but are now in prison in New York, you could be eligible for this program.

186. See, e.g., Mary of Oakknoll v. Coughlin, 101 A.D.2d 931, 475 N.Y.S.2d 644 (3d Dept. 1984).

187. Admin. Code of the City of N.Y. § 3-244 (2002).

188. See, e.g., Slattery v. City of New York, 179 Misc. 2d 740, 686 N.Y.S.2d 683 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1999) (holding that New York City had the statutory power to enact the Domestic Partnership Law).

189. For general information about your right to communicate with the outside world, including your rights to engage in non-legal correspondence, your right to communicate with your lawyer, your right to receive non-gay publications, your right to have access to news media, and your access to visitation while in prison, see JLM, Chapter 19.

190. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459 (1989). Note that the Thornburgh standard has replaced the previous and more relaxed standard articulated in Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 94 S.

the prison administration decides that the publication could cause problems with security, order, or discipline. This rule has posed special problems for LGBT prisoners.

1. Sexually Explicit Material with Homosexual Content

(a) Federal Prisons

In Thornburgh, the Supreme Court found constitutional a federal prison regulation that gave prison officials discretion to withhold from prisoners—among other types of mail—sexually explicit publications, if they reasonably believed that those publications posed a threat to prison order or security.[191] The Thornburgh Court also upheld as constitutional a 1985 Bureau of Prisons program statement that, in providing guidance on the meaning of the term "sexually explicit," specifically listed "homosexual (of the same sex as the institution population) material" as material a warden could decide not to allow prisoners to receive. The Court justified its decision on two grounds: (1) "homosexual" material would, once in the prison, circulate and lead to "disruptive conduct"; and (2) if prisoners observed a fellow prisoner reading such material, they might draw inferences about the prisoner's sexual orientation and "cause disorder by acting accordingly."[192] After Thornburgh, then, all sexually explicit material is potentially censorable, but it is even easier and more defensible for a warden to censor homosexual sexually explicit material.

Note that the holding in Thornburgh does not necessarily mean that you may never receive publications with explicit homosexual sexual content while in prison. The Thornburgh Court merely held that a warden may exercise discretion to restrict your access to such material. The decisions of different wardens will result in different regulations in different prisons.

Further, though federal regulations allow the censorship of heterosexual sexually explicit material and several courts have, since Thornburgh, upheld restrictions on such material,[193] if wardens in the prison where you are incarcerated are exercising their discretion selectively (for example, allowing prisoners to receive heterosexual explicit material and not homosexual explicit material), you may be able to bring a claim under Section 1983 to challenge this conduct on equal protection grounds.[194] If a warden in a federal prison is censoring homosexual content and not heterosexual content, keep in mind how some of the cases from earlier in this Chapter might help you make an equal protection challenge. First, it is not clear whether courts will allow prisons to make life more difficult for you simply because other prisoners dislike your sexual orientation.[195] Second, if you are openly gay, lesbian, or bisexual already, the warden will have a

---

Ct. 1800, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1974). Therefore, cases decided before 1989 are unlikely to be helpful to you because courts will probably only take into account precedent decided under the currently prevailing Thornburgh test.

191. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989).

192. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 412–13, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 472–73 (1989). Other courts have upheld similar state prison policies on the grounds that pornographic material leads to security risks. See, e.g., Frost v. Symington, 197 F.3d 348, 357–58 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding prison regulation banning sexually explicit materials depicting sexual penetration on grounds that such material could lead to sexual harassment of female guards); Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1060 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding regulations prohibiting prisoners from possessing sexually explicit materials on grounds that regulation was "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests"); Allen v. Wood, 970 F. Supp. 824, 831 (E.D. Wash. 1997) (granting defendant prison's motion for summary judgment on ground that prison regulations prohibiting certain sexually explicit materials satisfied the reasonable relation standard).

193. See, e.g., Frost v. Symington, 197 F.3d 348, 358 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that a prison's restrictions on a prisoner's possession of images depicting heterosexual penetration did not violate the prisoner's 1st Amendment rights); Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1060 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding regulation prohibiting prisoners from possessing sexually explicit materials on grounds that regulation was "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests"); Amatel v. Reno, 156 F.3d 192, 202 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding that regulation banning use of Bureau of Prisons funds to distribute sexually explicit material to prisoners was reasonable means of advancing penological interests); Snelling v. Riveland, 983 F. Supp. 930, 936 (E.D. Wash. 1997) (rejecting prisoner's claim that prison policy banning receipt of written or graphic sexually explicit material violated his 1st Amendment rights), aff'd, 165 F.3d 917 (9th Cir. 1998).

194. The state could counter such a claim by showing that it has a rational basis for its regulation; for example, that explicit material depicting men engaged in sexual acts with each other is more likely to lead to "disorder" in an all-male prison than is material depicting heterosexual acts because the acts depicted in the heterosexual material cannot be performed in prison the same way that the acts in the homosexual material can.

195. See Watkins v. U.S. Army, 875 F.2d 699, 729–30 (9th Cir. 1989) (showing that, under Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429, 104 S. Ct. 1879, 80 L. Ed. 2d 421 (1984), the court is unwilling to allow the Army to use the private prejudice of heterosexuals as grounds for discriminating against homosexuals, even for their protection).

difficult time justifying a decision based on the idea that other prisoners who observe you reading homosexual magazines would make life more difficult for you.[196]

Finally, in 1999, the Bureau of Prisons issued a new Program Statement to replace the one addressed by the Thornburgh Court. The new Program Statement does not include "homosexual" in the list of types of sexually explicit material the warden may reject, as the 1985 Program Statement did. A court could still allow censorship of sexually explicit homosexual material if the prison could demonstrate legitimate penological justifications for restricting the material. However, it would not be as easy for the court as it was when "homosexual material" was enumerated in the Program Statement. A prisoner challenging a warden's decision to restrict his access to sexually explicit homosexual publications, then, might have a stronger case under the new Program Statement than under its predecessor.

(b) State Prisons

Regulations governing many state prisons also contain provisions that permit censorship of sexually explicit homosexual material, and state courts have similarly found state prisons' regulations prohibiting explicit homosexual literature to be constitutional.[197] For example, the New Hampshire Department of Corrections Policy and Procedure Directive governing prisoner mail service in New Hampshire State Prisons bans "[o]bscene material, including publications containing explicit descriptions, advertisements, or pictorial representations of homosexual acts, bestiality, bondage, sadomasochism, or sex involving children."[198]

2. Non-Sexually Explicit LGBT Publications

(a) Federal Prisons

The 2003 Program Statement on incoming publications, elaborating on the Federal Bureau of Prisons regulations, provides that "[s]exually explicit material does not include material of a news or information type. Publications concerning research or opinions on sexual, health, or reproductive issues, or covering the activities of gay rights organizations or gay religious groups, for example, should be admitted unless a threat to legitimate institution interests."[199] This language seems to indicate that you should be allowed to receive a wide variety of LGBT publications with political, religious, social, and fictional content while you are in prison. Because prejudice against LGBT people often creates the view that everything about sexual orientation is sexual, and anything related to homosexuality is about sex, even if it explicitly is not, prison wardens may attempt to keep you from receiving issues of magazines such as The Advocate or Out on the grounds that they are sexually explicit. Under the 2003 Program Statement quoted above, such conduct in federal prisons is impermissible and open to challenge.[200]

(b) State Prisons

The right of prisoners to receive non-sexually explicit LGBT publications in state prisons is less clear and possibly less strong than in the federal context.[201] Most states do not have statements similar to the 196. See Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding prison officials could not justify a discriminatory policy based on protecting prisoner from rumors of his homosexuality where prisoner was already "out" in prison).

---

197. See Willson v Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 790–91 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (upholding prison supervisor's denial of plaintiff's sexually explicit homosexual literature, claiming a legitimate penological interest in prison security).

198. Lepine v. Brodeur, No. CV 97-72-M, 1999 WL 814277, at *5 (D.N.H. Sept. 30, 1999) (unpublished) (finding prison regulations forbidding prisoners from receiving pornographic publications depicting homosexual intercourse constitutional).

199. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5266.10, Incoming Publications 4 (2003).

200. It is worth mentioning that publishers also have 1st Amendment rights regarding subscribers' ability to receive publications in prison. This can become important in the prison context because, unlike prisoners, publishers are not subject to the Prison Litigation Reform Act and its exhaustion procedures and fee caps, and so would be able to sue the prison more freely.

201. See, e.g., Harper v. Wallingford, 877 F.2d 728, 730 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that prisoner's 1st Amendment rights were not violated when a non-sexually explicit membership application and organization bulletin for the North American Man/Boy Love Association was withheld from him, primarily because the materials posed a threat to the prisoner's safety, since if the prisoner was seen reading the material by other prisoners and presumed to be gay, he might be "subject to violent attacks from inmates"); Espinoza v. Wilson, 814 F.2d 1093, 1099 (6th Cir. 1987) (finding that censorship was justified because homosexual activity had presented security problems at prison in the past and federal one, and the discretion given to prison officials in Thornburgh v. Abbott may result in many different decisions and regulations even within the same state.[202]

K. Conclusion

Being lesbian, gay, bisexual, or transgender can make the experience of incarceration especially hard, and the lack of case law involving prisoners who are LGBT may make you hesitant to bring a claim due to uncertainty about how a court will rule on it. Contact the legal organizations in the Appendix for help with your case and send information about the challenges you face in prison to the non-legal advocacy groups listed there. You are in a better position than anyone else to educate LGBT activists about the challenges LGBT prisoners face so that they can better advocate for laws and policies that will improve your situation.

homosexual publications posed a danger to institutional security); Willson v. Buss, 370 F. Supp. 2d 782, 787–90 (N.D. Ind. 2005) (finding prisoner did not have right to receive two gay advocacy magazines, although lacking in sexually explicit material, and that the prison regulation banning "blatant homosexual materials" was constitutional).

202. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 417 n.15, 190 S. Ct. 1874, 1883 n.15, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 475 n.15 (1989) (noting that "[t]he exercise of discretion called for by these regulations may produce seeming 'inconsistencies' ... [but that given the] likely variability within and between institutions over time ... greater consistency might be attainable only at the cost of a more broadly restrictive rule").

APPENDIX A

LGBT RESOURCES

American Civil Liberties Union Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender & AIDS Project
125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004
(212) 549-2627

Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders (GLAD)
30 Winter Street, Suite 800
Boston, MA 02108
(617) 426-1350
GLAD is a public interest legal organization working to defend and expand the rights of gay men, lesbians, bisexuals, transgender individuals and people with HIV. GLAD responds to over 3,000 requests for information and assistance each year and litigates impact cases.

Gay Men's Health Crisis
119 West 24th Street, 7th Floor
New York, NY 10011
Hotline: 1-800-AIDS-NYC (1-800-243-7692)
Legal Services and Advocacy: (212) 367-1040.

Immigration Equality
40 Exchange Place, 17th Floor
New York, NY 10005
(212) 714-2904
Immigration Equality is a coalition of immigrants, lawyers and other activists providing education, outreach, legal services, information and referrals, to combat discrimination in immigration law.

Lambda Legal Defense & Education Fund
National Headquarters
120 Wall Street, Suite 1500
New York, NY 10005
(212) 809-8585

Western Regional Office
3325 Wilshire Boulevard, Suite 1300
Los Angeles, CA 90010
(213) 382-7600

Midwest Regional Office
11 East Adams, Suite 1008
Chicago, IL 60603
(312) 663-4413

Southern Regional Office
730 Peachtree Street, NE, Suite 1070
Atlanta, GA 30308
(404) 897-1880

South Central Regional Office
3500 Oak Lawn Avenue, Suite 500
Dallas, TX 75219
(214) 219-8585
Lambda is a national organization committed to achieving full civil rights of lesbians, gay men, and people with HIV/AIDS through impact litigation, education, and public policy work.

National Center for Lesbian Rights
870 Market Street, Suite 370
San Francisco, CA 94102
(415) 392-6257
NCLR is a progressive, feminist, multicultural legal center devoted to advancing the rights and safety of lesbians and their families through direct litigation and advocacy.

National Gay and Lesbian Task Force
National Headquarters
1325 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Suite 600
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 393-5177

New York Office
80 Maiden Lane, Suite 1504
New York, NY 10038
(212) 604-9830
NGLTF is a national progressive organization working for the civil rights of gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender people.

Sylvia Rivera Law Project
147 W. 24th St., 5th Floor
New York, NY 10011
(212) 337-8550
Toll Free: 1-866-930-3283
Sylvia Rivera Law Project fights discrimination against gender non-conforming people, particularly intersex and transgender people, and focuses on people of color and poor people.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 31: Security Classification and Gang Validation

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 31

SECURITY CLASSIFICATION AND GANG VALIDATION*

A. Introduction

Upon entering the prison system, all prisoners are assigned a security classification, which is reevaluated regularly. Your security classification largely determines where you are incarcerated and what sort of treatment you receive while in prison. A lower security classification is better because it means that you have more freedoms and fewer restrictions. You can think of gang validation as a subset of security classification. Gang validation is the process that prison officials use to identify prisoners that they suspect of being members of gangs or "Security Threat Groups" ("STGs"). If you have been validated as a member of a gang, it means that prison officials have classified you as someone who poses a particular security risk and you may be isolated from other prisoners.

Part B of this Chapter discusses general security classification. It starts with a description of the guidelines for prisoner classification in the Federal Bureau of Prisons ("BOP") and in New York State, California, and Florida, and then explains of some of the legal challenges that prisoners have raised to classification decisions in the past. Keep in mind that these challenges have been largely unsuccessful. Part B ends with a description of administrative options for challenging a particular security classification. Part C outlines gang validation and begins with a general discussion of the process, followed by a summary of the ways that prisoners have used the Fourteenth Amendment, the Eighth Amendment, the Fifth Amendment, and equal protection claims to challenge their validation as gang members. Because these legal challenges have been largely unsuccessful, the Chapter concludes with some suggestions for challenging gang validation using administrative options.

B. General Security Classification

1. Introduction

In all states, you will be assigned a security classification shortly after entering the prison system. This Chapter focuses on the classification guidelines operating in the Federal Bureau of Prisons, in New York's Department of Correctional Services ("DOCS"), in California's Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation ("CDCR"), and in Florida's Department of Corrections ("FDOC"). It also focuses on attempts that prisoners have made to challenge their classification under these guidelines in court. Most other state prisons use similar classification systems to evaluate prisoners in terms of both public and private risk. Courts in most jurisdictions, including New York, California, and Florida are reluctant to interfere in what they view as a prison's internal administrative matters. However, you should investigate the details of your own state's procedures.

You should be able to obtain a copy of the classification manual for the system in which you are incarcerated. The classification manual should allow you to verify that the criteria used to evaluate you are accurate. However, in some states, such as New York, the classification manual is primarily a set of guidelines for entering data into a computer program. Without access to that computer program, the classification manual will not be very useful, although you may still find it helpful to examine the classification criteria in greater detail.

2. Federal Bureau of Prisons Classification Guidelines[1]

(a) Security Level Score

In the federal prison system, new prisoners are assigned a security level score by a Community Corrections Manager in the Bureau of Prisons ("BOP"). This score is used by Regional and Central Office Designators to assign new prisoners to an institution with a corresponding level of security, as determined by the security measures in place at the institution.[2]

---

* This Chapter was revised by Romie Barriere, based in part on previous versions by Ben Van Houten and Daniel Green. Thanks to John Boston for his valuable feedback.

1. The Federal Bureau of Prisons classification guidelines are documented in U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5100_008.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

2. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security

Approximately seven months after a prisoner arrives at the institution, he will have his first program review following initial classification. At this time, the prisoner will be given a custody classification score. This score refers to how much staff supervision is required for the prisoner within and beyond the confines of the institution. It determines, among other things, the types of work assignments and activities that a prisoner may participate in, and the level of staff supervision required.[3] Note that the custody level score is different from the security level score, which is used to match a prisoner with a specific type of institution based on the institution's security features.

A prisoner's custody classification must be reviewed at least every twelve months and is usually reviewed at the same time as program reviews.[4] Additionally, a prisoner's security level and custody level will usually be reviewed when a new sentence is imposed, when a sentence is reduced, when a disciplinary action occurs, or when there is a "change in external factors" that "might affect the security or custody level."[5]

The calculation of a new prisoner's security level score is based on the prisoner's Pre-Sentence Investigation Report ("PSI"), a copy of the judgment from the prisoner's case, and the Individual Custody and Detention Report provided by the U.S. Marshals Service. Where no PSI has been prepared, a Post-Sentence Investigation Report will be prepared. In some cases, a Magistrate Information Sheet may be used. The BOP has identified several factors that are considered in the determination of the security level score:

(a) The "level of security and supervision the inmate requires";
(b) The "level of security and staff supervision the institution is able to provide";
(c) The prisoner's program needs (including substance abuse, medical/mental health treatment, educational training, group counseling and other programs); and
(d) Various administrative factors, including the level of overcrowding in an institution, its distance from the prisoner's release residence, and any recommendations that the judge may have offered.[6]

In considering these factors, the BOP uses a detailed scoring system including elements based on the severity of the current offense, any past offenses, and other relevant details. Scores in various elements are entered into a database known as SENTRY. This database then calculates a prisoner's security level score; for a detailed breakdown of this calculation, you should refer to the BOP Program Statement.

(b) Other Safety Factors

In addition to the scoring system, the BOP may also check if any of eleven "public safety factors" are present in the prisoner's case. These public safety factors are: (1) validated membership in a "disruptive group" identified in the Central Inmate Monitoring System (males only); (2) current term of confinement in the "Greatest Severity" range according to the Offense Severity Scale (males only); (3) sex offender status; (4) Central Inmate Monitoring assignment of threat to government official; (5) deportable alien status; (6) remaining sentence length (males only); (7) violent behavior (females only); (8) involvement in a serious escape; (9) prison disturbance; (10) juvenile violence; and (11) serious telephone abuse.[7] If any of these factors are present, they will raise a prisoner's security classification despite a score that would, on its own, produce a lower classification.[8] At maximum, three of these factors will be applied to an inmate. If more than three of the factors apply, those that would provide the greatest public safety and security threat are considered.[9] These factors may be waived at the discretion of the Regional Director.

Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 3, at 3 (2006).

3. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 6, at 1 (2006).

4. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 6, at 1 (2006).

5. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 6, at 1 (2006).

6. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 1, at 1–2 (2006).

7. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 7–10 (2006).

8. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 2, at 4 (2006).

9. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 7 (2006).

In addition, the Regional Director may find that any of eleven "management variables" apply, which would result in a prisoner's placement at an institution that is not at the same security level as the prisoner's security level score.[10] Examples of Management Variables include population management, medical or psychiatric history, and greater security concerns.[11] Management variables generally relate to administrative considerations that might result in a prisoner's placement in a specific institution, while Public Safety Factors are considerations that relate to the BOP's concern with the threat a prisoner poses to society.

Custody classification evaluations are calculated in a similar way, using a scoring system based primarily upon a prisoner's criminal history and behavior within the institution. The warden has discretion to assign a prisoner a custody level different from the one indicated by the scoring system. If this is done, an explanation must be noted on the prisoner's custody classification form. Public safety factors and management variables may be used in this determination.

There are different scoring systems for calculating the security levels of male and female prisoners. Persons under the age of eighteen are not subject to this classification system. In addition, certain special cases have special designation procedures, including military prisoners and some medical or mental health cases. Please consult the Program Statement for a full list of descriptions of these special cases.

3. New York's Classification Guidelines

In New York, new prisoners are assigned an initial classification score at a reception facility. Reclassification hearings occur periodically. In New York State, the initial reclassification screening occurs six months after a prisoner is taken into custody; subsequent reclassifications take place every three months after that.[12] The counselor assigning the classification enters numerical factors into a computer program, which then calculates a score. The information used to determine the factor values comes from evidence presented in the Commitment Paper, the Pre-sentence Report ("PSR"), warrants, the Division of Criminal Justice Services ("DCJS") Summary Case History ("Rap Sheet"), sentencing minutes (when available), your interview, and, if you have served a prior DOCS term, any available Department records of that term.[13] Both official and unofficial documents may be relied upon, though evidence from unofficial documents "should be evaluated in relation to official documents and used where appropriate."[14] If a counselor cannot resolve inconsistencies between documents, the counselor is supposed to use the "most cautious alternative."[15]

New York's Security Classification Guidelines identify two types of security risks: (1) public risk, which is the likelihood that a prisoner will escape and be a danger to the public; and (2) institutional risk, which is the likelihood that a prisoner will be dangerous to staff, other prisoners, or himself while incarcerated. The Guidelines use four main factors to determine public risk: (1) history of criminal violence; (2) history of escape and abscondence (hiding to avoid legal proceedings); (3) time until earliest possible release; and (4) family, employment, school, and military history.[16] The Guidelines identify two main factors that determine institutional risk: (1) family, employment, school, and military history; and (2) institutional disciplinary history.[17]

These characteristics are all evaluated by point scores. The point scores are then combined to produce your security classification. More specific descriptions of each of the characteristics can be found in the State

---

10. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 1 (2006).

11. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5100.08, Inmate Security Designation and Custody Classification Manual, ch. 5, at 3–5 (2006).

12. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-85 (1996). To acquire a copy of this manual, you may need to file a request under the Freedom of Information Act. Please refer to Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," for more information on FOIA requests.

13. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-43 (1996).

14. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-43 (1996).

15. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-43 (1996).

16. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996).

17. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996); see also N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, app. 1-E (2008).

of New York DOCS Classification Manual. The Classification Manual also describes the procedures used for assigning point values and the way in which a score is calculated from these values.[18]

In addition to these main characteristics, you should know that that there are thirty-five additional characteristics that are difficult to assign point values to, or that aren't used very often. These additional characteristics can affect the classification you receive and may qualify you for a higher classification level, even if you a receive point total that might alone produce a lower classification.[19]

You should also be aware that the characteristics for male and female prisoners may have different elements.[20] Male and female prisoners' scores are evaluated against different classification schemes. The elements for minor and adult prisoners may also differ. Finally, there are some cases in which the counselor will feel that the point score does not accurately represent your security risk, and he is permitted to adjust the security classification, although he must provide an explanation for doing so.[21] Most other state prison systems have similar provisions that let a counselor or other official assign you a security classification that differs from the one produced from the scoring system.[22]

4. California's Classification Guidelines

In California, new prisoners are assigned a classification score when they are committed to state prison.[23] This classification determines the type of institution in which the prisoner is placed. In California, there are four levels of prisons. Level 1 houses the least dangerous prisoners, and Level 4 houses the most dangerous. In order to fill out an inmate classification score sheet, a counselor will first review documents, such as probation reports, and then interview the prisoner.[24] A committee will then conduct a hearing to determine your classification.[25] The committee will review the counselor's score sheet and consider various factors during the hearing, including: 1) background information such as your age at first arrest, current prison term, street gang affiliation, mental illness, prior sentences, and prior incarcerations; and 2) your prior behavior while incarcerated.[26] These factors are assigned point scores; your total score will determine your classification. Sometimes, the law requires a mandatory minimum score for certain sentences or crimes, which will replace your score if it is below the mandatory minimum.[27] In other cases, prison officials can adjust your score if necessary for safety or other institutional needs, such as prison overcrowding.[28] A score of 0–18 means placement in a Level 1 institution; a score of 19–27 means placement in a Level 2 institution;

---

18. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1–2 (1996).

19. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-1 (1996).

20. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-3 (1996).

21. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Office of Classification and Movement, Classification Manual, II-3–4 (1996).

22. See, e.g., State of California, Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual §§ 61010.8, 61020.13 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010) (authorizing department officials to depart from the classification scoring system in individual cases); 103 Mass. Code Regs. 420.08(f) (1995) (authorizing override of scored classification level); N.J. Admin. Code § 10A: 9-2.14 (Supp. 2007) (providing for override of the initial classification determined by scoring); Or. Admin R. 291-078-0020(4) (2008) (providing for either decreases or increases in the level of supervision from that determined through the risk assessment score).

23. Cal. Penal Code § 5068 (2008).

24. State of California, Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.9 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010). To acquire a print copy, you may need to file a request under the Freedom of Information Act. Please refer to Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," for more information on FOIA requests.

25. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, §§ 3375–76 (2010).

26. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3375.3 (2010).

27. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3375.3 (2010); see also State of California, Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.11.5 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

28. State of California, Department of Correction & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.8 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

a score 28–51 means placement in a Level 3 institution; and a score higher than 51 means placement in a Level 4 institution.[29]

The committee will reclassify you and recalculate your score at least once a year.[30] When possible, the committee should give you notice before any hearing so that you have time to prepare.[31] At the hearing, the committee will consider two things: 1) your favorable behavior since the last review, such as six month periods without any serious disciplinary actions and six month periods with average or above average performance in certain programs; and 2) any unfavorable behavior since the last review, such as serious misbehavior, assault, possession of a deadly weapon, drug distribution, or starting a riot.[32] Favorable behavior will reduce your score and unfavorable behavior will increase your score. Remember, a lower score means a lower classification and placement in a less secure institution.

5. Florida's Classification Guidelines

In Florida, security classification decisions are made by two groups, the Institutional Classification Team ("ICT") and the State Classification Office ("SCO").[33] The ICT includes the warden or assistant warden, the classification supervisor, and a correctional officer chief, and is responsible for recommending security classifications for prisoners.[34] The State Classification Office is responsible for reviewing recommendations made by the ICT.[35] When a new prisoner arrives, the ICT uses the Custody Assessment and Reclassification computer program ("CARS") to prepare an automated custody classification questionnaire using all available sources to determine the appropriate degree of supervision, including information such as your criminal history and sentence.[36] When the questionnaire is completed, a computer generated numerical score is used to place prisoners in one of five security classification levels (maximum, close, medium, minimum, and community), which are called "custody grades" by the Florida Department of Corrections.[37] The most restrictive custody grade is maximum custody status, which usually refers to prisoners who are sentenced to death.[38] The least restrictive custody grade is a community custody status, which makes a prisoner eligible for placement in a community residential facility.[39] Changes can be made to a prisoner's custody grade for various reasons, including changes in charges due to plea bargaining, public interest concerns, family environment, military record, age, and health.[40] Other factors that may affect your custody status include sex offenses, alien status, escape, and gain time credits.[41] The SCO can also start a new custody assessment when they decide it is "necessary for the safety of the public or the needs of the department."[42]

The ICT will meet to review your custody status, assess your adjustment, and determine whether any changes may be necessary. You are required to appear at any review or assessment unless a documented

---

29. State of California, Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61010.11.7 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

30. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3376(d)(2) (2010); see also State of California, Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 61020.14 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

31. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3375(e) (2010).

32. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3375.4 (2010).

33. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.209 (2009).

34. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.209(3) (2009).

35. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.209(2) (2009).

36. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(2)(b) (2009).

37. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(2)(a) (2009).

38. See Florida Department of Corrections Website, Frequently Asked Questions Regarding Custody, available at http://www.dc.state.fl.us/oth/inmates/custody.html#1 (last visited March 24, 2010).

39. See Florida Department of Corrections Website, Frequently Asked Questions Regarding Custody, available at http://www.dc.state.fl.us/oth/inmates/custody.html#1 (last visited March 24, 2010).

40. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(2)(d) 1–9 (2009).

41. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(2)(h) (2009) (listing the exceptions to the rule that inmates convicted of crimes involving sex acts are not ordinarily eligible for community or minimum custody status); Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(2)(j) (2009) (specifying certain conditions under which alien inmates shall not be assigned to a custody status any lower than close custody); Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(4)(e) (2009) (stating that a prison may alter the regular schedule for assessments and reviews in cases of escape or other unusual occurrences); Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(4)(k) (2009) ("Additional gain time is to be considered at the time of any scheduled or unscheduled review.").

42. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210 (2)(g) (2009).

permanent medical condition makes you unable to participate. You should receive notice at least forty-eight hours in advance unless you have waived your right to notice.[43] Assessments will occur at least every six months for prisoners with three years or less remaining to serve, and every twelve months for prisoners with more than three years remaining. If you are serving a life sentence with no parole, a life sentence with no established release date, or a death sentence, you will receive an assessment and review every twenty-four months.[44] Custody grades can be increased or decreased throughout your sentence. If your behavior is favorable, your custody grade should decrease as the time remaining on your sentence decreases.

6. Classification of Female Prisoners

While many state correctional agencies use the same classification guidelines for male and female prisons, some states, including Idaho, Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio, as well as the Federal Bureau of Prisons, apply different guidelines or weigh factors differently. For example, as stated in Part B(2) of this Chapter, the Federal Bureau of Prisons considers "violent behavior" as a public safety factor for female prisoners only, while factors specific to male prisoners include the severity of the offense, membership in a disruptive group and the remaining length of the sentence. Because there are greater numbers of men in prison, there are also more prisons built for male prisoners. Consequently, in many states, female prisoners with different classification levels are housed together. Female prisoners may also be over-classified or placed in a higher security level than necessary. The majority of classification systems were designed for male prisoners and fail to predict the needs of female prisoners.[45] In 2000, a group of female prisoners intervened in a class action lawsuit against the Michigan Department of Corrections ("MDOC") and were able to reach a settlement concerning the classification of female prisoners. The MDOC agreed to make changes to the classification system as it was applied to female prisoners and to conduct research regarding the changes.[46] If you are considering bringing a similar lawsuit to challenge the use for females of a classification system designed for males, you should read this case closely and consider contacting an advocacy organization such as the Women's Prison Association or the California Coalition for Women Prisoners.[47]

7. Legal Challenges to Classification Decisions

Generally, legal claims made to improve the conditions of imprisonment are filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Because your security classification determines the conditions of your imprisonment, most prisoners who challenge their security classification file their claims under Section 1983. The U.S. Constitution and other federal statutes provide a broad range of individual rights. Section 1983 is a federal statute that protects you from violations of these rights by allowing you to sue the individuals responsible in federal court.[48] It is important to note that there is generally no federal law on the issue of classification, either substantively or as a matter of due process, because these matters are generally governed by state law. You should look to the law of your own state and individual prison regulations, and when it is possible you should always try to have the regulations enforced in state court. You can look to federal court if a state remedy does not exist, or if the federal remedy would override the state remedy.[49]

---

43. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210 (4)(c) (2009).

44. Fla. Admin. Code Ann. r. 33-601.210(4)(c) 1–3 (2009) (specifying the schedules for assessments and reviews).

45. See Patricia L. Hardyman and Patricia Van Voorhis, U.S. Dept. of Justice and The Nat'l Inst. of Corr., Developing Gender-Specific Classification Systems for Women Offenders p. viii (2004) available at http://www.nicic.org/Downloads/PDF/2004/018931.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

46. See Female Prisoners' Portion of Cain Case Settled, 3 Prisoners and Corr. Forum 6, 6–7 (Spring/Summer 2000), available at http://www.michbar.org/prisons/pdfs/spring00.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010) (the Cain settlement agreement included provisions agreeing to: hire an expert to evaluate the type, quantity, or quality of misconducts issued to male and female prisoners; ensure that female prisoners have access to legal assistance; provide an unmonitored telephone to allow prisoners to participate in court ordered hearings; and settle outstanding claims). An unsigned copy of the final settlement agreement in the Cain case is on file in the JLM office.

47. Women's Prison Association, available at http://www.wpaonline.org/ (last visited March 24, 2010); California Coalition for Women Prisoners, available at http://www.womenprisoners.org/ (last visited March 24, 2010). For more information about the settlement, see the earlier class action suit, Cain v. Dept of Corr., 548 N.W.2d 210, 451 Mich. 470 (Mich. 1996).

48. See, e.g., Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172, 81 S. Ct. 473, 476, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 497 (1961) (applying § 1983 to illegal search of civilian home and detention of citizen by police), overruled in unrelated part by Monell v. New York City Dept.. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 695, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978).

49. See, e.g., Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 174, 81 S. Ct. 473, 477, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 498 (1961) (explaining that one aim of § 1983 is to provide a federal remedy where the state remedy, though adequate in theory, was not available in

For detailed instructions on how to file a claim under Section 1983, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of the Federal Law." It is also crucial that you read Chapter 14 of the JLM, on the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). The PLRA requires you to exhaust administrative remedies before filing suit and imposes substantial penalties if you fail to do so.[50]

One possible legal challenge to classification decisions is a due process challenge. The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment protects individuals, including prisoners, from the loss of "life, liberty, or property" at the hands of the government without due process of law.[51] But, the Constitution itself does not provide prisoners the right to be housed at any particular classification level. Therefore a prisoner must rely on state law to create a liberty interest in order to have a valid claim for denial of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment.[52] In 1995, in Sandin v. Conner, the Supreme Court created a new standard for determining whether conditions of imprisonment constitute a due process violation.[53] The new standard emphasizes the nature of the deprivation suffered by the prisoner. You should be careful researching this issue, however, as much of the case law on prisoner classification was decided under an old standard. You must make sure that the cases you research use the current Sandin standard.

In Sandin, the Court held that state-created liberty interests "will be generally limited to freedom from restraint which … imposes atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life,"[54] and that the hardship imposed upon the prisoner must be of "real substance."[55] Following Sandin, courts have been extremely reluctant to find that a particular security classification constitutes a deprivation of a constitutional liberty interest.[56] Prisoners have not been successful in convincing the court that the officials' decision to classify them in a particular way constituted an "atypical and significant" deprivation of liberty. Prisoners have had more success, however, challenging long-term placement in administrative segregation.[57] practice), overruled in unrelated part by Monell v. New York City Dept.. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 695, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978).

---

50. Most importantly, if you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion). For more information on the exhaustion requirement, see Part E of Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."

51. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. For a more detailed discussion of liberty interests and the degree of due process rights owed to prisoners see Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings."

52. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–84, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429 (1995) ("States may under certain circumstances create liberty interests which are protected by the Due Process Clause.").

53. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995) (finding no liberty interest in prisoner's administrative segregation absent atypical, significant deprivation).

54. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995).

55. Generally, hardships of "real substance" involve some physical injury or other deprivation related to an inmate's person. Otherwise, the unfair treatment may not be recognized as a constitutional liberty interest. See, e.g., Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 719 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding due process claim meritless because prisoner had no protectable interest in custodial classification and did not allege physical injury in claim for damages); Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 580 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that under ordinary circumstances administrative segregation will never be grounds for a constitutional claim because it does not constitute deprivation of a constitutional liberty interest).

56. In recent years, a number of circuit courts have addressed the question of classification rights under Sandin and have found a violation of a protected liberty interest in only limited cases. See, e.g., Iqbal v. Hasty, 490 F.3d 143, 161 (2d Cir. 2007), cert. granted, 76 U.S.L.W. 3654 (U.S. Nov. 17, 2008) (holding that a prisoner has a protected liberty interest "only if the deprivation ... is atypical and significant and the state has created the liberty interest by statute or regulation"); Morales v. Chertoff, No. 06-12752, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 31846, at *3–4 (11th Cir. Dec. 27, 2006) (unpublished) (finding that the issue of custodial classification does not implicate an atypical or significant deprivation); Portley-El v. Brill, 288 F.3d 1063, 1065 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding that "administrative and disciplinary segregation are not atypical and significant hardships under Sandin"); Leamer v. Fauver, 288 F.3d 532, 546 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that, "[u]nder Sandin, the mere fact of placement in administrative segregation is not in itself enough to implicate a liberty interest"); Hatch v. District of Columbia, 184 F.3d 846, 856 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (finding that, following Sandin, "a deprivation in prison implicates a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause only when it imposes an 'atypical and significant hardship' on an inmate in relation to the most restrictive confinement conditions that prison officials, exercising their administrative authority to ensure institutional safety and good order, routinely impose on inmates serving similar sentences"); Freitas v. Ault, 109 F.3d 1335, 1337–38 (8th Cir. 1997) (holding that administrative detention and prison transfer do not meet the "atypical and significant hardship" required to implicate a liberty interest).

57. See Giano v. Selsky, 238 F.3d 223, 226 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding that an aggregated period of confinement in administrative segregation of 762 days is a "sufficient departure from the ordinary incidents of prison life to require procedural due process protections under Sandin" (quoting Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 231 (2d Cir. 2000))). In New York, at least, when looking at whether placement in administrative segregation constitutes an "atypical and

One reason it is so difficult to succeed on a Fourteenth Amendment claim is that even where a liberty interest is recognized, a prisoner will still lose his case if the prison's policies satisfy due process (remember that the Fourteenth Amendment does not protect you from any deprivation of liberty, but only those undertaken without due process of law). In Wilkinson v. Austin, the Supreme Court found that prisoners had a protected liberty interest in avoiding placement in a Supermax facility which imposed "atypical and significant hardships" on the prisoners such as twenty three hours in their cells, non-contact visits, and indefinite placement.[58] While the court recognized the liberty interest for prisoners, they still upheld the prison's procedural policies as satisfying due process.[59] The Court also clarified that the liberty interest protected—an interest in avoiding transfer to a higher level of confinement—is not one created by the Constitution, but rather is a product of state policies and regulations.[60]

Classification that affects parole eligibility may also establish a liberty interest. For example, you may have an argument that you would be eligible for parole, were it not for your incorrect classification. In Wilkinson, the court considered the fact that prisoners lost their eligibility for parole while incarcerated at the Supermax facility in addition to the factors listed above and found that together they resulted in atypical and significant hardships.[61]

You may also be able to challenge your classification in state court on the grounds that prison officials gave you an unfair classification based on their evaluation of the information contained in the Commitment Paper, the Pre-Sentence Report ("PSR"), warrants, the DCJS Summary Case History ("Rap Sheet"), sentencing minutes, the interview, or any available Department records of a prior DOCS term. It may be possible to convince the court that some of the information contained in these documents was incorrect, or that a clerical error was made in transferring the information from these documents onto a classification worksheet or into a computer program. If an error like this was made, any security classification derived from them was not only unfair, but also invalid, because it would be based on false information.[62] Be aware that you may face difficulties in obtaining these documents for review, and that you may be unsuccessful in doing so even if you bring the matter to court.[63]

Again, there is generally no federal law in this area, but state law may permit suit based on violations of state law and state-created liberty interests, or prison regulations. Even in state courts, however, it may still be difficult to succeed on your claim. In California, courts have given a great deal of deference to the classification decisions of prison officials, limiting judicial intervention to instances when "actions by prison significant" hardship, federal courts will aggregate separate special housing unit ("SHU") and disciplinary segregation sentences where they constitute a sustained period of confinement. Sims v. Artuz, 230 F.3d 14, 23–24 (2d Cir. 2000). This means they will consider time spent in administrative segregation, regardless of whether it was in a different facility, if the confinement is continuous. In Giano, for instance, the court combined the prisoner's 92-day confinement at one institution with his 670-day confinement at another. Giano v. Selsky, 238 F.3d 223, 226 (2d Cir. 2001).

---

58. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 220, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2393, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 188 (2005).

59. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 230, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2398, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 193 (2005).

60. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 222, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2394, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 189 (2005).

61. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 224, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2395, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 190 (2005) (finding that each factor on its own may not be enough to constitute "atypical and significant hardship" but taken together they do); see also Neal v. Shimoda, 131 F.3d 818, 828–30 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that classification as a sex offender deprived prisoner of a liberty interest where refusing sex offender treatment made one ineligible for parole).

62. Udzinski v. Coughlin, 592 N.Y.S.2d 801, 802, 188 A.D.2d 716, 717 (3d Dept. 1992) (ordering that petitioner's crime and sentence report, upon which his security classification was based, be corrected because Department of Correctional Services employees inaccurately transcribed information from pre-sentence report into their own documents).

63. In New York, N.Y. C.P.L.R. 390.50 (2010) provides for the confidentiality of pre-sentence reports (meaning that such reports "may not be made available to any person or public or private agency"), except where disclosure is permitted or required by statute. Where there is no relevant statutory provision, a prisoner may obtain a copy of the report "upon a proper factual showing for the need thereof." People v. Shader, 233 A.D.2d 717, 717, 650 N.Y.S.2d 350, 351 (3d Dept. 1996). See, e.g., Kilgore v. People, 274 A.D.2d 636, 636, 710 N.Y.S.2d 690, 391 (3d Dept. 2000) (finding petitioner's bare assertion that he required the pre-sentence report in order to properly prepare for an appearance before the Board of Parole is insufficient to constitute a showing of need for the report); cf. Gutkaiss v. People, 49 A.D.3d 979, 979–80, 853 N.Y.S.2d 677, 678 (3d Dept. 2008) (finding that the petitioner had made a proper factual showing entitling him to a copy of the report where "petitioner had notice of an impending hearing before the Board and his presentence report was one of the factors to be considered by the Board in determining his application for release"). Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3375(j) (1)–(2) (2009) (detailing procedures for discussion of presentencing materials and requiring that prisoner's intending to challenge any of the information collected on their intake form provide necessary documentation to support their challenge).

officials are arbitrary, capricious, irrational, or an abuse of the discretion granted those given the responsibility for operating prisons."[64]

8. Administrative Options

Courts generally don't like to interfere with security classification, and therefore the most realistic approach to getting your classification lowered may be through your prison's internal appeals process. Keep in mind that an unsuccessful federal lawsuit could have consequences for you under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA").[65] Additionally, the PLRA requires that you exhaust administrative options before bringing a legal action under Section 1983.[66] Be sure to read Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."

No matter where you are incarcerated, your security classification should be periodically reviewed. You should notify your assigned counselor of any information that you think could impact your security classification, such as a change in your rap sheet. You should also give copies of any relevant documents to your counselor. You will need to research the administrative rules in your prison regarding appeals of security classification. For example, in California you are able to contest classification decisions resulting in adverse effects (such as an increased custody level) during your reclassification hearing, and are then able to appeal your score and hearing results to your prison's Classification Committee.[67]

Finally, if you have exhausted all of the internal administrative options, and you are imprisoned in the state of New York, you can institute an Article 78 court proceeding. Article 78 provides a procedure for challenging administrative decisions in court. Article 78 only applies to the state of New York, but if you are imprisoned elsewhere, you should research whether or not your state has a similar law.[68] For detailed instructions on bringing an Article 78 proceeding, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules." There are very strict rules and time limits to remember when bringing an Article 78 proceeding, so it is important that you read Chapter 22 carefully.

C. Gang Validation

1. Definition and Discussion

Gang validation is the process by which prison officials determine that a prisoner is an associate or a member of a gang or Security Threat Group ("STG"). Once that decision has been made, the prisoner is often "administratively segregated," meaning that he is housed separately from, and receives different treatment than prisoners who have not been validated as gang members or associates. Although the specific procedures vary from state to state, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin all segregate suspected gang members from the rest of the prison population.[69] While a state prison system may use a standard written

---

64. In re Wilson, 202 Cal. App. 3d 661, 667, 249 Cal. Rptr. 36, 40 (Cal. App. 1988) (finding that there was a basis for a prisoner's classification as a sex offender even when the related charges had been dismissed, and therefore officials did not act arbitrarily or capriciously).

65. For example, if you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion). See Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for more information on the PLRA.

66. The Prison Litigation Reform Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e (a) (2006).

67. State of California, Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 62010.4.2.1 (2004), available at http://www.cdcr.ca.gov/Regulations/Adult_Operations/docs/DOM/DOM Ch 6-Printed Final.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

68. See, e.g., Fl. Statutes Ann. §120.68 (2009); Cal. Gov't Code §53069.4 (2009). Similarly to Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, most state statutes contain strict time limitations on when you can challenge administrative proceedings in court, so be sure to read your own state's rules carefully.

69. See Ariz. Dept. of Corr., Dept. Order No. 805, Protective Segregation (2009), available at http://www.azcorrections.gov/Jill_800_805.aspx (last visited March 24, 2010); Cal. Admin. Code tit. 15, § 3341.5 (2008); Colo. Dept. of Corr., Admin. Reg. No. 600-07 (2008), available at https://exdoc.state.co.us/userfiles/regulations/pdf/0600_07.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010); Conn. Dept. of Corr. Admin., Directive No. 6.14 (2008), available at http://www.ct.gov/doc/LIB/doc/PDF/AD/ad0614.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010); Fla. Dept. of Corr., Gang and Security Threat Group Awareness, available at http://www.dc.state.fl.us/pub/gangs/index.html (last visited March 24, 2010); Ill. Admin. Code tit. 20, § 505.40 (2008); 103 Mass. Code Regs. 421.09 (2008), available at http://www.mass.gov/Eeops/docs/doc/policies/421.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010); Mich. Dept. of Corr., Pol'y Directive No. 04.04.113 (2007), available at http://www.michigan.gov/documents/corrections/0404113_216357_7.pdf (last visited definition of what constitutes a gang member, the process for actually proving that someone is a gang member, and the amount of proof required, may vary by state.[70]

Generally, the only way to be declassified as a gang member is to "debrief." "Debriefing" is a process that may involve informing prison officials of the identities and activities of fellow gang members. Debriefing can place the suspected gang member's well-being at risk, and may subject him to retaliation. This Section discusses the problems that individuals who have tried to challenge their gang validation in court have experienced, and offers some suggestions for challenging gang validation through administrative proceedings rather than in court.

California's system of gang validation is one of the most developed and punitive in the country. California has been segregating suspected gang members since at least 1984, and other states have studied California in developing gang validation procedures of their own.[71] In California, and states with similar procedures, you are validated as a gang member if you are found to meet any three of several criteria.[72] These criteria include, but are not limited to: gang tattoos, correspondence to or from known gang members or correspondence that contains references to gang activity, wearing gang colors, association with known gang members, possession of gang-related literature, possession of a photograph of known gang members, and identification by a fellow prisoner as a gang member. Misconduct is not necessarily required for being labeled a gang member.

Florida uses the term Security Threat Group ("STG") which includes "formal or informal ongoing groups, gangs, organization or associations consisting of three or more members who have a common name or common identifying signs, colors, or symbols. A group whose members/associates engage in a pattern of gang activity or department rule violation."[73] Similar to California, a "criminal gang member" in Florida is a person who meets two or more certain criteria. These criteria include, but are not limited to: self-identification as a criminal gang member, identification as a criminal gang member by a parent or guardian, identification by a documented reliable informant, adopting the style of dress of a criminal gang, adopting the use of a hand sign identified as used by a criminal gang, having a tattoo identified as used by a criminal gang, and associating with one or more know criminal gang member.[74]

New York State uses the label "Security Risk Group" and defines a gang, for the purposes of their rules, as "a group of individuals, having a common identifying name, sign, symbol or colors who have engaged in a pattern of lawlessness" such as violence, destruction of property, threats, intimidation, harm, or drug smuggling. Prisoners are prohibited from wearing, possessing, or distributing gang materials or insignia (identifying marks or symbols of the gang) or participating in gang-related activities or meetings.[75]

Most of the case law on gang validation comes from California, where prisoners have been most active in using the courts to challenge their classification as gang members. For that reason, the following discussion addresses claims regarding gang validation that have been filed in California, both in state and federal court. Federal courts have generally not been receptive to prisoner claims, declining to decide whether prisoners have a constitutionally protected "liberty interest" in being classified a particular way. Instead, courts have found that the due process afforded to prisoners by the California system would be sufficient

---

March 24, 2010); Neb. Corr. Servs., Admin. Reg. No. 201.05, available at http://www.corrections.state.ne.us/policies/files/201.05.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010); N.J. Admin. Code tit. 10A, § 5-6.3 (2008); Or. Admin. R. 291-069-0270 (2008); Tenn. Dept. of Corr. Admin., Pol'y No. 404.10 (2007), available at http://www.tennessee.gov/correction/pdf/404-10.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010); Tex. Dept. of Corr., Offender Orientation Handbook 26 (2004), available at http://www.tdcj.state.tx.us/publications/cid/OffendOrientHbkNov04.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010); Wis. Admin. Code DOC § 308.04(2)(d) (2008), available at http://www.legis.state.wi.us/rsb/code/doc/doc308.pdf (last visited March 24, 2010).

70. Claire Johnson et al., Nat'l Criminal Justice Reference Serv., Prosecuting Gangs: A National Assessment (1995), available at http://www.ncjrs.gov/txtfiles/pgang.txt (last visited March 24, 2010).

71. Scott N. Tachiki, Indeterminate Sentences in Supermax Prisons Based Upon Alleged Gang Affiliations: A Reexamination of Procedural Protection and a Proposal for Greater Procedural Requirements, 83 Cal. L. Rev. 1115, 1129 (1995).

72. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1242 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (quoting the California Department of Corrections Operations Manual § 55070.19.2 which requires at least three "original, independent source items of documentation indicative of actual membership" in a gang).

73. See Fla. Dept. of Corr., Frequently Asked Questions- Gangs and Security Threat Group Awareness, available at http://www.dc.state.fl.us/pub/gangs/faq.html (last visited March 24, 2010).

74. See Fla. Dept. of Corr., Frequently Asked Questions- Gangs and Security Threat Group Awareness, available at http://www.dc.state.fl.us/pub/gangs/faq.html (last visited March 24, 2010).

75. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 270.2(B)(6)(iv) (2008).

even if such an interest was found to exist.[76] For this reason, the courts have rejected Fourteenth Amendment claims that classification as a gang member violates a prisoner's right to due process.[77] The courts have also rejected Eighth Amendment claims that the debriefing requirement subjects a prisoner to cruel or unusual punishment,[78] and claims that it violates a prisoner's Fifth Amendment protection from self-incrimination.[79] The courts have generally found that prison officials should be granted broad discretion in such administrative matters, and the California courts have disposed of most gang validation complaints at the summary judgment stage (meaning that the prisoner was not able to reach the full trial stage).

In a recent New York case, a prisoner was unsuccessful in his attempt to challenge his classification as a member of a Security Risk Group ("SRG") based on his being observed greeting another inmate with gang signs. The court in that case found gang validation and classification as a member of a SRG to be "merely an observation tool" that does not result in a loss of liberty.[80]

Before you bring any action, you should consider the possibility that the court where you argue your case will follow the lead of the California courts. You should also consider the implications that dismissal of your case could have for you under the Prison Litigation Reform Act.[81] Finally, before taking any action, it is important that you also read Part B of this Chapter, which is devoted to general security classification and contains additional information that you may find relevant.

2. Fourteenth Amendment Claims

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment protects individuals, including prisoners, from loss of "life, liberty, or property" at the hands of government without due process of law.[82] However, courts in California have found that administrative segregation does not violate the Due Process Clause itself. They have generally determined that it is not necessary to decide whether or not a prisoner has a valid state-created liberty interest in being free from administrative confinement because the due process provided to prisoners by the California system would be sufficient even if this liberty interest were found to exist.[83]

In California, the due process provided in classification and administrative segregation proceedings is considered adequate. The courts have found that California procedures provide the prisoner with some notice of the charges against him. The procedures also provide him with an opportunity to present his views and concerns to the official charged with deciding whether or not to transfer him to administrative segregation. Due process requires that, following a prisoner's administrative segregation, officials must also engage in some sort of periodic review of his confinement.[84] Although prison officials are not required by due

---

76. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished) (finding no due process violation because the prisoner plaintiff received notice of his classification and continuing placement in the security housing unit, and his placement there was based on reliable information), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); Galvaldon v. Marshall, No. C-95-1674-MHP, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21500, at *17–23 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 12, 1997) (unpublished) (finding no due process violation because the prisoner plaintiff had an opportunity to present his views to the Criminal Activities Coordinator, the prisoner's status was based on sufficient and reliable evidence, and his status was given periodic review).

77. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); Galvaldon v. Marshall, No. C-95-1674-MHP, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21500, at *17–23 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 12, 1997) (unpublished).

78. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *25–26 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished).

79. Griffin v. Gomez, No. C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *17–19 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, No. 95-16684, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 3152 (9th Cir. Feb. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *23–24 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *15 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished).

80. Arriaga v. City of New York, No. 06 Civ. 2362 (PKC) (HBP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41433, at *20–21 (S.D.N.Y. May 20, 2008) (unpublished).

81. For example, if you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed rather than stayed (held pending exhaustion). See Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for more information on the PLRA.

82. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. For a more detailed discussion of liberty interests and the degree of due process rights owed to prisoners, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

83. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); Galvaldon v. Marshall, No. C-95-1674-MHP, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21500, at *17–23 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 12, 1997) (unpublished).

84. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *11 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *13 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) process to provide the names of their sources of information in validating a suspected gang member, if they fail to do so, the record must contain a prison official's statement that safety considerations prevented the disclosure of the informant's name.[85]

The Ninth Circuit has found that the Due Process Clause does not require:

(1) Detailed written notice of charges;
(2) Representation by counsel or counsel-substitute;
(3) An opportunity to present witnesses;
(4) A written description of the reasons for placing the prisoner in administrative segregation; or
(5) The disclosure of the identity of any person providing information leading to the placement of the prisoner in administrative segregation.[86]

Placement in segregation for an indeterminate period based upon gang membership does not require any procedure or protections beyond those required in regular administrative segregation cases.[87] However, a prisoner may not be confined separately for gang affiliation unless the record contains some factual information from which prison officials can reasonably conclude that the information supporting segregation is reliable.[88] In California, under statute, information is considered reliable if one of the following five criteria is met:

(1) The confidential informant has previously given information that has proven to be true;
(2) Other confidential sources have independently provided the same information;
(3) Other information provided by the confidential informant is self-incriminating;
(4) Part of the information provided is corroborated (confirmed) through investigation or information by non-confidential sources; or
(5) The confidential informant is the victim.[89]

Finally, a further due process related claim that you might make is that your validation as a gang member has been made in retaliation for some other unrelated legal activity that you have engaged in, such as filing an appeal. To state the prima facie case,[90] you have the burden of showing that retaliation for the exercise of protected conduct was the "substantial" or "motivating" factor behind the prison officials' conduct.[91] Additionally, you must show that the retaliatory action did not advance legitimate prison

---

(unpublished), aff'd , No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); see also Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 477 n.9, 103 S. Ct. 864, 874 n.9, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 692 n.9 (1983) (noting that prison administrators must engage in some sort of periodic review of whether the prisoner remains a security threat), as modified by Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1995).

85. See Zimmerlee v. Keeney, 831 F.2d 183, 186 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding that due process requires the affirmative statement of a prison official where safety considerations prevent the disclosure of the informant's name and additional facts to show that the information was reliable); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *16 n.6 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished) (finding that prison officials must include a statement that the informant's name was not included for safety purposes), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished).

86. Toussaint v. McCarthy, 801 F.2d 1080, 1100–01 (9th Cir. 1986); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *9 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *13 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished).

87. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *8–9 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished) (citing Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1275 (N.D. Cal. 1995)).

88. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *9 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished) (citing Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1274 (N.D. Cal. 1995)); see also Koch v. Lewis, 96 F. Supp. 2d 949, 965 (D. Ariz. 2000) (noting that there must be some reliable evidence of current gang/STG membership before the state may impose indefinite administrative segregation), vacated as moot, Koch v. Schriro, 399 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2005)*; accord, Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that there must be specific facts to support administrative segregation based on gang membership). *Contra, Austin v. Wilkinson, 372 F.3d 346, 356 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding there is no procedural due process requirement of recent gang activity, though there might be a substantive requirement), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 545 U.S. 209, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174 (2005).

89. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3321(c) (2010).

90. To state a prima facie case is to state sufficient facts to allow the judge or jury to find in your favor if everything you said is true and undisputed.

91. Koch v. Lewis, 96 F. Supp. 2d 949, 956 (D. Ariz. 2000), vacated as moot, Koch v. Schriro, 399 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2005). See Chapter 24 of the JLM, "Your Right To Be Free from Assault," for more information on your rights against retaliation.

management or prisoner treatment goals (referred to as "penological goals"),[92] or was not "narrowly tailored" enough to achieve such goals. Arbitrary targeting of inmates for gang validation is not an action that is narrowly tailored to achieve legitimate penological goals. For example, you might try to argue that gang validations without good cause actually misdirects prison resources away from other proceedings and compromises prison security.[93] Once you have established a prima facie case of retaliation and demonstrated that the retaliatory action does not advance a legitimate penological goal, the burden shifts to the prison officials to establish that they would have validated you as a gang member even if you had not engaged in the legally protected conduct.

3. Eighth Amendment Claims

The Eighth Amendment of the Constitution prohibits "the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain"[94] and punishment that is "grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime."[95] California courts have rejected the argument that the debriefing process[96] constitutes an Eighth Amendment violation because it could subject a prisoner to retaliation from other gang members, thereby placing his life and well-being at risk. They have generally found this allegation to be speculative, and courts will not allow this argument to go forward without evidence of a particular threat to the prisoner bringing the case, or without evidence that prison officials are not concerned about the prisoner's well-being.[97]

4. Fifth Amendment Claims

The Fifth Amendment of the Constitution provides that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."[98] Debriefing generally requires a prisoner to disclose information regarding himself and other gang members and their gang-related activities. Prison administrators have argued, and courts have agreed, that debriefing is necessary to determine whether a prisoner is telling the truth about no longer being a part of the gang. It has also been argued that debriefing helps to determine if a gang member's information is reliable and to gather further information about the gang.[99]

California courts have held that the Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination is not violated by the debriefing requirement, because the information acquired in debriefing is not (under California's policy) used in later criminal proceedings.[100] Courts have held that the right against self-incrimination "does not arise in the debriefing processing," and therefore that prison officials are not

---

92. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," and Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison," for more information on the "legitimate penological goals" language and the Turner standard.

93. See, e.g., Koch v. Lewis, 96 F. Supp. 2d 949, 956 (D. Ariz. 2000) ("instituting STG proceedings without good cause would misdirect prison resources away from proceedings involving a legitimate compromise to prison security"), vacated as moot, Koch v. Schriro, 399 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2005). While an argument of wasting prison resources was effective in Koch, many other courts have held that gang validation supports the goal of prison security. See., e.g., Stewart v. Alameida, 418 F.Supp.2d 1154, 1163 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (finding the prison's regulations on gang validation did not violate the prisoner's rights because the regulations were reasonably related to the valid penological interest of security).

94. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68 (1981) (quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 875 (1976)).

95. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68 (1981) (quoting Coker v. Georgia, 433 U.S. 584, 592, 97 S. Ct. 2861, 2866, 53 L. Ed. 2d 982, 989 (1977) (plurality opinion)).

96. For more on debriefing, see Part C(4) of this Chapter.

97. Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *26 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished).

98. U.S. Const. amend. V.

99. Griffin v. Gomez, No C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *5 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, No. 95-16684, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 3152 (9th Cir. Feb. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 (CW), 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *22 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 (TEH), 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *15 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished).

100. Griffin v. Gomez, No C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *8–11 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, No. 95-16684, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 3152 (9th Cir. Feb. 24, 1998) (unpublished); Castañeda v. Marshall, No. C-93-03118 CW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4612, at *23–24 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 10, 1997) (unpublished), aff'd, No. 97-15538, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 8184 (9th Cir. Apr. 20, 1998) (unpublished); Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *16 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished).

required to provide prisoners with immunity.[101] Remember that the right against self-incrimination is a personal protection and may not be invoked to prevent the implication of others, such as other people involved in the gang.

Keep in mind, however, that as a California prisoner, the policies surrounding debriefing provide you with only thin protection. Although the regulations state that debriefing is "not for the purpose of acquiring incriminating evidence against the subject,"[102] they do not explicitly forbid the evidence being used in later legal proceedings. Partly as a result of prisoners challenging the debriefing process, the regulations also provide that if a prisoner "makes a statement that tends to incriminate [himself] in a crime," he must waive his right against self-incrimination "prior to questioning ... about the incriminating matter."[103] However, the prison official or gang investigator conducting the debriefing determines when a statement "tends to incriminate," and the debriefing prisoner has no attorney or representative present at the debriefing. If you are currently appealing your conviction or sentence and considering debriefing, you should talk to your appellate attorney about the possible implications debriefing may have on your appeal.

If you are not in California, it may be worth investigating whether or not the system in which you are incarcerated has a policy regarding the use of information gathered through gang debriefings in future criminal proceedings. If it does not have such a policy, then the debriefing requirement may present a valid Fifth Amendment issue.

5. Equal Protection and Free Exercise of Religion Claims

To prevail on an equal protection claim, a prisoner usually must prove: (1) that the government has intentionally treated similarly situated prisoners differently; and (2) that there is no rational relationship between this dissimilar treatment and any legitimate penal interest.[104] This standard is frequently called "rational basis review." Rational basis review is the lowest level of scrutiny applied by courts. Prisoner challenges to classifications usually fail because officials only need to show that the action is rationally related to a legitimate government interest. If, however, you are alleging that you were treated differently than other, similarly situated prisoners because of your race, some courts, including California, will apply "strict scrutiny" to the government's policy. "Strict scrutiny" is a significantly higher standard than "rational basis review," and therefore more difficult for the government to meet (and more favorable to prisoners). To survive "strict scrutiny," the government must prove that the treatment you are challenging both: (1) promotes a compelling state interest; and (2) is narrowly or suitably tailored to that interest.[105]

An example of a policy of different treatment based on race was found in Johnson v. California.[106] In Johnson, the court applied a strict scrutiny standard of review with regard to the prison's policy of placing new or transferred inmates with cellmates of the same race during the initial sixty-day evaluation period. In Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, however, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals held that a prison's decision to designate a prisoner as a member of a Security Threat Group without a hearing did not involve different treatment based on race.[107] The court in Harbin-Bey held that this policy applied to all inmates and therefore was not a decision based on race.[108] For a more information on Equal Protection claims you should see Chapter 16 of the *JLM, "*Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

---

101. Griffin v. Gomez, No. C-92-1236 EFL, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9263, at *19 (N.D. Cal. June 29, 1995) (unpublished), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, No. 95-16684, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 3152 (9th Cir. Feb. 24, 1998) (unpublished).

102. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3378.1(b) (2010).

103. Cal. Code Regs. tit. 15, § 3378.2 (2001).

104. Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 576 (6th Cir. 2005); see Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (establishing the "legitimate penological interests" test).

105. Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 505, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1146, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 958 (2005); see also Parents Involved in Cmty. Sch. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1, 551 U.S. 701, 720, 127 S. Ct. 2746, 2752, 168 L. Ed. 2d 517, 523 (2007) (using the strict scrutiny standard in the context of race-conscious student assignment policies designed to eliminate racial imbalances in school enrollment); Jana-Rock Construction, Inc. v. N.Y. State Dept. of Econ. Dev., 438 F.3d 195, 205 (2d Cir. 2006) (clarifying that extrinsic showing of discriminatory animus or effect is not necessary to trigger strict scrutiny).

106. Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 505, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1146, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 958 (2005). But see Medina v. Gomez, No. C-93-1774 TEH, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12208, at *19 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 14, 1997) (unpublished) (holding that debriefing (a procedure in which an inmate was held in administrative segregation unless he renounced his gang membership) neither "burdens a fundamental right nor targets a suspect class," and was therefore subject to only rational basis and not strict scrutiny review).

107. Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 576 (6th Cir. 2005).

108. Harbin-Bey v. Rutter, 420 F.3d 571, 576 (6th Cir. 2005).

You may be able to argue that the debriefing policy makes it hard to practice your religion. However, these types of claims have failed because the policy does not "substantially burden" free exercise of religion.[109] Using the substantial burden test, a district court in California, in Rojas v. Cambra, rejected a challenge where a religious Catholic prisoner argued that the debriefing policy was unconstitutional because it forced him to confess to a person other than a priest. The court held that the policy did not substantially burden the prisoner's religion because the prisoner was not forced to commit any act forbidden by his religion, but instead could refrain from debriefing.[110] For more information on your right to practice your religion see Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison."

6. Administrative Options

Given courts' general hostility toward gang validation claims, the most effective way to challenge classification is probably through administrative procedures within the prison. You should be granted periodic review of your status as an alleged gang member, at which time you should have the opportunity to express your views on your classification. This is your opportunity to ensure that officials are following the proper administrative procedures that the California courts have relied upon in dismissing prisoners' due process claims. For example, as discussed above, all anonymous testimony must be accompanied by an official statement that the identity of your accuser has been withheld for security reasons and that testimony should be as complete as it can possibly be without identifying the source. You should become familiar with the classification procedures so that you can monitor whether they are being followed, deviations from the classification may provide grounds for challenging your classification.

Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures," contains detailed instructions on how to pursue administrative remedies. The focus of Chapter 15 is on the state of New York's Internal Grievance Program ("IGP"), but you will also find information on locating the guidelines and procedures for filing grievances in other states. You may also find Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings," helpful in challenging your classification. Many states separate their disciplinary and classification systems and there may be separate provisions for appealing your classification. It is important that you read the grievance rules carefully so that you can use the correct administrative remedy. Finally, if you have exhausted all of the administrative options and you are imprisoned in the state of New York, you can file an Article 78 proceeding. Article 78 provides a procedure for challenging administrative decisions in court. For instructions on how to bring an Article 78 proceeding, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules."

D. Conclusion

Your security classification is important because it influences where you are incarcerated and what sort of freedoms you will receive. If you have undergone gang validation and been designated a member of a Security Threat Group it may be possible to challenge this designation, although such challenges are difficult to win. While you may have some room to raise a challenge on equal protection grounds if the prison used a race-based policy to classify you in a certain group, you are probably more likely to be successful challenging your security classification through your prison's administrative procedures.

109. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *23 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished).

110. Rojas v. Cambra, No. C 96-2990 VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7610, at *22–23 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 1997) (unpublished).

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 32: Parole

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 32

PAROLE*

A. Introduction

Parole is a system of discretionary release for prisoners who have not yet served their maximum sentences. Parole also refers to the process of your supervised re-integration into the community while you serve the remainder of your sentence outside of prison. Part B provides an overview of the parole system of New York State. Parts C through I examine New York's parole system in detail. Part C explains the calculation of the minimum incarceration period; Part D discusses the Shock Incarceration Program; Part E discusses the sentence of parole supervision; Part F explains parole release hearings; Part G reviews release on parole; Part H covers parole revocation; and Part I discusses release from parole supervision; Part J looks at the parole system of California; Part K considers the Florida state system; Part L examines the Illinois state system; Part M explores the system in Texas; and Part N explains the Michigan parole system. Prisoners in other states must research their own states' laws on parole, as parole laws tend to be very different from state to state and parole has been eliminated altogether in many states. See Chapters 35 of the JLM for information on conditional and early release, and see Chapter 39 for imformation on temporary release programs (available online at http://www.hrlr.org/jlm/toc or write to the JLM).

B. New York

In New York, the Division of Parole is part of the Executive Department and is separate from both the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives and the Department of Correctional Services.[1] The parole law is found in the N.Y. Executive Law § 259 and in Title 9 of New York State Compilation of Codes, Rules and Regulations, Part 8000.[2] The parole law requires the Division of Parole to adopt written guidelines for use in making parole decisions.[3] The Division of Parole also publishes pamphlets, handbooks, and other materials that explain the parole process.

For further information, check with your institution's parole officer, pre-release center, or law library; they should have the New York State Parole Handbook, "Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision."[4] This pamphlet gives the Division of Parole's answers to questions on issues regarding time served, institutional parole and parole board activities in state correctional facilities, parole supervision, the revocation process, the Sentencing Reform Act of 1995, interstate parole, juvenile offenders, restoration of rights, executive clemency, appeals, and access to parole files. If available, you should also review other Division of Parole publications, especially the Guidelines Applications Manual, and look at the laws and regulations themselves.

This Chapter describes the practices and procedures of the Parole Board. Parole has five basic phases:

(1) Determination of your minimum sentence;
(2) Parole release considerations, preparing for your parole hearing, and the hearing itself;
(3) Release on parole and supervision by parole officers;
(4) Constitutional due process protections required in the parole revocation process; and
(5) Release from parole and the restoration of full rights.

---

* This Chapter was written by Mary Beth Myles, based in part on a previous version written by Roslyn R. Morrison. Special thanks to Professor Philip Genty of Columbia Law School for his valuable comments.

1. In New York, the Work Release and Temporary Release programs are run by the Department of Correctional Services. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 150, 851 (McKinney 2010). Probation is handled by the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives. N.Y. Exec. Law § 240 (McKinney 2002). Conditional Release is now administered by the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives and a branch of the Department of Correctional Services called "Local Conditional Release Commission." N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40 (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

2. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000 (2001). The New York Official Compilation of Codes, Rules, and Regulations is in a green three-ring binder, and it should be in your prison library.

3. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-c(4) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). See New York State Division of Parole, Release Decision-Making Guidelines Application Manual (1982). Though the Guidelines are written and codified, the Parole Board is not absolutely bound to follow them.

4. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2007), available at http://parole.state.ny.us/Handbook.pdf.

You can appeal a Parole Board decision in two ways. You must first try the administrative process within the Division. If that fails and you wish to continue, you may then appeal through an Article 78 proceeding in the New York courts.[5] You should know that the courts have adopted an extremely tough test for judicial review of any Parole Board decision. In order for courts to intervene in Parole Board decisions, you must show "irrationality bordering on impropriety on the part of the parole board."[6] Courts rarely find Parole Board conduct wrong enough to intervene.

C. Minimum Term of Incarceration Under an Indeterminate Sentence and Conditional Release Under a Determinate Sentence

If you were given an indeterminate sentence, the sentencing court should have fixed the minimum term you must serve in a state correctional facility before eligibility for release.[7] A sentence is "indeterminate" if a range of minimum and maximum time is specified, rather than a particular number of days or years. Since 1995, New York has been moving away from indeterminate sentencing and discretionary parole release to a system of determinate ("flat") sentences. Determinate sentences are required for persons sentenced as second violent felony offenders after 1995, or first violent felony offenders after 1998.[8] Determinate sentences are also required for felony drug offenders sentenced after 2004.[9] Persons sentenced to a determinate sentence as violent or second violent felony offenders are eligible for conditional release when they have served six-sevenths of their sentence.[10] Persons serving determinate sentences for felony drug offenses are eligible for merit time/conditional release after serving five-sevenths of their sentence.[11]

But, there are three exceptions. First, you may get early parole if you successfully complete a shock incarceration program[12] (described in Part D of this Chapter). Second, you may appear before the Parole Board prior to the expiration of your minimum sentence if you are eligible for "merit time." Most categories of non-violent felonies qualify for merit time.[13] If you are serving a sentence that qualifies and you have earned merit time, you will appear before the Parole Board for release consideration after you have served five-sixths of your minimum sentence.[14] If you are serving an indeterminate sentence for a felony drug offense committed before 2004, you may earn additional merit time and appear before the Parole Board for release consideration after serving two-thirds of your minimum sentence.[15] Third, certain categories of felony drug offenses are eligible for a sentence of parole supervision[16] (described in Part E of this Chapter).[17]

D. Shock Incarceration Program

Shock incarceration is a program under the jurisdiction of the Department of Correctional Services in which selected eligible prisoners participate in a structured six-month program at a Shock Incarceration facility. Shock incarceration is a highly regimented program that requires daily exercise, a full work day,

---

5. For a discussion of Article 78 proceedings, see JLM, Chapter 5, Part C(6), and Chapter 22.

6. In re Russo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 50 N.Y.2d 69, 77, 405 N.E.2d 225, 229, 427 N.Y.S.2d 982, 986 (1980). The Russo standard has been held to be a review of "whether the Board's decision to deny parole was arbitrary or capricious." Silmon v. Travis, 95 N.Y.2d 470, 477, 741 N.E.2d 501, 505, 718 N.Y.S.2d 704, 708 (2000) (holding it not arbitrary or capricious for the Board to consider remorse and insight in denying parole). See Jorge v. Hammock, 84 A.D.2d 362, 364, 446 N.Y.S.2d 585, 587 (3d Dept. 1982) (holding complete disregard of a sentencing judge's recommendation in setting a minimum incarceration period was inappropriate and entitled prisoner to a new hearing).

7. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.00(3) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008). If you were sentenced before September 1, 1980, the Parole Board—instead of the sentencing court—will fix your minimum term. Schwimmer v. Hammock, 59 N.Y.2d 636, 637, 449 N.E.2d 1266, 1267, 463 N.Y.S.2d 188, 189 (1983).

8. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.02, 70.04 (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008). See Part D(1) of this Chapter for a discussion of this law.

9. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.70, 70.71 (Supp. 2008).

10. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(c) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

11. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

12. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 865-867 (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Exec. Law 259-i(2)(e) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

13. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

14. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

15. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

16. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.70(3)(d) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

17. If you complete a shock incarceration program, you are eligible to receive a Certificate of Earned Eligibility under Section 805 of N.Y. Corrections Law. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 805, 867 (4) (McKinney 2010). See Part F(5) of this Chapter for additional information on Certificates of Earned Eligibility.

daily meetings, and substance abuse counseling. Participants are also expected to earn a high school equivalency diploma through the educational programs offered.[18] Generally, participants who successfully complete the program are issued a Certificate of Earned Eligibility and become eligible for parole release consideration prior to completing the court-imposed minimum sentence.[19] See Part F(5) of this Chapter for additional information on Certificates of Earned Eligibility.

A prisoner may make an application to the shock incarceration screening committee for permission to participate in the shock incarceration program.[20] Eligible prisoners are also screened to insure that their participation in the program is "consistent with the safety of the community, the welfare of the applicant, and the selection criteria for the program."[21] Therefore, even if you meet the criteria for the program, you still may not ultimately be chosen to participate.

E. Sentence of Parole Supervision

If you have a history of substance dependence, and abuse of that substance has led you to commit illegal acts, you may be given a sentence of parole supervision (also known as a "Willard Sentence" after the Willard Drug Treatment Center). You are eligible for a sentence of parole supervision only if you satisfy the following three requirements:

(1) You have a substance dependence history that has significantly contributed to your illegal acts;
(2) A sentence of parole supervision would likely help you become or stay drug-free; and
(3) A sentence of parole supervision would not risk "public safety or public confidence in the integrity of the criminal justice system."[22]

Furthermore, you can only be given a sentence of parole supervision for conviction of certain specified crimes.[23] When the court considers whether to give you a sentence of parole supervision, the prosecutor may either agree with or oppose the sentence, and the court is permitted, but not required, to consider the prosecutor's view.

If you receive a sentence of parole supervision, you will be placed under the supervision of the state Division of Parole and will be sent immediately to a reception center for no more than ten days.[24] Once you

---

18. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §1800.6(b) (2008).

19. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

20. N.Y. Correct. Law § 867(1) (McKinney 2010). To be eligible, you must be under the age of 40 and have been at least 16 years old, but less than 40, when you committed the crime for which you are incarcerated. You must be eligible for parole in three years and not have been convicted of a felony with an indeterminate sentence. The commission of certain crimes will also make you ineligible, including but not limited to a violent felony offense, an A-1 felony offense, or rape in the second or third degree. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §1800.4 (2008).

21. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, §1800.3(c) (2008).

22. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(3) (McKinney 2005) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011); People v. Denue, 275 A.D.2d 863, 864, 713 N.Y.S.2d 783, 784 (3d Dept. 2000) (denying petitioner a sentence of parole supervision because he did not show that he had a history of substance dependence that significantly contributed to his criminal conduct or that he was not subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment).

23. The specified crimes are listed in N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(5) (McKinney 2005) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011) and include the following: criminal mischief in the third degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 145.05 (McKinney 1999 & Supp. 2008); criminal mischief in the second degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 145.10 (McKinney 1999); grand larceny in the fourth degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law §§ 155.30(1)–(10) (McKinney 1999 & Supp. 2008); grand larceny in the third degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 155.35 (McKinney 1999) (except where the property consists of one or more firearms, rifles, or shotguns); unauthorized use of a vehicle in the second degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 165.06 (McKinney 1999); criminal possession of stolen property in the fourth degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law §§ 165.45(1)–(3), (5)–(6) (McKinney 1999 & Supp. 2008); criminal possession of stolen property in the third degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 165.50 (McKinney 1999) (except where the property consists of one or more firearms, rifles, or shotguns); forgery in the second degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 170.10 (McKinney 1999); criminal possession of a forged instrument in the second degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 170.25 (McKinney 1999); unlawfully using slugs in the first degree as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 170.60 (McKinney 1999); an attempt to commit any of the aforementioned offenses if such attempt constitutes a felony offense; or any class D or class E controlled substance or marijuana felony offense as defined in N.Y. Penal Law §§ 220.00–220.76, 221.00–221.55 (McKinney 2008). You are only eligible if you are a second felony offender who stands convicted of no other felony offense, have not previously been convicted of either a violent felony offense as defined in N.Y. Penal Law § 70.02, a class A felony offense or a class B felony offense (other than a class B felony offense defined in article 220 of the penal law, which describe a variety of controlled substance offenses), and are not subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(2) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

24. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(1) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

arrive at the reception center, the law requires that you be given a copy of the conditions of your parole, and you will need to acknowledge in writing that you have received a copy of these conditions.[25] Sometime after you leave the reception center, you will be placed in a drug treatment campus for ninety days.[26] While you are at the campus, the Division of Parole will assess your needs and develop a personal drug treatment program. In most cases, this program will include help from local community organizations that work with the Division of Parole.[27] After you have completed the drug treatment program at the campus, you will be given money, clothes, and transportation from the drug treatment campus to the county where your parole supervision and drug treatment plan will continue.[28]

F. Parole Release Hearing and Appeals

1. Your Right to a Parole Release Hearing

The parole release hearing is an interview where the Parole Board determines whether you should be released from prison before you serve your maximum sentence. You are entitled to a parole release hearing at least one month before the end of your minimum period of incarceration.[29] There are some situations in which you may become eligible for parole before you complete your minimum sentence. You may get early parole if you complete a Shock Incarceration program, or if you are eligible for and earn merit time, or if you serve and successfully complete a sentence of parole supervision.[30] (See Parts D and E of this Chapter for a description of the Shock Incarceration Program and the Sentence of Parole Supervision.) You do not have to file for a parole release hearing; one will be scheduled for you automatically. If you believe your scheduled parole release hearing is past due, you can contact the pre-release center or parole officer at your institution.

2. Steps to Take Before the Hearing

The decision to release you on parole is strictly a matter of Parole Board discretion; there is no statutory or constitutional right to parole release.[31] Nevertheless, there are ways you can improve your chances of being released on parole. While you are in prison, the more that you do to prepare for your re-entry into the community, the better your chances become of convincing the Board to release you on parole. As you may know, however, in recent years, the Parole Board has placed heavy emphasis on the seriousness of the crime when making decisions about prisoners who are incarcerated for violent felonies. In addition to the facts and circumstances of the underlying crime, the Parole Board is likely to consider five basic areas:

(1) Education—Did you take any classes while in prison? Those classes might include a GED course, vocational training, or college;
(2) Employment—Did you try to develop any job skills? These could range from making furniture to kitchen work, as long as it is a skill that relates to life and potential employment outside of prison;
(3) Issues That Led to Incarceration—Can you address the problems that led to your conviction? For example, if you are in on a drug use charge, did you participate in any treatment programs?;
(4) Likelihood of Community Reintegration—Have you had any contact with your family or community? Even if you cannot show family ties like letters or visits, developing a contact with a halfway house or an ex-offender service group will help; and
(5) Future Plans and Goals—You should be prepared to discuss your immediate plans and future goals for your life after release on parole.

In short, your activities while you are incarcerated affect your chances for parole.

---

25. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(6) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).
26. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(1) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).
27. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(6) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).
28. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.91(7) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).
29. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(a) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).
30. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).
31. See, e.g., Barna v. Travis, 239 F.3d 169, 171 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that a prisoner does not have a justifiable expectation of release on parole, and that it is up to the Parole Board to determine prisoner eligibility for parole); Boothe v. Hammock, 605 F.2d 661, 664 (2d Cir. 1979) (holding that New York state's statutory scheme of parole did not create entitlement to parole). However, as discussed in Part F(5) of this Chapter, in 1987 New York adopted the Certificate of Earned Eligibility program, which created a presumption in favor of release on parole in certain situations.

As an eligible parole candidate, you must complete what is known as a parole or release plan prior to your parole release hearing. This plan will be part of your Inmate Status Report.[32] The Guidelines describe "release plans" as "including community resources, employment, education and training and support services."[33] One of the most important parts of your parole plan is your proposed course of employment or education after release. If you are granted parole but have not produced a satisfactory plan, your release date will be pushed back until you have developed one. If you wait longer than six months after the release hearing to develop a satisfactory plan, you will have to go before the Parole Board again for reconsideration of your status.[34] Therefore, if you are finding it difficult to develop a parole plan, you must get some help as soon as possible. Otherwise, you risk delaying or losing your parole release.

For help in preparing your parole plan, contact the pre-release center or parole officer at your institution. The parole statute now requires the Division of Parole to "assist inmates eligible for ... parole ... to secure employment, educational or vocational training."[35] In addition to contacting the pre-release center and/or institutional parole officers, you should use any other contacts you have (like former employers, family, or friends) to get a job while still incarcerated. For information on employment in New York City, you can contact the New York State Division of Parole at (518) 473-9400. The Fortune Society is another good source of support that may lead to possible employment. It also offers one-to-one counseling and tutoring. You can write to the Fortune Society at 53 W. 23rd St., 8th floor, New York, NY 10010; or, call (212) 691-7554.

Your institutional record is also an important part of your Inmate Status Report. It will list your program goals and accomplishments, academic achievements, vocational education, training or work assignments, therapy, and relationships with staff and other prisoners.[36] It is important that this information present a favorable image to the Parole Board. However, while it may be helpful to maintain an exemplary prison record to make a good impression on the Parole Board, it is important to note that good conduct alone does not guarantee parole.[37]

To obtain parole, your record and conduct must show the Parole Board that:

(1) You "will live and remain at liberty without violating the law;"
(2) Your release will not harm society; and
(3) You will not "deprecate" the seriousness of the crime you committed (make the crime seem less serious) and undermine respect for the law.[38]

If you have been issued a Certificate of Earned Eligibility (See Part F(5) of this Chapter), the Parole Board will implement a lesser standard of review in determining your parole.[39] Nevertheless, it is a good idea to build the strongest record of education, program participation, and work that you can, since your activities while in prison directly affect this part of the Inmate Status Report.

If the Parole Board grants parole, some prisoners may be required to find acceptable housing prior to being released. The Parole Board's requirements for approved housing may be very difficult (for example,

---

32. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(c)(A)(iii) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3 (2008). New York defines the Inmate Status Report as follows: The Inmate Status Report is prepared by an Institutional Parole Officer and will include information such as: (1) court information on the present offense, the judge's sentence, etc.; (2) your age, place of birth, occupation, marital status, etc; (3) your legal history; (4) your institutional record, including any disciplinary record, your medical history and involvement in educational and recreational programs; (5) your inmate statement, which includes comments and attitude regarding the offense that resulted in your conviction, as well as your comments about your prior record; and (6) your Parole Plan. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 12, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

33. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8001.3(b)(3) (2008).

34. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3(f) (2008).

35. N.Y. Exec. Law §259-a(6) (McKinney 2010).

36. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(c)(A)(i)(McKinney 2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3 (a)(1), (b)(1) (2008).

37. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(c)(A) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

38. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.1(a) (2008).

39. "[P]arole release shall be granted at the expiration of [prisoners'] minimum terms … unless the [Board of Parole] determine[s] that there is a reasonable probability that the inmate will not live and remain at liberty without violating the law and that the release is not compatible with the welfare of society." N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3(c) (2008); see also N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

prisoners may be banned from living near a school or a school bus stop, may not be allowed to live alone, or may not be allowed to live in a shelter).[40]

If you are serving a sentence for a non-violent felony, other than those involving manslaughter, homicide, or sexual misconduct, you may be eligible for presumptive release on parole if you have no serious disciplinary infractions and have not brought a frivolous court proceeding while incarcerated.[41]

3. The Parole Release Hearing

A two or three member panel of the Parole Board conducts the parole release hearing during monthly visits to each facility.[42] Only one member of the panel will review your parole plan in detail. The other panel members will be present at the interview, but will generally defer to the judgment of the member who read the file. Instead of reading the full report, the other panel members will receive a summary of your parole report. The Parole Board members, the facility parole officer and staff, and a hearing reporter will be present at the release interview. You are not permitted to have an attorney with you at this interview.[43]

During the parole release interview, panel members will ask you questions about:

(1) Your plans if you are released on parole;
(2) Your conduct and activities during your incarceration;
(3) Your criminal record, including past crimes and time served; and
(4) The events surrounding the crime for which you are presently incarcerated.

It is important to note that the panel members will consider whether you understand why the crime happened, whether you feel any remorse for the crime, and what you would do differently in the future. You must answer all questions honestly, but be sure to present your side of the story in answering any difficult questions. Remember, if your parole is denied and you want to appeal, the basis for any appeal must appear in the hearing record. So, you must present all your information and reasons for parole at the interview.

Be sure to bring to your release hearing any documents that would make a good impression on the panel members, such as program certificates, diplomas, or letters of recommendation. These should already be in your parole file, but sometimes institutional authorities forget to file them properly.

The Parole Law requires the Parole Board to take into consideration all of the following factors in determining early release on parole:

(1) Your institutional record;
(2) Your academic achievements;
(3) Your training or work assignments;
(4) Any therapy you have had;
(5) Interpersonal relationships with staff and other prisoners;
(6) Your performance, if any, in a release program;
(7) Any release plans involving community resources, education, and training support services;
(8) Any deportation orders;
(9) Any written or oral statement of the crime victim;[44]
(10) The seriousness of the offense for which you are presently incarcerated;
(11) Recommendations of the sentencing court and district attorney;
(12) The recommendation of your attorney at trial;
(13) The pre-sentence probation report;
(14) Any mitigating and aggravating factors;[45]

---

40. See People ex rel. Travis v. Coombe, 219 A.D.2d 881, 881–82, 632 N.Y.S.2d 340, 341–42 (4th Dept. 1995) (holding that parole grantee was not entitled to immediate release, since "[n]o residence was located that was acceptable to the Division of Parole").

41. N.Y. Correct. Law § 806 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

42. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-b(1) (McKinney 2010); New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 2, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html (noting that the Board of Parole "consists of up to 19 members appointed by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate").

43. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 8, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

44. The Parole Board will also consider any statements made on the victim's behalf by a representative.

45. Mitigating factors are circumstances in your crime that make your case more sympathetic or more favorable. Aggravating factors make you or your crime less sympathetic or less favorable.

(15) Activities following arrest and prior to conviction;[46] and
(16) Any prior criminal record.[47]

If the Board fails to consider relevant statutory factors in determining your parole, you may have grounds for appealing the parole decision.[48] But, the Board does not have to give each factor equal weight.[49]

The Board decides whether or not to grant parole either on the day of the hearing or a few days later. Typically, the panel will make a decision immediately after you leave the room. The Parole Board has a large amount of discretion in deciding whether you are eligible for parole. The Parole Board establishes its own guidelines to determine when a prisoner is eligible for parole,[50] and it currently sets a high standard. As the court stated in Barna v. Travis, "the New York parole scheme is not one that creates in any prisoner a legitimate expectancy of release."[51] Even though the Parole Board must consider the above factors, the list is only intended as a guide. In recent years the Board has given particular weight to the factors of crime severity and past criminal history for individuals incarcerated for violent felonies.

4. Victim Impact Statement

A victim impact statement is a written statement to the Parole Board by the crime victim or the victim's family, describing the effect of the crime on the victim's life or on his or her family.[52] The victim or the victim's family must submit the statement at least ten business days before your parole hearing.[53] You usually cannot see the victim's (or the victim's family's) statement unless the victim or court authorizes you to do so.[54]

Whether or not there is a victim impact statement in your file, you can ask as many people as possible from your family, your community, and your legal team to write letters to the Parole Board in support of your release. If the letters come to you directly, photocopy them (or ask someone to photocopy them for you) and ask the parole officer at your facility to add them to your file. You should also bring these letters to your pre-parole interview and to the parole hearing itself.

5. Certificate of Earned Eligibility

The "Earned Eligibility Program" was enacted to address the problem of overcrowding in state prisons.[55] Under the program, once you are in custody, you should be assigned a work and treatment program "as soon as practicable."[56] Two months before your minimum term expires, the Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) will review your institutional record to determine whether you have complied with your program. If you have successfully participated in this program, DOCS may issue you a "Certificate of Earned Eligibility" (CEE).[57] Prisoners serving an indeterminate sentence with a minimum term over six years are not able to receive a CEE. It is also important to note that even if you successfully complete the program, you may still

---

46. It is important to effectively use your pre-conviction time (that is, the time following your arrest but before conviction and sentencing), especially if you are out on bail. Seeking employment—or, if you already have a job, keeping a good record at that job—can sometimes help justify a lower sentence and early release on parole.

47. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(1)(a) (McKinney 2010).

48. See, e.g., King v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 190 A.D.2d 423, 431, 598 N.Y.S.2d 245, 250 (1st Dept. 1993), aff'd, 83 N.Y.2d 788, 632 N.E.2d 1277, 610 N.Y.S.2d 954 (1994) (holding that the Parole Board has a duty "to give fair consideration" to each person who comes before it, and where the record "convincingly demonstrates" that the Board did not fairly consider the proper standards in reaching its decision, courts must intervene).

49. Geames v. Travis, 284 A.D.2d 843, 843, 726 N.Y.S.2d 506, 506 (3d Dept. 2001) (holding the Parole Board does not have to weigh each factor equally; the heavy weight put on crime severity and criminal history here was acceptable).

50. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-c(4) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

51. Barna v. Travis, 239 F.3d 169, 170–71 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that denial of parole did not violate the Due Process or Ex Post Facto clauses, since petitioners did not have "a legitimate expectancy of release that is grounded in the state's statutory scheme").

52. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(c)(A)(v) (McKinney 2010).

53. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.4(b) (2008).

54. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.4(e) (2008).

55. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

56. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

57. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011). See Klos v. Haskell, 835 F. Supp. 710, 723 (W.D.N.Y 1993), aff'd, 48 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1995) (stating the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services may exercise "their discretion, without restraint, to remove an inmate from participation in the [CEE] program").

be denied a CEE since the decision to issue a CEE is discretionary.[58] Therefore, it is entirely up to DOCS to determine whether or not to grant you a Certificate of Earned Eligibility. A court of law cannot force DOCS to issue you a CEE, even if you have completed your treatment program; however, DOCS cannot arbitrarily deny a CEE. In such instances, a court may review the denial, although it is important to remember that courts often defer to the opinion of DOCS, except in unusual or extreme circumstances.

If you have a CEE and have served your minimum period of incarceration, the standard for parole release is easier to meet.[59] First, the Parole Board may not consider whether your release will "deprecate the seriousness of [the] crime," which is the standard the Board uses for prisoners who do not have a CEE.[60] Second, when you possess a CEE, the Board presumes you will probably live and remain at liberty without violating the law—which means unless the Board affirmatively finds otherwise, you should get parole.

One month prior to the expiration of your minimum period of incarceration (MPI), you will be interviewed by members of the Board for release consideration.[61] The Parole Board does not need to consider your full institutional record, as discussed above. Instead, it will review:

(1) The time-range guidelines;
(2) Your institutional disciplinary record;
(3) Your performance, if any, in a temporary release program;
(4) Your release plans—including community resources, employment, education and training, and support services; and
(5) "Any available information which would indicate an inability to live and remain at liberty without violating the law, and that the release is incompatible with the welfare of society."[62]

It is important to note that having a CEE does not automatically entitle you to parole.[63] Rather, it "create[s] merely an expectation of parole ... that deserves due process protection."[64] As in all cases, if you are denied parole, you have a right to be told why you were denied.[65] If a court determines that the Parole Board did not comply with these requirements, you may be entitled to a new hearing.[66]

6. Denial of Parole Release

If you are denied parole, within two weeks of your first hearing, the Parole Board must provide you with a detailed written explanation stating the reasons you were denied parole. Within two weeks of your first hearing, the Board will also set a date for reconsideration of your parole release, which must be scheduled within twenty-four months of your first hearing.[67] The twenty-four month notice period begins from the date of your last parole hearing. Before the new hearing, you should (1) prepare a new parole plan; and (2) try to strengthen the parts of your record that the Board identified as reasons for denying parole. If you are denied parole more than once, you must continue to follow this procedure. If your parole is revoked, there is no time

---

58. See Frett v. Coughlin, 156 A.D.2d 779, 781, 550 N.Y.S.2d 61, 63 (3d Dept. 1989) ("Successful participation in the program is merely a threshold requirement which activates the Commissioner's discretionary power to issue a CEE. The statute simply does not create a liberty interest in receiving a CEE because, even upon successful participation in the program, the Commissioner may deny the certificate.").

59. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

60. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.1(a) (2008).

61. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3(c) (2008).

62. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3(c)(1)–(5) (2008). See, e.g., Pike v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 188 A.D.2d 602, 603, 591 N.Y.S.2d 495, 496 (2d Dept. 1992) (holding that despite the CEE, "petitioner's release was incompatible with the welfare of society, and that the petitioner would not remain at liberty without violating the law"); Confoy v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 173 A.D.2d 1014, 1015, 569 N.Y.S.2d 846, 847 (3d Dept. 1991) (holding that denial of parole was based on determination that the "[prisoner] would not remain at liberty without violating the law and that his release would be incompatible with the welfare of society").

63. Howard v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 270 A.D.2d 539, 539–40, 704 N.Y.S.2d 326, 327 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that the fact that the prisoner received a CEE did not preclude parole board from denying him parole release).

64. People ex rel. Hunter v. Bara, 144 Misc. 2d 750, 752, 545 N.Y.S.2d 65, 66 (Sup. Ct. Richmond County 1989) (holding that the prisoner only has a liberty interest in the possibility of release on parole).

65. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

66. See People ex rel. Hunter v. Bara, 144 Misc. 2d 750, 752, 545 N.Y.S.2d 65, 67 (Sup. Ct. Richmond County 1989) ("If the Parole Board fails to comply with the statutory due process protection, the parole candidate is entitled to a new hearing rather than a habeas corpus relief ... It does not give the petitioner a vested right to release.").

67. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2010) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3(d) (2008). See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1 (2008) (appeals procedure).

limit for rescheduling a parole release hearing. So, if your parole is revoked and you are returned to prison, the Parole Board may order that you be held for a period longer than twenty-four months before being given another parole hearing.[68] See Part H of this Chapter for more information on parole revocation.

7. Appealing Denial of Parole Release to Appeals Unit

You can appeal a denial of parole. An appeal is an administrative procedure conducted through the Appeals Unit of the Parole Board.[69] You have the right to an attorney when you appeal to the Parole Board. If you cannot afford an attorney, one will be assigned to you.[70] You can appeal a release proceeding on one or more of the following grounds:

(1) The proceeding and/or determination violated lawful procedure, was influenced by an error of law, or was "arbitrary, capricious or otherwise unlawful";
(2) A Board member or members relied on mistaken or irrelevant information in making a decision, and this can be shown in the record of the hearing; or
(3) The determination was excessive.[71]

If you believe you have grounds for an appeal, immediately file a "notice of appeal," which should be contained in the notification of denial. Then request an attorney. You must file a notice of appeal within thirty days of receiving the notification of denial; otherwise, you will have waived your right to an appeal.[72]

You should begin to prepare for your appeal by obtaining the parole release hearing minutes from: Division of Parole, Appeals Unit, 97 Central Avenue, Albany, NY 12206.[73]

You will have to pay for the parole release hearing minutes (the record of the proceeding). If you have an attorney and cannot afford to pay for the minutes, your attorney can get them for you. You may also make a written request for "[a]ll other nonconfidential, discoverable documents relating to the appeal."[74] So, if you believe there is important information in your parole records to support your appeal, you may request permission to access it. However, you will not be given unrestricted access. Access to your parole records will be limited in the following ways:

(1) You can only gain access to your case record at certain times—just before a scheduled appearance before the Board or a hearing officer, or prior to making an administrative appeal;[75]
(2) You can only access parts of the case record that the Board or the hearing officer will consider;
(3) You will not be given access to diagnostic opinions that could "seriously disrupt[ ] ... [your] institutional program,"[76] information obtained from a confidential source, or information that might harm another person; and
(4) The Division of Parole will not grant access to reports or materials from other agencies.[77] You will only be allowed to review the record at the prison or at the area parole office that serves the prison.[78]

8. If your Administrative Appeal is Denied

If you appeal and are denied relief and wish to seek judicial review, you can begin an Article 78 proceeding.[79] Remember, as discussed in Chapter 22 of the JLM, you must serve (properly deliver) your

---

68. See People ex rel. Matthews v. New York State Div. of Parole, 58 N.Y.2d 196, 205, 447 N.E.2d 689, 693, 460 N.Y.S.2d 746, 750 (1983) (holding that under this particular record, denial of adjournment of parole revocation hearing did not violate due process).

69. The appeals procedure is the same for Parole Board decisions regarding a minimum period of imprisonment (MPI), parole release, parole rescission, and final revocation. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1(a) (2008).

70. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(4)(b) (McKinney 2010). You should write to the County Clerk for the county in which your prison is located and ask the Clerk to assign you a lawyer for the administrative appeal.

71. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.3(a) (2008).

72. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1(b) (2008).

73. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(6)(a) (McKinney 2010) states that "[t]he board shall provide for the making of a verbatim record of each parole release interview, except where a decision is made to release the inmate to parole supervision, and … except when the decision of the presiding officer after such hearings result in a dismissal of all charged violations of parole, conditional release or post release supervision."

74. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1(e) (2008).

75. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(1) (2008).

76. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(2)(i) (2008).

77. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(2)(i)(b) (2008).

78. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5(c)(6) (2008).

Article 78 petition to each respondent and the New York Attorney General within four months of the date when the Appeals Unit decision becomes final.[80] This four-month limit is called the "statute of limitations."

If you pursue an Article 78 review, it is important to note that it is difficult to get a court to reverse the Parole Board's decision. The Parole Board's decisions are discretionary and are not subject to judicial review if made in accordance with statutory requirements.[81] There are two ways for a prisoner to secure a reversal of the Board's decision. A prisoner must make a "convincing showing" that either (1) the Board did not consider the required factors or considered erroneous information,[82] or (2) acted "irrationally bordering on impropriety" in reaching its decision.[83] The courts consider the following justifications for parole denial to fall outside the scope of the Parole Board's statutory authority: penal philosophy, the historical treatment of individuals convicted of murder, the death penalty, life imprisonment without parole, and the consequences to society if those sentences were not in place.[84] This means the Parole Board cannot use any of those justifications to deny your parole. In addition, the Parole Board may consider neither "illegally seized evidence which has already been suppressed in a criminal action," nor "public pressure" in determining whether or not to grant a prisoner parole.[85] The Parole Board may not deny parole on the grounds that the "best kind of treatment" for your emotional and physical problems would be to remain incarcerated.[86] Finally, the Parole Board is required to consider any recommendations made by the sentencing court, and a reviewing court may order reversal and reconsideration if the Board fails to do so.[87]

---

79. See JLM, Chapter 5, Part C(6), and Chapter 22 for discussions of Article 78 proceedings.

80. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 217 (McKinney 2003).

81. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(5) (McKinney 2010). See Davis v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 114 A.D.2d 412, 412, 494 N.Y.S.2d 136, 137 (2d Dept. 1985) ("[T]he Division of Parole's release decisions are discretionary, and if made in accordance with the statutory requirements, such determinations are not subject to judicial review."); Ristau v. Hammock, 103 A.D.2d 944, 945, 479 N.Y.S.2d 760, 761 (3d Dept. 1984) (requiring a showing of "irrationality bordering on impropriety to warrant intervention by the courts" in a Parole Board's release decision, which is discretionary).

82. E.g., Rodriguez v. Greenfield, No. 99-0058, 7 Fed. Appx. 42, 45, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 5093, at *6 (2d Cir. Mar. 23, 2001) (unpublished) (reversing the Parole Commission's decision to deny parole because the prisoner's record was incomplete, due to missing information on program goals and accomplishments, academic achievements, vocational education, training or work assignments, therapy, and interpersonal relationships with staff and prisoners); Plevy v. Travis, 17 A.D.3d 879, 880, 793 N.Y.S.2d 262, 263 (3d Dept. 2005) (reversing denial of parole and ordering a new parole hearing because the Parole Board improperly considered the petitioner's prior violation of parole, which had been dismissed at the time, when determining denial of parole); Lewis v. Travis, 9 A.D.3d 800, 801, 780 N.Y.S.2d 243, 245 (3d Dept. 2004) (reversing denial of parole and granting a new parole hearing due to the Parole Board's reliance on incorrect information when making its determination); Edge v. Hammock, 80 A.D.2d 953, 945, 438 N.Y.S.2d 38, 39 (3d Dept. 1981) (reversing Parole Board's determination of minimum period of imprisonment and ordering a new hearing because the Parole Board based its determination on crimes the petitioner had not been convicted of).

83. Parole Board Decision is Deemed Prejudicial to Murder Convict, N.Y.L.J., Feb. 17, 1994, at 25 (citing Quartararo v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 224 A.D.2d 266, N.Y.S.2d 721 (1st Dept. 1996)); see also Monroe v. Thigpen, 932 F.2d 1437, 1442 (11th Cir. 1991) (noting that "[a] parole board may not engage in 'flagrant or unauthorized action'" by knowingly relying on false information); Russo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 50 N.Y.2d 69, 77, 405 N.E.2d 225, 229, 427 N.Y.S.2d 982, 986 (1980) (rejecting assertion that parole board acted arbitrarily in setting minimum period of imprisonment at maximum sentence).

84. See King v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 83 N.Y.2d 788, 791, 632 N.E.2d 1277, 1278, 610 N.Y.S.2d 954, 955 (1994) (requiring a new hearing before a different panel after finding prisoner was not given a proper parole hearing because "one of the Commissioners considered factors outside the scope of the applicable statute").

85. Parole Board Decision is Deemed Prejudicial to Murder Convict, N.Y.L.J., Feb. 17, 1994, at 25. In Quartararo v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 224 A.D.2d 266, 637 N.Y.S.2d 721 (1st Dept. 1996), the court held that the Parole Board "improperly considered factors outside the scope of Executive Law § 259-i and in violation of a prior court order" and ordered a new hearing in front of a different panel. The court held that it was improper for the Parole Board to consider press accounts of the petitioner's crime, unchallenged ex parte allegations for removal from a work release program and photographs of the victim in reviewing the petitioner's application for parole. The court ultimately exercised its broad remedial powers and granted Quartararo's release on parole: "On three separate occasions … [the Board could] not or [would] not follow its own regulations, statutory mandate, or the lawful order of this court. ... The Board has failed to support any of its determinations by adequate evidence, has misconstrued its role, power and duty, prejudged each of petitioner's parole applications, and applied the wrong legal standard." Matter of Quartararo (N.Y. State Division of Parole), N.Y.L.J., Aug. 18, 1995, at 23.

86. People ex rel. Smith v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 91 Misc. 2d 486, 487, 398 N.Y.S.2d 12, 12 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1976).

87. E.g., Standley v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 34 A.D.3d 1169, 1170, 825 N.Y.S.2d 568, 569 (3d Dept. 2006) (reversing denial of parole due to the Parole Board's repeated failure to consider the sentencing minutes and the recommendations of the sentencing court, and ordering a reconsideration that included these factors); McLaurin v. N.Y.

Again, despite these limited examples of court reversals, it is important to remember that courts generally give great deference to Parole Board decisions. Even in cases where the Parole Board based its decision to deny parole on factors other than those specified by the legislature, courts have upheld the decision, since the Parole Board may deny parole where "it is incompatible with the welfare of society."[88] Thus, the Parole Board may consider additional factors (such as lack of remorse or insight and acceptance of responsibility) to determine whether your release is compatible with the welfare of society.

9. Rescission (Reconsideration of Grant of Parole)

Even if your parole release interview goes well and you receive a parole release date, the Parole Board may be able to reconsider its decision before your release date. The New York State Division of Parole has established procedures for reconsideration of parole.[89]

The senior parole officer, or the parole officer in charge of a facility, may temporarily suspend a release date if he realizes that there may be a basis for Board reconsideration.[90] There are two general categories of events that might cause temporary suspension. The first is the discovery of "significant information which existed" or "significant misbehavior which occurred" before the parole release decision that was not known by the Board.[91] The second is an event that occurred after the Board's decision to grant release.[92] The basis for Board reconsideration may include, but is not limited to, one or more of the following circumstances:

(1) Significant misbehavior or a major violation of facility rules;
(2) An escape or removal from temporary release;
(3) A prisoner's commitment to a psychiatric treatment center;
(4) Imposition of an additional definite sentence; and
(5) Imposition of an additional indeterminate sentence.[93]

This list is not exclusive. For example, in a 2005 case, Pugh v. Parole, parole was rescinded because the victims' statement was not considered before granting parole. Once the victims complained, the Board considered their statements.[94] The parole officer should notify you in writing of the suspension "as soon as practicable," investigate the circumstances leading to the suspension, and prepare a "rescission report" for a Board member.[95] The Board member will then review the report and decide either to reinstate your release date or to hold a rescission hearing. If a rescission hearing is ordered, you will receive a copy of the rescission report and a notice of the rescission hearing at least seven days before the hearing.[96] The notice must state:

(1) The date and place of the hearing;
(2) The specific allegations that will be considered at the hearing; and
(3) A description of your rights at the final hearing, like your right to counsel, to testify, to present witnesses and introduce evidence, and to cross-examine most of the government's witnesses.[97]

There is no specific time limit, but the rescission hearing must be scheduled to take place within a "reasonable time after the board orders a hearing."[98] You have the right to be represented by a lawyer at a rescission hearing, but there is no requirement that a lawyer be appointed. You have the right "to appear and speak on [your] own behalf; to present witnesses and introduce documentary evidence; and to confront

---

State Bd. of Parole, 27 A.D.3d 565, 565, 812 N.Y.S.2d 122, 123 (2d Dept. 2006) (affirming decision ordering Division of Parole to obtain prisoner's resentencing minutes and have a new hearing); Edwards v. Travis, 304 A.D.2d 576, 576, 758 N.Y.S.2d 121, 122 (2d Dept. 2003) (Parole Division's failure to consider sentencing judge's recommendation warranted judicial intervention).

88. Silmon v. Travis, 95 N.Y.2d 470, 477–78, 741 N.E.2d 501, 505–06, 718 N.Y.S.2d 704, 708–09 (2000) (holding that a decision by the Parole Board to deny parole for a prisoner who pleaded guilty to murdering his wife but denied culpability was not arbitrary or capricious).

89. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5 (2007).

90. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(1) (2007).

91. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(2)(i) (2007).

92. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(2)(ii) (2007).

93. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(2)(ii)(a)–(e) (2007).

94. Pugh v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 19 A.D.3d 991, 993, 798 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (3d Dept. 2005).

95. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(3) (2007).

96. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5) (2007).

97. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5) (2007).

98. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(c)(1) (2007).

and cross-examine adverse witnesses."[99] But, you cannot force witnesses to appear if the members of the Board of Parole conducting the hearing find good cause in the record for a witness not to appear.[100]

A majority of the Board members at the hearing (that is, at least two of the three members) must find there is substantial evidence presented at the hearing to support a decision to rescind parole.[101] In general, if there was enough evidence to find you guilty of a violation of facility rules at the Superintendent's Hearing, there is probably enough evidence to uphold parole rescission.[102] The Parole Board will then rescind the release date and either set a new date for release consideration for not more than twenty-four months from the date of the original release interview, or set a new release date.[103] If the majority of the Parole Board does not believe substantial evidence exists to support a rescission of parole, it will cancel the temporary suspension and reinstate the original release date. If that date has passed, the Board will set a new one for as soon as practicable.[104] The appeal process for rescission is the same as the process for appealing parole denial.[105]

It is unclear whether rescission of parole involves a protected "liberty interest" that invokes due process protection. The Supreme Court held in Jago v. Van Curen that a prisoner, who had been granted a parole date which was later revoked before his release without notice or a hearing, did not have a liberty interest requiring due process protection.[106] In Lanier v. Fair,[107] the court noted Van Curen involved a state statute that gave the Parole Board complete discretion in determining its parole policies. Thus, in that particular instance, the statute did not create a liberty interest. But, other courts have found you have a liberty interest when your parole is rescinded, and you deserve due process protection in those cases. For example, when a state statute uses language that makes parole consideration mandatory, some courts have found that this language creates an "expectation of parole" that constitutes a liberty interest protected by the Constitution.[108] Also, some courts have decided that when a Parole Board limits its rescission authority by its own regulations, it creates a liberty interest that requires due process protection.[109] Thus, it is possible that since the New York State Division of Parole has established procedures for the reconsideration of parole, it has also created a liberty interest in parole that deserves due process protection. This issue has not yet been litigated.

G. Release on Parole

1. Release Procedures

If you are granted parole release, the first step will be completion and approval of your parole plan. Upon completion and approval of your parole plan, you will be given a "Conditions of Release" form to sign, and

---

99. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5)(iii)(b)–(c) (2007).

100. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(b)(5)(iii)(c) (2007).

101. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(d)(1) (2007).

102. Brooks v. Travis, 19 A.D.3d 901, 901–02, 797 N.Y.S.2d 183, 184 (3d Dept. 2005) (prisoner's guilty plea to offense in misbehavior report was sufficient evidence of a significant misbehavior for the purpose of rescinding parole).

103. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(d)(1)(i)–(ii) (2007).

104. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.5(d)(2) (2001).

105. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1 (2007).

106. Jago v. Van Curen, 454 U.S. 14, 17, 102 S. Ct. 31, 34, 70 L. Ed. 2d 13, 17 (1981).

107. Lanier v. Fair, 876 F.2d 243, 251 (1st Cir. 1989).

108. See, e.g., Watson v. DiSabato, 933 F.Supp. 390, 392 (D.N.J. 1996) (holding New Jersey's parole statute creates a sufficient expectation of parole eligibility to give rise to a liberty interest); Harper v. Young, 64 F.3d 563, 564–65 (10th Cir. 1995) ("[P]rogram participation is sufficiently similar to parole or probation to merit protection by the Due Process Clause itself."); Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F.Supp. 1019, 1040 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that there was a state-created limited protected liberty interest in New York parole proceedings, extending as far as a prisoner's rights to be heard and to know reasons for parole denial); Wilson v. Kelkhoff, 86 F.3d 1438, 1446 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding Illinois's parole statute provides for protectable liberty interest in release for most prisoners). But see Allison v. Kyle, 66 F.3d 71, 73–74 (5th Cir. 1995) (holding Texas' parole statute does not create a liberty interest in parole that is entitled to due process protection); Hamm v. Latessa, 72 F.3d 947, 955 (1st Cir. 1995) (finding no state-created liberty interest in parole for a parole proceeding governed by Massachusetts state law).

109. See Green v. McCall, 822 F.2d 284, 287 (2d Cir. 1987) (holding that "a parole grantee has a protectable liberty interest that entitles him to due process in … parole rescission hearings" when the parole commission had limited rescission authority); Ellard v. Ala. Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 824 F.2d 937, 943–44 (11th Cir. 1987) ("In view of the statutory restrictions on the authority of the Parole Board to revoke a parole, we conclude that [parole grantee] had a constitutionally protected liberty interest.").

will be assigned a parole officer. If you are approved for parole release prior to having an approved employment and residence program, you will be placed on "open date" status. If you do not have an approved plan within six months of receiving an "open date" program, you must reappear before the Board.[110]

If you were sentenced to a determinate sentence for a violent felony or a felony drug offense, the law requires that you serve a period of post-release supervision.[111] The additional post-release supervision may last up to five years, depending on the type of offense for which you were imprisoned.[112] The sentencing court retains the discretion to designate a lesser term depending on the nature of the crime that resulted in your conviction.[113] If your sentence requires post-release supervision, you must do further research, as this Section provides only a general overview of the law and its effects.

2. Supervision of Parole

After you are placed on parole, you will remain under supervision of the Division of Parole until the end of your maximum sentence, the end of your parole supervision (which may be granted early by the Parole Board), or your return to prison.[114] Be sure you completely understand your release conditions, including any special conditions imposed by the parole officer. Failure to follow any parole release requirement could result in a violation, which might trigger parole revocation proceedings. If you have any questions about the terms of your release or what type of activity is prohibited, ask your parole officer to explain.[115]

It is very important to develop a good working relationship with your parole officer, since he will be primarily responsible for determining your ability to serve the remainder of your sentence outside prison. In addition, your parole officer can serve as a crucial resource to assist you in many ways, like directing you to social service programs or emergency hotlines. Cooperate with your parole officer, but you should know that your interactions are not confidential. Statements that you make about your activities that might be considered parole violations could be deemed confessions or admissions, and these statements could be used against you in parole revocation proceedings.[116]

There are several important conditions of release you must follow carefully. Failure to do so might result in a violation of your parole, which could trigger parole revocation proceedings. The conditions of release are:

(1) Within twenty-four hours of your release, you must report directly to your designated area of release and file an arrival report with the office of the Division of Parole;
(2) You must keep any appointments with your parole officer and complete any required written reports;
(3) You must not leave the state or any area defined in your "Conditions of Release" plan without permission;
(4) You must let your parole officer visit your home and work and inspect your property. You must immediately tell your parole officer of any change of address or employment status;
(5) You must reply "promptly, fully, and truthfully" to any communication from your parole officer or a representative of the Division of Parole;
(6) You must advise your parole officer of any new arrest immediately. Even if the charges in the new arrest are dropped, failure to report an arrest can be a violation of your parole;
(7) You may not associate with people who have criminal records;
(8) You may not violate a law that has prison time as a possible penalty, and you may not threaten the safety of yourself or others;

---

110. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.3(f) (2007); New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2011), at 14, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

111. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2010).

112. Al O'Connor, 1998 Legislative Review, Pub. Def. Backup Center Rep. (N.Y. State Defenders Ass'n, Albany, N.Y.) Vol. XIII, No. 7 (1998), at 4, available at http://www.nysda.org/Hot_Topics/Legislation_NY/98_LegislativeReview.pdf; N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2004).

113. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2004).

114. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8003.1(a) (2007); N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-j(1) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

115. See generally New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2007), at 17–27, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

116. See, e.g., People ex rel. King v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 65 A.D.2d 465, 468–69, 412 N.Y.S.2d 138, 140–41 (1st Dept. 1979) (holding that admission to parole officer of possession of heroin was admissible in a parole revocation hearing, even though evidence of heroin was suppressed in court proceeding because it had been illegally seized).

(9) You may not own, possess, or purchase any kind of firearm or dangerous knife without written permission from your parole officer. Other prohibited items include razors, stilettos, or imitation pistols, or any instrument that could easily cause physical injury without a satisfactory explanation for having the item;

(10) You may not use or possess any controlled substance or drug paraphernalia without medical authorization.[117]

Other special conditions of parole may be imposed based on the nature of the underlying criminal conviction. Parole conditions may be imposed by a member of the Board of Parole, the Division of Parole, or a parole officer.[118] Furthermore, the Division of Parole has special guidelines for sex offenders, which may include residency restrictions and curfews.[119] In practice, this means it may be very difficult to qualify for the conditions of parole, as you may be required to live in a place not near a school or a school bus stop, and you may be prohibited from living with a minor. For a discussion of special conditions that are often imposed on parolees convicted of sex offenses, see Chapter 32 of the JLM, "Special Considerations for Sex Offenders."

If you are having any trouble with your parole officer, contact the parole officer's supervisor.

3. Your Rights While on Parole

Your parole officer has a fair amount of discretion in supervising you and evaluating possible parole violations. When you sign your "Conditions of Release" form, you give "advance consent" to certain parole officer conduct that might be unconstitutional in other contexts. For example, your parole officer may search you and seize property without a warrant and without probable cause. He or she may visit your home frequently to make sure you still live there.[120] Your parole officer may also visit your place of employment.[121]

Since you are still considered to be in the constructive custody of the state, you—unlike an ordinary citizen—are not entitled to full constitutional protection against infringement of your rights. There has been some litigation on the extent of privacy and other rights that you retain as a parolee. Any searches must be knowing and voluntary, reasonably related to the rehabilitation goal, and performed by a parole officer in his or her duty to monitor your rehabilitation.[122] Since you usually must consent to searches at the time of parole, the knowing and voluntary requirement is readily met. Furthermore, it is unlikely that a court will find the other two requirements have not been met. For example, courts have held that you may be required to give blood and have your DNA kept on file in a data bank as part of a legal search. [123]

4. Special Parole

Special parole is different from regular parole. Special parole was created especially for drug offenses. It was repealed in 1984 but still governs crimes committed before November 1987.[124] Special parole follows a prison term and is imposed by the sentencing judge. Regular or traditional parole entails release before the

---

117. The preceding release conditions are listed in N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8003.2(a)–(k) (2007).

118. Dickman v. Trietley, 268 A.D.2d 914, 916, 702 N.Y.S.2d 449, 451 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that a parolee's field parole officer was authorized to impose the parole condition prohibiting the parolee from residing with a woman the parolee had never met, since restriction was rational and violated no statutory requirement).

119. See, e.g., Monroe v. Travis, 280 A.D.2d 675, 676, 721 N.Y.S.2d 377, 378 (2d Dept. 2001) (holding that Parole Division could require sex offender to secure approved housing before granting his request of conditional release); Billups v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 18 A.D.3d 1085, 1085, 795 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that Parole Board's imposition of requirement of suitable residence as condition of prisoner's parole release was rational, because prisoner had a history of violent conduct and sexual offenses).

120. See New York State Div. of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2011), at 23, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

121. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8003.2(d) (2007). If you are worried that your parole officer visiting your job might be a problem, advise your parole officer about this. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 23, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

122. People v. Hale, 93 N.Y.2d 454, 457, 714 N.E.2d 861, 862, 692 N.Y.S.2d 649, 650 (1999) (holding that a parole officer's search of the home of a parolee suspected of dealing drugs did not violate his constitutional rights when parolee had agreed to searches for illegal drugs as a condition of parole).

123. N.Y. Exec. Law § 995-c(3) (McKinney 2010); Kellogg v. Travis, 188 Misc. 2d 164, 167–68, 728 N.Y.S.2d 645, 647–48 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2001) (holding N.Y. Exec. Law § 995-c is constitutional and withdrawal of a parolee's blood does not constitute an illegal search and seizure, even though less invasive means of getting a DNA sample exist).

124. 21 U.S.C. § 841(c) (repealed 1984).

end of a prison term and is imposed by the Parole Board. If you violate the conditions of special parole you must serve the remainder of the special parole term in prison. After serving the remainder of your special parole term, the Parole Commission may impose a new term of imprisonment. Following your imprisonment, the Parole Commission has the right to impose a term of traditional parole.[125] The Parole Commission may also re-impose another term of special parole after revoking a term of special parole.[126]

H. Revocation of Your Parole

1. How and Why Parole Revocation Begins

If you do not follow the terms of your parole release, you may have to return to prison to serve the rest of your sentence. You must violate a condition of parole "in an important respect"[127] in order for the Parole Board to revoke your parole. This standard, however, is often readily satisfied by a direct violation of one of the explicit conditions of parole, such as not making curfew[128] or being in an explicitly prohibited area.[129] Decisions by the Parole Division to revoke parole may only be reviewed by a court to determine whether the Parole Board followed the proper procedural rules. The court cannot make its own determination about the truth of your reasons for violating parole.[130] Courts usually uphold the Parole Commission's decisions. If your parole officer has "reasonable cause to believe that [you have] lapsed into criminal ways, company, or [have] violated one or more of the conditions of ... release in an important respect,"[131] he or she may report such conduct to a member of the Parole Board or a designated officer, who may then secure a warrant for retaking and temporary detention.[132] A parole violation is called a "delinquency." If it is later proven that you violated your parole, your parole will be revoked going back to the date of this delinquency. So, it is important to know exactly when you allegedly violated your parole since you will be responsible to serve the prison time dating back to the delinquency date if your parole is revoked. You will, however, be credited for time spent on parole prior to the delinquency date.[133] If your parole is being revoked, you may contact the Legal Aid Society's Parole Revocation Defense Unit at 199 Water Street, 5th Floor, New York, NY 10038.

If you are being held on a parole warrant, you are not entitled to bail or to release until the parole warrant is lifted.[134] If you are being detained on other charges (which may serve later as the basis for parole revocation), and bail is set on those charges, you still cannot be released while the parole warrant is pending.

---

125. United States v. Caraballo, No. 96 Civ. 6915 (KTD), 86 Cr. 336 (KTD), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 499, at *8–9 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that the Parole Commission can re-impose a term of regular parole on a prisoner who violated special parole and was imprisoned for the remaining period of his special parole).

126. Rich v. Maranville, 369 F.3d 83, 89–90 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that "when special parole is revoked that term is suspended and continues to exist. The Commission thus creates nothing when it re-imposes that court-created term of special parole after the revocation and incarceration").

127. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2010); People ex rel. Korn v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 274 A.D.2d 439, 440, 710 N.Y.S.2d 124, 125 (2d Dept. 2000) (stating that a violation of a "substantial condition" of parole is sufficient to have parole revoked).

128. People ex rel. Korn v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 274 A.D.2d 439, 440, 710 N.Y.S.2d 124, 125 (2d Dept. 2000) (holding that a prisoner violated a "substantial condition" of his parole by missing his curfew without adequately explaining this violation, and this was a reasonable ground to support revoking prisoner's parole).

129. Bellamy v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 274 A.D.2d 871, 872, 711 N.Y.S.2d 596, 597 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that revocation of parole was justified where parolee who was found on a street which he was twice told not to enter as an official condition of his parole).

130. People ex rel. Bayham v. Meloni, 182 Misc. 2d 831, 832, 700 N.Y.S.2d 649, 650 (County Ct. Monroe County 1999) ("A court, when reviewing a determination by the Parole Board to revoke parole, may only 'examine the record to determine if the required procedural rules were followed and if there is any evidence which, if believed, would support the Parole Board's determination, but the court may not make its own determinations based on its assessment of the credibility of the witnesses.'").

131. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8004.2(a)–(b) (2008).

132. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8004.2(c) (2008) ("Reasonable cause exists when evidence or information which appears reliable discloses facts or circumstances that would convince a person of ordinary intelligence, judgment and experience that it is reasonably likely that a releasee has committed the acts in question or has lapsed into criminal ways or company. Such apparently reliable evidence may include hearsay.").

133. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(3) (McKinney 2010).

134. See, e.g., People ex rel. Calloway v. Skinner, 33 N.Y.2d 23, 34, 300 N.E.2d 716, 720, 347 N.Y.S.2d 178, 184 (1973) (holding right to bail is statutory, and without statutory direction, prisoners are not entitled to either bail or release pending hearing before Board).

In Morrissey v. Brewer, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled a paroled convict has a liberty interest protected by due process. So, the revocation of parole release and re-incarceration must be determined in accordance with due process.[135] New York State's parole law provides for two due process hearings: preliminary and final. Within three days of the issuance of a warrant for your retaking, you must receive written notice of the charges against you and the date of the preliminary parole revocation hearing.[136] The notice shall be given within three days after the execution of a warrant for retaking and temporary detention, and not less than forty-eight hours prior to the preliminary hearing.[137] If you are out of state, you should be given written notice of the time, place, and purpose of the hearing within five days of the issuance of the warrant for your retaking.[138]

2. Preliminary Hearing

The purpose of the preliminary hearing is to determine whether there is "probable cause" that you violated, in an important respect, one or more of the conditions of your parole release.[139] The Parole Board has the burden to show evidence of your alleged violation.[140] The hearing must be held within fifteen days of the issuance of the warrant of retaking, and must be conducted by a hearing officer who has not had any prior supervisory involvement over you.[141]

At the preliminary hearing, you are entitled to the following rights:

(1) To speak on your own behalf or to obtain counsel to represent you;[142]
(2) To introduce letters and documents;[143]
(3) To present witnesses who may provide relevant information in support of your case;[144] and
(4) To confront and cross-examine witnesses testifying against you, unless the hearing officer finds good cause for their non-attendance.[145]

The regulations stipulate that you may be represented by counsel at your preliminary hearing, but it is important to note that you do not have an absolute right to be represented by counsel, nor do you have an absolute right to have an attorney appointed if you cannot afford to hire one.[146] If you believe that you need the assistance of counsel at the preliminary hearing, try to get an attorney through the county or supreme court in the district in which you are being held, or through the Legal Aid Society if you are in New York City. Unless you have an exceedingly complex case, it may be difficult to get an attorney assigned at this stage. You do not have to testify at this hearing or at the final hearing. You also do not have to make a statement to your parole officer while he or she is preparing the Parole Violation Report. Any statement you do make may be used as evidence at the final hearing.

An important difference between the preliminary hearing and the final hearing is that not all of the charges need to be heard at the preliminary hearing. If the hearing officer determines that probable cause exists after hearing one or more of the charges, the judge may determine that enough probable cause exists

---

135. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 479–84, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2599–2602, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 493–96 (1972).

136. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3 (2008).

137. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3(a) (2008).

138. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3(a) (2008).

139. "Probable cause" means reasonable cause.

140. This means the Parole Board must create a sufficient case of a violation, which you have to explain or refute.

141. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(i) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.4 (2008).

142. The attorney must file a notice of appearance. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.5(a)– (b)(1) (2008).

143. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(2) (2008).

144. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(3) (2008).

145. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(4) (2008). You may compel the attendance at the hearing of adverse witnesses through subpoenas, unless you have already been convicted of a new crime, or the hearing officer finds good cause for their non-attendance. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.3(c)(4) (2008). If you are proceeding pro se (without an attorney) at this stage, you may apply to the hearing officer or Board member presiding at the hearing for the subpoenas. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2302 (McKinney 1991 & Supp. 2008). You may also apply to the local supreme court for subpoenas for necessary witnesses or documents. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2302(b) (McKinney 1991 & Supp. 2008).

146. See, e.g., People ex rel. Calloway v. Skinner, 33 N.Y.2d 23, 32, 300 N.E.2d 716, 719, 347 N.Y.S.2d 178, 182–83 (1973) (noting that the New York State Constitution confers only a conditional or discretionary right to counsel at a preliminary parole revocation hearing).

to end the preliminary hearing and move toward a final hearing.[147] If there is proof of conviction of a crime committed after release on parole (for example, a certificate of conviction), the judge will consider that enough to show probable cause.[148] There is no opportunity at the preliminary hearing to present evidence of mitigating factors or suggestions for alternatives to incarceration, as there is at the final hearing.[149]

3. Final Hearing

Although the preliminary hearing is like an arraignment to determine whether there is probable cause to continue to hold you for a suspected parole violation, the final hearing is like a trial to determine whether you violated parole. Thus, if the hearing officer finds probable cause at the preliminary hearing (or if you have waived the preliminary hearing), a member of the Parole Board will review your case and determine whether to declare you delinquent. Depending on the decision of the Board member, you will either be scheduled for a final hearing or restored to supervision. If you are declared delinquent, you will be scheduled for a final hearing not more than ninety days after the probable cause determination.[150]

Both you and your attorney are entitled to written notice of the date, time, and place of the hearing at least fourteen days prior to the date of the hearing.[151] But, if the hearing is adjourned or delayed for some reason, there is no additional fourteen-day notice requirement.[152] If the Parole Board fails to observe the statutory time requirements, your parole violation warrant will be removed and your parole status will be restored.[153] Notice of final revocation proceedings will set forth your rights at the hearing.

Your rights at the revocation proceeding are essentially the same as those in the preliminary hearing, except for two notable distinctions. In a revocation hearing:

(1) You have an absolute right to be represented by counsel[154] (if you have pending criminal charges, you could have the attorney representing you in the criminal case also represent you at your revocation hearing); and

(2) You have a right to present mitigating evidence relevant to the restoration of parole.[155] That is, you can present evidence that might justify or excuse the conduct that is alleged to be a parole violation. The standard for revoking parole at the final hearing is a determination by a "preponderance of the evidence" (meaning that it is more likely than not) that you violated one or more conditions of release in an important respect.[156]

If you have pending criminal charges, the conduct giving rise to those charges can be considered by the Parole Board in determining whether you violated your parole. If the parole revocation hearing takes place after any criminal case against you has gone to trial, several rules may apply. For example, if you were convicted or acquitted of those charges by any defense other than an affirmative defense, the Parole Board can consider the conduct underlying the charges.[157] However, if you were acquitted through an affirmative

---

147. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(viii) (McKinney 2010).

148. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.2(c)–(d) (2008).

149. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 30–32, available at: https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

150. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(i) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.17(a) (2008).

151. See, e.g., People ex rel. Wentsley v. Hammock, 89 A.D.2d 1058, 1058, 454 N.Y.S.2d 761, 762 (4th Dept. 1982) (holding that there is only one 14-day notice requirement and that no additional period is required).

153. See, e.g., People ex rel. Wentsley v. Hammock, 89 A.D.2d 1058, 1058, 454 N.Y.S.2d 761, 762 (4th Dept. 1982) ("There is no requirement that an additional 14 days' notice be given for a rescheduled or adjourned final parole revocation hearing.").

153. See, e.g., People ex rel. Levy v. Dalsheim, 66 A.D.2d 827, 828, 411 N.Y.S.2d 343, 344 (2d Dept. 1978), aff'd, 48 N.Y.2d 1019, 402 N.E.2d 141, 425 N.Y.S.2d 802 (1980) ("[The] statute ... makes clear that a delay beyond 90 days after the probable cause determination is unreasonable per se.").

154. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.16(a) (2008). See Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 489, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2622, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 499 (1972) (holding a paroled convict has a "protectable" liberty interest, such that revocation of parole release and re-incarceration must be determined in accordance with due process). See Chapter 4 of the JLM for information on how to find a lawyer, and Appendix IV for information on how to contact the Legal Aid Society.

155. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.18(b)(5) (2007).

156. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(viii) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8005.19(e) (2007). "Preponderance of the evidence" is a legal standard meaning "more likely than not." It is a lesser standard than "beyond a reasonable doubt," the legal standard for conviction of a crime.

157. Non-affirmative defenses are primarily procedural defenses. See, e.g., People ex rel. Froats v. Hammock, 83 defense (for example, self-defense, alibi, entrapment, or duress), then the Parole Board probably cannot consider those charges in its parole revocation determination.[158] Courts have held that there is no denial of due process in the Board's refusal to adjourn the final revocation hearing until after the disposition of the pending criminal case, despite the lower standard of proof in parole revocation decisions.[159] Thus, the Parole Board can find that you violated your parole even if you are not later convicted of the criminal charges.

4. Appeals

You may appeal the revocation of your parole by filing a "Notice of Appeal" within thirty days of the date of the written notice of the Parole Board's decision.[160] You may be represented by an attorney during your appeal.[161] Within four months of the date on which the notice of appeal was filed, you or your attorney must file the original and two copies of the appeal letter or brief with the Appeals Unit in Albany.[162] Your appeal letter or brief must state the rules that you are challenging and explain the basis for your appeal.[163] The appeal must be based on the written record. You may get an extension "for good cause" if you request one in writing within the four months following the notice of appeal.[164]

Among the questions that may be raised on appeal are:

(1) Whether the proceeding and/or determination was in violation of lawful procedure, was affected by an error of law, was arbitrary and capricious, or was otherwise unlawful;
(2) Whether the Board member or members making the determination relied on erroneous information as shown in the record of the proceeding, or relevant information was not available for consideration;
(3) Whether the determination made was excessive;[165] and
(4) Whether the decision was supported by a preponderance of the evidence.[166]

In a revocation appeal, you cannot raise an allegation of newly discovered evidence. Such an issue must be raised in an application to the Board for a rehearing.[167] You should begin to prepare for your appeal by obtaining the minutes of the parole release hearing from the Division of Parole Appeals Unit at 97 Central Avenue, Albany, NY 12206.[168] Because the minutes can be expensive to acquire, an attorney may obtain them for you. You also may make a written request for "[a]ll other nonconfidential, discoverable documents

---

A.D.2d 745, 745, 443 N.Y.S.2d 500, 501 (4th Dept. 1981) (holding that acquittal of criminal charges does not bar subsequent parole revocation based on underlying charges).

158. The Parole Board is prevented from considering the criminal charges in affirmative defense cases because of the doctrine of collateral estoppel, which means that issues litigated and decided in one case cannot be re-litigated by the same parties in another case. The Board is also prevented from using evidence that has been suppressed in a criminal proceeding against you in a parole revocation hearing since such evidence was gained through an illegal search and seizure. See, e.g., People ex rel. Piccarillo v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 48 N.Y.2d 76, 397 N.E.2d 354, 421 N.Y.S.2d 842 (1979) (stating that exclusionary rule applies to parole revocation hearings). The ruling in Piccarillo may no longer be good law. Pa. Bd. of Probation v. Scott, 524 U.S. 357, 118 S. Ct. 2014, 141 L. Ed. 2d 344 (1998), held that the federal exclusionary rule does not apply to parole proceedings. Some New York courts have interpreted Scott as overruling Piccarillo, while others have refused to do so. See People ex rel. Gordon v. O'Flynn, 3 Misc. 3d 963, 965, 775 N.Y.S.2d 507, 509 (Sup. Ct., Monroe County 2004) (holding that Scott overruled Piccarillo and that the federal exclusionary rule does not apply to parole proceedings); but see State ex rel. Thompson v. Harder, 8 Misc. 3d 764, 766 n.2, 799 N.Y.S.2d 353, 355 n.2 (Sup. Ct. Broome County 2005) (holding it will continue to apply exclusionary rule to parole proceedings).

159. See, e.g., People ex rel. Matthews v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 58 N.Y.2d 196, 447 N.E.2d 689, 460 N.Y.S.2d 746 (1983) (holding refusal to adjourn a revocation hearing until criminal charges were tried did not constitute a violation of due process). The Board only needs to find it is more likely than not you violated your parole; you can only be convicted of the crime in the first place if the court finds beyond a reasonable doubt that you committed the unlawful act.

160. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1(b) (2008).

161. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(4)(b) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.2(d) (2001). If an attorney entered a notice of appearance, the Parole Board appeals unit will not act on any correspondence from a prisoner until receiving notice the attorney is relieved. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.2(e) (2008).

162. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.2(a)–(b) (2007).

163. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.2(a)–(b) (2007).

164. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.2(a)–(b) (2007).

165. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.3(a) (2007).

166. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.3(b)(1) (2007).

167. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.3(c) (2007).

168. See N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(6)(a) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008) ("The board shall provide for the making of a verbatim record of each parole release interview … and each preliminary and final revocation hearing ....").

relating to the appeal."[169] So, if you believe there is important information in your parole case record to support your appeal, you may request permission to access it. But, you will not receive unrestricted access.[170]

The appeal will be decided by at least three members of the Parole Board, none of whom participated in the decision that you are appealing.[171] The Board will send its written decision, including its findings of fact and law, to you or your attorney.[172]

If your appeal is unsuccessful, you have several other options. After you have pursued all possible administrative remedies with no success, you can file an Article 78 petition in New York state court.[173] You only have four months from the date the appeal decision is mailed to you to file a petition in state court. If you fail to file the petition within this time, the court will not hear your case.[174] If you are being held only on parole violation charges, and you seek to challenge the legality of your detention, you may file a petition for habeas corpus in the state supreme court.[175] See Chapters 21 and 22 of the JLM for more information on New York State habeas corpus and Article 78 petitions.

5. Parole Violator Reappearances

If your parole is revoked and you have been returned to prison, you will be released on the date your time assessment expires.[176] The Parole Board may determine that an interview is necessary before release. However, an interview is only necessary if a prisoner:

(1) Has committed a violation of facility rules;
(2) Has exhibited a significant change in his mental or emotional condition (such as being transferred to a psychiatric ward or placed on suicide watch);
(3) Has been arrested or convicted of a new felony after the final parole revocation hearing; or
(4) Is not suitable for release based on other information (such as information about self-destructive or threatening behavior).[177]

I. Release From Parole Supervision

After the expiration of your original maximum sentence, and provided you have served your time on parole supervision without interruption, you will be released from parole. The parole statute also allows for discharge from parole after three consecutive years of unrevoked parole.[178] You should talk to your parole officer if you believe you might be eligible for three-year discharge, and he or she may apply to the Parole Board for you. The Board will not entertain requests for such early discharge from a parolee.[179]

If you have a felony conviction, you may have lost certain rights or privileges, such as the right to vote, the ability to obtain a driver's license, the opportunity to be employed in a bank or an establishment that serves liquor, as well as other rights important to your life and ability to get a job. You can regain those rights after you serve out your parole term. If you have not yet completed your sentence, applications for the certificates are submitted by parole officers to the Board of Parole. If you have completed your sentence, apply directly to the Executive Clemency Bureau of the Division of Parole. If you have only one felony conviction, apply for a "Certificate of Relief from Disabilities."[180] If you have more than one felony conviction,

---

169. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.1(e) (2007).

170. Restrictions to access parole records are set forth in this Chapter in Part F(7), "Appealing Denial of Parole Release." See also N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8000.5 (2007).

171. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.4(d) (2007).

172. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8006.4(a)(2) (2007).

173. See Chapters 5 and 22 of the JLM for information on Article 78 proceedings.

174. See Carter v. State, 95 N.Y.2d 267, 272, 739 N.E.2d 730, 733, 716 N.Y.S. 2d 364, 367 (3d Dept. 2000) (dismissing a claim by a prisoner who brought an Article 78 claim six months after the decision was mailed to him because the claim violated the statute of limitations).

175. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7001-12 (2001). See Chapter 13 and Chapter 21 of the JLM for a more detailed discussion of federal and New York state habeas corpus.

176. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.6(a) (2007). The Parole Board makes the time assessment after the revocation hearing, and it begins running from the date the parole violation warrant was lodged.

177. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8002.6(c) (2007).

178. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-j (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008) (effective until Sept. 1, 2011).

179. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 9, § 8007.1 (2007).

180. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 41–42, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

but you have completed parole and shown five years of good conduct in the community, you should apply for a "Certificate of Good Conduct."[181]

If you are harassed or discriminated against for being an ex-offender following your release from parole, contact the Fortune Society at 29-76 Northern Boulevard, Long Island City, NY 11101 (phone (212) 691-7554) or the Legal Action Center at 225 Varick Street, New York, NY 10014 (phone (212) 243-1313 or toll free at (800) 223-4044). These agencies assist ex-offenders with their reentry into society. The New York Public Library publishes a practical handbook for pre-release and recently released prisoners called Corrections III. It gives information and addresses on topics including jobs, education, housing, finances, health, counseling, addiction, women's issues, homosexuality, and disability issues. Corrections III is available free of charge for New York State residents and prisoners from Institutional Library Services, The New York Public Library, 455 Fifth Ave., New York, NY 10016.

J. Parole in California

If you are sentenced to life in California, you must serve at least seven years before you may be eligible for parole. However, if you were sentenced under a part of the law that sets a minimum period of incarceration for a life sentence, then you will not be eligible for parole release until you have served that minimum period.[182]

One year prior to your minimum eligible parole release date, a panel of at least two Commissioners or Deputy Commissioners of the Board of Prison Terms will meet with you to set a parole release date. The Board considers aggravating and mitigating circumstances in its determination of your parole release date. Aggravating circumstances are those that might make the Board view your crime more harshly—for example, if your crime affected a large number of people. Mitigating circumstances are those that might make the Board view your crime less harshly—for example, if you had no prior criminal record. The Board may choose not to set a parole release date if it finds that the seriousness of the offense or of any past offenses are such that the interests of public safety require you to remain incarcerated longer.[183]

Within ten days after the hearing, you will be notified of the parole release date, the conditions you must meet to be released then, and the consequences of failure to meet those conditions.[184] At the parole hearing, you may present evidence and speak on your own behalf. Only prisoners serving life sentences may be represented by counsel at parole hearings.[185] In addition, victims have the right to make statements at parole hearings, but are "limited to comments concerning the effect of the crime on the victim."[186]

A decision that you are suitable for parole will become final within 120 days after the date of the hearing. During this time, the Parole Board may review the panel's decision. The Parole Board may reject the panel's decision and order a new hearing by majority vote based on an error of the law, an error of facts, or new information presented to the Board.[187] If the Board decides not to establish a parole date, you will be notified within twenty days. The Board will send you a written statement explaining why a parole date was not set. In addition, it will recommend activities in which you may participate to improve your chances of receiving a parole date at a future hearing. The Board will ordinarily rehear cases every year when it has declined to set a parole date.[188]

If you have been convicted of a violent felony in California, the state Department of Corrections will notify law enforcement agencies and the state attorney in the county to which you are scheduled to be released prior to your release on parole.[189] The victim may also be notified of your release.[190] If you have not been convicted of a violent felony, notice will be given regarding your release on parole only if the county of release requests it.[191]

---

181. New York State Division of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook, Questions And Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision (2010), at 42–43, available at https://www.parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html.

182. Cal. Penal Code § 3046 (West 2000).

183. Cal. Penal Code § 3041 (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

184. Cal. Penal Code § 3041.5(b)(1) (West 2000).

185. Cal. Penal Code § 3041.7 (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

186. Cal. Penal Code § 3043(b) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

187. Cal. Penal Code § 3041(b) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

188. Cal. Penal Code § 3041.5(b)(2) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

189. Cal. Penal Code § 3058.6(b) (West 2000).

190. Cal. Penal Code § 3058.8(a) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

191. Cal. Penal Code § 3058.8(a) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

You will usually be returned to the county of your last legal residence, but the Parole Board may send you to another county if found to be in the public interest. In making this decision, the Parole Board will consider:

(1) The need to protect the life or safety of a victim, the parolee, a witness, or any other person;
(2) Public concern that would reduce the chance that your parole would be successfully completed;
(3) The verified existence of a work offer, or an educational or vocational training program;
(4) The existence of family in another county with whom you have maintained strong ties and whose support would increase the chance that your parole would be successfully completed; and
(5) The lack of necessary outpatient treatment programs for parolees receiving substance abuse treatment pursuant to Section 2960.[192]

If you were convicted of a violent felony, you may not be returned on parole to a location within thirty-five miles of the actual residence of the victim or a witness to the crime.[193]

Unless the authorities can provide a good reason for it, a long delay between a re-incarceration based on a parole violation and the holding of a proper parole revocation hearing may entitle you to be restored to parole status.[194] If the Board decides to revoke your parole, you must receive a written record of the Board's decision and the opportunity to pursue an administrative appeal.[195] You can be re-incarcerated for up to twelve months if you have not had a new conviction while on parole release. However, if you commit acts of misconduct during the re-incarceration, you may be held for an additional twelve months.[196]

K. Parole in Florida

Parole has been abolished in the state of Florida.[197] If you were sentenced after October of 1983, you are ineligible for parole, and this Chapter does not apply to you. If you were sentenced prior to October of 1983, you may be eligible for parole, and this Chapter does apply to you.

You will be given an initial interview with a hearing examiner to establish a presumptive parole release date between eight months and five years after you begin your prison term.[198] Within ninety days of your initial interview, the Parole Commission will notify you of the established presumptive parole release date.[199] If your presumptive parole release date is more than two years after the initial interview, a hearing examiner will schedule an interview for review of the presumptive parole release date. This review will normally occur within two years of the initial interview and every two years thereafter.[200] However, if you were convicted of a more serious offense, including murder, attempted murder, sexual battery, or attempted sexual battery, or if you were sentenced to a minimum twenty-five year mandatory sentence, this review will only occur every five years if your presumptive release date is more than five years away.[201] Within ninety days before the presumptive parole release date, a hearing examiner will conduct a final interview with you to establish an effective parole release date and a parole release plan.

If you want to file for judicial review of the Parole Commission's calculation of your presumptive parole release date, you should file a writ of mandamus[202] in circuit court, rather than the district court of appeals.[203] To file a petition for mandamus, go to your facility's law library and ask to see a sample petition. Once you have prepared the petition to reflect the information in your case, send it to the local circuit court.

---

192. Cal. Penal Code § 3003(b) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

193. Cal. Penal Code § 3003(f) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

194. See In re Shapiro, 537 P.2d 888, 893, 14 Cal. 3d 711, 720, 122 Cal. Rptr. 768, 773 (Cal. 1975) ("[A] prompt revocation hearing is essential because delay may result in the loss of essential witnesses or ... evidence and the continuation of unnecessary incarceration or other limitations on personal liberty.").

195. See In re Ruzicka, 230 Cal. App. 3d 595, 597, 281 Cal. Rptr. 435, 436 (Cal. Ct. App. 1991) (holding that parolee was entitled to a written record of the Board's parole revocation decision and to pursue an administrative appeal where the parolee filed petition for writ of habeas corpus to challenge parole revocation).

196. Cal. Penal Code § 3057(c) (West 2000 & Supp. 2008).

198. Fla. R. Crim. P. 3.701(b)(5), (d)(12) (West 2007).

198. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.16 (West 2001).

199. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.172 (West 2001).

200. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.174(1)(a) (West 2001).

201. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.14(b) (West 2001).

202. See Parole & Prob. Comm'n v. Fuller, 491 So. 2d 275 (Fla. 1986) (holding that judicial review of presumptive parole release dates is available only through writs of mandamus, not through writs of habeas corpus).

203. See Johnson v. Fla. Parole & Prob. Comm'n, 543 So. 2d 875 (Fla. 1989) (holding that writ of mandamus to

If your conduct during incarceration has been unsatisfactory, or if you do not have a verified parole release plan, the Parole Commission may extend the presumptive parole release date—but not for more than one year. Otherwise, the presumptive parole release date will become the effective parole release date. But, you will not be released on that date until a satisfactory plan for parole supervision has been completed.[204]

If you have been convicted of certain serious felonies, you may remain under the jurisdiction of the trial judge for up to one-third of the maximum sentence imposed. When you are otherwise eligible for parole, the parole decision will be reviewed by the judge. The judge's decision whether or not to approve the release is not appealable.[205] If the judge refuses to release you on parole, you will be re-interviewed by the Parole Commission at intervals of not longer than two years. However, if you were convicted of a more serious offense, including murder, attempted murder, sexual battery, or attempted sexual battery, or if you were sentenced to a minimum twenty-five-year mandatory sentence, this review will only occur every five years if your presumptive release date is more than five years away.[206]

You can be released on parole only if:

(1) The Parole Commission finds with reasonable probability that if you are placed on parole, you will live and conduct yourself as a respectable and law-abiding person; and
(2) Your release would be compatible with your welfare and the welfare of society.

You must also show the Parole Commission that if you are released on parole, you will be suitably employed, or at least that you will not become a public charge (collect public assistance of any kind).[207]

You may be eligible for conditional medical release if:

(1) You are not sentenced to death and are permanently physically incapacitated by an illness, disease or injury, and are therefore no longer a danger to society; or
(2) You are terminally ill and your death is imminent.[208]

If you are released on conditional medical release, you will remain under supervision for the remainder of your sentence, without reducing your sentence for any credit for good behavior. During the period of supervision, you must undergo periodic physical examinations, and if it is found your medical condition no longer incapacitates you, you will be re-incarcerated, but reductions for good-time credit will be applied.[209]

Ordinarily, a condition of parole will be reparation (compensation) or restitution (reimbursement) to the victim of your offense. Failure to pay reparation or make restitution is a violation of parole and may result in revocation.[210] A violation of the terms of parole may cause you to be arrested and returned to prison to serve out the term of your sentence. However, if your parole is revoked, the Parole Commission has the discretion to give you credit for any portion of time served satisfactorily while you were on parole release.[211]

If you are arrested for a suspected parole violation, a preliminary hearing will be held within thirty days of your arrest. You may be represented by a lawyer. If the preliminary hearing results in a finding of reasonable grounds to believe that you have committed a parole violation, a final revocation hearing will be held. You may also be represented by a lawyer at the final hearing.[212]

The parole period of supervision may not exceed the maximum period of your sentence. If you are being paroled from a single or concurrent sentence, the Parole Commission must give reasons in writing for extending the period of supervision beyond two years.[213] challenge suspension of prisoners' presumptive parole release dates should be filed in the circuit court, rather than the district court of appeal), overruled on other grounds by Sheley v. Fla. Parole Comm'n, 720 So. 2d 216 (Fla. 1998).

---

204. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.1745 (West 2001).
205. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.16(4)(g) (West 2001).
206. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.174(b) (West 2001).
207. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.18 (West 2001 & Supp. 2008).
208. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.149(1) (West 2001).
209. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.149 (West 2001).
210. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.181 (West 2001).
211. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.21 (West 2001).
212. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.23 (West 2001 & Supp. 2008).
213. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 947.24 (West 2001 & Supp. 2008).

L. Parole in Illinois

Parole has been abolished in the state of Illinois.[214] If you were sentenced after February 2, 1978, you will have received a determinate sentence, and this Chapter no longer applies to you. This Chapter only applies to you if you were sentenced prior to February 2, 1978.

The Prison Review Board (Board) sets a fixed release date for all prisoners sentenced after 1977. If you were sentenced prior to 1977, you have an indeterminate sentence.[215] In determining a fixed release date, the Board considers the sentencing court's intent, aggravating and mitigating factors, good conduct credit, and your behavior since incarceration.[216] If you accept a release date determined by the Board, you are no longer eligible for parole. If you do not accept a fixed release date from the Board, you will be eligible for parole when you have served one of the following:

(1) The minimum term of an indeterminate sentence minus time credit for good behavior, or twenty years minus time credit for good behavior, whichever is less; or
(2) Twenty years of a life sentence minus credit for good behavior; or
(3) Twenty years or one-third of a determinate sentence, whichever is less, minus credit for good behavior.[217]

In making its determination of parole, the Board considers reports prepared by corrections staff, and materials submitted by you, the State's Attorney, and the victim.[218] Even if you are eligible for parole, the Board will not parole you if it determines that:

(1) There is a substantial risk that you will not conform to reasonable conditions of parole;
(2) Your release would minimize the seriousness of the offense or promote disrespect for the law; or
(3) Your release would have a substantially adverse effect on institutional discipline.

If parole is denied, ordinarily a re-hearing is set for one year later, but no later than three years after the denial (with an exception for certain sexual crimes).[219]

The Board will specify whatever conditions of parole it thinks necessary to assist you in leading a law-abiding life; however, parole conditions will always require that you not do certain things and that you do other things. There are additional rules if you were convicted of a sex offense.

As conditions of parole, you may not do any of the following:

(1) Violate a criminal statute in any jurisdiction;
(2) Possess a firearm or other dangerous weapon;
(3) Use or possess narcotics or any other controlled substance or instruments to use such substances;
(4) Go to places where controlled substances are sold, used, or distributed;
(5) Associate with other people you know are on parole or mandatory supervised release without permission from your parole agent, or with people who are in an organized gang.[220]

In addition, you must do all of the following:

(1) Report to an agent of the Department of Corrections;
(2) Allow the agent to visit you at your house, place of employment, or other places when necessary;
(3) Attend or reside at a facility for the instruction or residence of people on parole;
(4) Obtain permission before writing or visiting a person who is incarcerated in an Illinois prison;
(5) Report arrests to an agent within twenty-four hours of release from custody;
(6) Obtain permission from an agent before leaving Illinois;
(7) Obtain permission from an agent before changing your address or job;
(8) Consent to a search of your person, property, and residence;
(9) Submit to drug testing when instructed by a parole agent; and
(10) Provide truthful information to parole agents in response to their questions.[221]

---

215. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-2 (West 2007).
215. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-2.1 (West 2007).
216. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-2.1(e) (West 2007).
217. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-3(a) (West 2007).
218. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-4(d) (West 2007).
219. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-5(c) (West 2007).
220. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-7 (West 2007 & Supp. 2008).
221. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-7 (West 2007 & Supp. 2008).

If you are released on parole and then suspected of having violated a condition of parole, you will have a preliminary hearing before a hearing officer to determine whether there is cause to hold you for a revocation hearing. A preliminary hearing is not required when the possible revocation is based on new criminal charges. You may appear at a revocation hearing before at least one member of the Board to answer the charge and bring witnesses on your behalf. If you are found to have violated a condition of your parole, the Board may recommit you for any portion of the imposed maximum term of imprisonment, or it may take lesser actions that do not involve recommitment.[222] Even if you are recommitted for a parole violation, you may still be eligible for future release on parole.[223]

Every felony sentence, except a life sentence, includes a mandatory supervised release period or "parole term" that ranges from one to three years (with the exception of certain sex crimes, which have longer release periods).[224] The Board may discharge you from parole when it determines that you are likely to remain at liberty without committing another offense.[225] If you have been released on parole, and you believe you are entitled to a final discharge from your sentence, you may file a habeas corpus petition seeking to be released outright while you are on parole release.[226]

M. Parole in Texas

If you are serving a life sentence for a capital felony in Texas, you will not be eligible for release on parole until the actual calendar time that you have served is equal to forty calendar years, not including good conduct time.[227] Unless you have been convicted of certain serious felonies, including murder, indecency with a child, aggravated kidnapping, sexual assault, or robbery, you will be eligible for release on parole when your calendar time served, plus good conduct time, equals one-fourth of the maximum sentence imposed or fifteen years, whichever is less.[228] You may be released on parole when a parole panel establishes that your release will not increase the likelihood of harm to the public. Counsel may represent you at your parole hearing when you appear before the parole panel.

You may be placed on parole only when arrangements have been made for your employment or maintenance and care, and when the parole panel believes you are able and willing to fulfill the obligations of a law-abiding citizen. If you are released on parole, you may be subject to certain conditions, including attendance at substance abuse or sex offender treatment programs, electronic monitoring, residence requirements, and payment towards the cost of parole supervision. Parole may be granted early to elderly, disabled, mentally ill or retarded, or terminally ill prisoners.[229]

If you are released on parole and are then accused of or arrested for violating parole, you are ordinarily entitled to a hearing within forty days after the arrest or within a reasonable time if you are arrested in another state.[230] Proof that you were convicted and sentenced for another crime while out on parole is enough to justify parole revocation. However, you may request a hearing at which you can present mitigating factors for the later conviction. If your parole is revoked, you may not get credit for the time that you were out on parole. If you want to challenge a revocation of parole, you should file a state habeas corpus petition with the court that convicted you of the original offense from which you were paroled.[231]

---

222. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-9 (West. 2007).

223. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-10 (West 2007).

224. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/5-8-1(d) (West 2007).

225. 730 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 5/3-3-8(b) (West 2007).

226. See Collins v. Sielaff, 43 Ill. App. 3d 1022, 357 N.E.2d 1213 (Ill. App. Ct. 1976) (allowing parolee to maintain a habeas corpus action claiming entitlement to final discharge).

227. Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 508.145(b) (Vernon 2004 & Supp. 2007) (repealed for crimes committed after Sept. 1, 2005).

228. Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 508.145(f) (Vernon 2004 & Supp. 2007); Tex. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 42.12, §§ 3g(a)(1)(A), (C)–(E), 3g(2) (Vernon 2004). Prisoners serving time for felony offenses listed in the portions of part 42.12 that are specified above will not be eligible for release on parole until "the inmate's actual calendar time served, without consideration of good conduct time, equals one-half of the sentence or 30 calendar years, whichever is less, but in no event is the inmate eligible for release on parole in less than two calendar years." Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 508.145(d) (Vernon 2004 & Supp. 2007).

229. Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 508.146 (Vernon 2004 & Supp. 2007).

230. Tex. Gov't Code Ann. § 508.282 (Vernon 2004).

231. See Bd. of Pardons & Paroles ex rel. Keene v. Court of Appeals for the Eighth District, 910 S.W.2d 481, 483 (Tex. Crim. App. 1995) (noting that when parolee sought state habeas corpus relief following the revocation of his parole, such a claim should be brought before the original convicting court). For more information on state habeas corpus in

To complete the parole period, you must serve out the whole term for which you were sentenced, which may or may not include the time you served prior to release on parole. Depending on your specific situation, the Paroles and Pardons Division may allow you to serve the remainder of your term without supervision.

N. Parole In Michigan

If you are serving an indeterminate sentence in a Michigan state prison, and you have served your minimum sentence minus any allowances (such as good time or a disciplinary credit), the Michigan state Parole Board may grant you parole at its discretion.[232] You may be granted "special parole" before you finish serving your minimum term, if your sentencing judge gives written approval.[233]

If you are serving a sentence for a drug offense, you may be eligible for parole before your minimum term is over—after half your minimum sentence, after five years, or after ten years—depending on the severity of your offense.[234]

If you are serving a life sentence, you may still be eligible for parole, unless you were convicted of first degree murder, adulterating medicine or selling adulterated medicine, explosives-related offenses, or criminal sexual conduct.[235] You may become eligible for parole from a life sentence within as few as ten years, depending on the crime for which you were convicted.[236] See Section 791.234(8) of the Michigan Compiled Laws for additional conditions that will apply.

If you have been sentenced for consecutive terms, you become eligible for parole when you have served the total time of the added minimum terms, minus any good time and disciplinary credits, if you are not subject to disciplinary time.[237] If you have remaining consecutive terms to serve, the Parole Board is allowed to terminate the remainder of the sentence you are currently serving once you have served the minimum term of your present sentence.[238]

The Michigan Parole Board will not grant you parole until it is satisfied that you made arrangements for employment, education, and any necessary mental health or medical care.[239] You must have earned your high school diploma or GED if you were not employed when you committed the crime, unless you were sentenced before December 15, 1998 or your minimum sentence was less than two years.[240]

The Parole Board must interview you at least one month before your minimum sentence has expired, minus applicable good time and disciplinary credits if you are not subject to disciplinary time.[241] You should receive a notice of intent to conduct an interview from the Parole Board at least one month before the interview date.[242] The notice must state the specific issues and concerns that will be discussed at the interview and that may be a basis for a denial of parole. The board cannot deny your parole for a reason that is not stated in the notice, except for good cause as stated to you at or before your interview, and as listed in the required written explanation.[243] Read the notice carefully, and be prepared to challenge and present evidence on any inaccurate issues stated in the notice.

Unless you are serving a life sentence, the Parole Board is allowed to decide whether to grant you parole without interviewing you. However, the Board can only do this if, after evaluating you according to the parole guidelines, they determine that you have a high probability of either being paroled or being denied

---

Texas, see JLM, Chapter 21.

232. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.234(1) (West 2008). Michigan does not require that every prisoner be eligible for parole. See, e.g., People v. Merriweather, 527 N.W.2d 460, 464, 447 Mich. 799, 809 (Mich. 1994) ("We find no basis, however, to conclude … the Legislature intended … all defendants, or even simply this defendant, must be eligible for parole.").

233. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.233 (1)(b)–(d) (West 2008).

234. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.234 (West 2008).

235. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.234(6)(a)–(f) (West 2008).

236. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.234(7) (West 2008).

237. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.234 (3)–(4) (West 2008).

238. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.234 (5) (West 2008).

239. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.233 (1)(e) (West 2008).

240. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.233 (1)(f) (West 2008). You are exempt from this requirement if you are over 65, have a learning disability, or some other reason outside your control.

241. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (1) (West 2008).

242. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (4) (West 2008).

243. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (4) (West 2008).

parole.[244] You may also waive your right to an interview, but the waiver must be in writing and no later than thirty days after the notice of intent to conduct an interview is issued.[245]

During the interview, you may be represented by an individual of your choice, but your representative cannot be a fellow prisoner or an attorney.[246] You or your representative can present relevant evidence to support your release and challenge any inaccurate information in the notice. When making a parole determination, the Parole Board cannot consider an expunged juvenile record or any information it determines is inaccurate.[247] The Parole Board can consider—but cannot base a parole denial solely on—your marital history, prior arrests not resulting in conviction, or adjudication of delinquency.[248] The Parole Board must consider any statements made by a victim.[249] In addition, the Parole Board member conducting your interview must review information relevant to the notice of intent to conduct an interview, such as the parole eligibility report institutional staff prepared. The parole eligibility report includes information such as all the major misconduct of which you have been found guilty, your work and education record during confinement, and the results of any physical, mental, or psychiatric examinations performed on you.[250]

If the Michigan Parole Board decides not to release you, you will receive a written explanation of the reason for the denial, which may include specific recommendations for corrective action that you may take to improve your future chances of release.[251] Only the prosecutor or crime victim can appeal a decision made by a Parole Board; your ability to appeal the Parole Board's decision has been eliminated.[252] The appropriate standard of review for the Parole Board's determination is an abuse of discretion standard.[253] Habeas corpus is available only under extreme circumstances, such as where parole has been denied based on your race, religion, or national origin.[254] There is no statutory requirement that you be re-interviewed within the next twelve months – the Court of Appeals of Michigan has held that there is "no statutory impediment" to a Parole Board's decision not to reconsider a prisoner's eligibility for parole for two years."[255]

O. Conclusion

This Chapter provides a detailed overview of New York State parole procedures, from the release hearing to the revocation process. It also includes a brief overview of parole procedures and practices in these states: California, Florida, Illinois, Texas, and Michigan. We hope as well that prisoners in states not specifically covered in this Chapter will acquire a better understanding of parole policies. In general, this Chapter may serve as a model for ideas on how to research and whom to contact when learning about the parole system in your own state. Note, however, many states have eliminated parole and now impose determinate sentences. All prisoners, even where the information is detailed, should refer directly to the applicable statutes and regulations of their state to see if there have been changes made following the JLM's publication.

244. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.235 (1)–(2) (West 2008).

245. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (6) (West 2008).

246. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (6) (West 2008).

247. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.235 (1)(a)–(b) (West 2008).

248. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.235 (3)(a)–(b) (West 2008).

249. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (1) (West 2008).

250. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.235 (5), (7)(a) –(e) (West 2008).

251. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 791.235 (12) (West 2008).

252. Morales v. Mich. Parole Bd., 260 Mich. App. 29, 36, 676 N.W.2d 221, 227–28 (Mich. 2003) (noting that, "[b]y eliminating the phrase, 'shall be appealable by the prisoner,' ... the Legislature clearly intended" to eliminate the prisoner's right to appeal a parole board's decision).

253. Wayne County Prosecutor v. Parole Board, 210 Mich. App. 148, 153, 532 N.W.2d 899, 901 (1995). This discretion is restricted by Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 791.233(1), 791.235(1), (3), (4), (7)–(9) (West 2008).

254. Morales v. Mich. Parole Bd., 260 Mich. App. 29, 40, 676 N.W.2d 221, 230 (Mich. 2003) ("[T]he writ of habeas corpus deals only with radical defects which render a judgment or proceeding absolutely void.").

255. In re Parole of Roberts, 232 Mich. App. 253, 255, 591 N.W.2d 259, 260 (1998).

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 33:
Rights of Incarcerated Parents

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 33

RIGHTS OF INCARCERATED PARENTS*

A. Introduction

This chapter discusses the childcare and custody rights of incarcerated parents. According to the U.S. Department of Justice, an estimated 809,800 parents of children under eighteen were serving time in state and federal prisons in 2007.[1] 1,706,600 children under eighteen had parents in prison.[2]

As a parent in prison, you may fear that your child will not be cared for, that you will lose your child, or that your relationship with your child will suffer while you are incarcerated. This Chapter focuses on New York state law and describes how the law provides parents in prison with various legal tools to prevent these things from happening.

First, however, you should be aware that federal laws regulate the rights of incarcerated parents whose children are in the child welfare system (but not if your child is under private custody or guardianship). In 1997, Congress passed the Adoption and Safe Families Act (ASFA),[3] a series of laws that make it much harder for incarcerated parents to keep their parental rights. Different states have passed laws applying ASFA in different ways, so it is important for you to know the ASFA laws that apply in your state. Some of the significant changes in New York law following AFSA include:

(1) In some cases, the state no longer has to try to reunite children in foster care with parents who are incarcerated;[4]
(2) Unless certain exceptions apply, the State must file to terminate parental rights[5] for children who have been in foster care for fifteen out of the last twenty-two months, children who have been abandoned, or children with parents who have been convicted of certain violent crimes;[6]
(3) People with certain criminal convictions or who live with an adult who has a criminal record cannot be foster parents.[7]

---

* This Chapter was written by Angélica Cházaro based in part on previous versions by Valentina Morales, Kai-lin Hsu, and Lisa Rios. Special thanks to Prof. Philip M. Genty, Clinical Professor of Law and Director, Prisoners and Families Clinic, Columbia University School of Law.

1. Press Release, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, An Estimated 809,800 Inmates in the Nation's Prisons Were Parents to 1,706,600 Minor Children at Midyear 2007 (Aug. 26, 2008), available at http://www.ojp.usdoj.gov/bjs/pub/press/pptmcpr.htm (last visited Sept. 2, 2008). For a detailed report on these statistics, consult Lauren E. Glaze and Laura M. Maruschak, Special Report, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Parents in Prison and Their Minor Children (Aug. 8, 2008), available at http://bjs.ojp.usdoj.gov/content/pub/pdf/pptmc.pdf (last visited July 21, 2010).

2. Press Release, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, An Estimated 809,800 Inmates in the Nation's Prisons Were Parents to 1,706,600 Minor Children at Midyear 2007 (Aug. 26, 2008), available at http://www.ojp.usdoj.gov/newsroom/pressreleases/2008/bjs08101.htm (last visited July 21, 2010).

3. The full text of ASFA can be found at 42 U.S.C. §§ 670–679b (2000). Several provisions of the Act have been amended in part or repealed in part since 1997. For further information on the history of AFSA and other federal child welfare laws, please see Factsheet, Child Welfare Information Gateway, U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services, Major Federal Legislation Concerned with Child Protection, Child Welfare, and Adoption (Feb. 2009), available at http://www.childwelfare.gov/pubs/otherpubs/majorfedlegis.pdf (last visited July 23, 2010).

4. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003), amended by 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 3, pt. A, § 36 (McKinney).

5. Termination of parental rights is when the state permanently ends your rights as a parent and either takes on those rights itself or grants them to another person through adoption.

6. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(i) (McKinney 2003), repealed in part and amended in part by 2006 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 460 (McKinney). The formula used to determine how long your child has been placed in foster care may depend on where you and your child are located. In New York, the Department will start counting from two months after either the date of placement or the date the child was removed from the home, whichever comes earlier. This means that the amount of time counted for ASFA purposes may be different than the amount of time your child has actually spent under the custody of the Department. For example, if your child was placed under custody of the Department upon your incarceration, but it took the Department one month to find placement for your child, you would have sixteen months before the State had to initiate proceedings to terminate your parental rights. So starting from the date of your incarceration, you may have up to seventeen months before the State will begin proceedings. Note that other states may calculate the time period that a child has been in foster care somewhat differently, so you should always be sure to determine what the law says in your state. For more information on legal research, see JLM, Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research."

All of these provisions will be discussed more fully below.

As a parent in prison, you may find yourself in one of three situations:

(1) Your child is living with friends or family members who receive no state supervision or funding other than welfare.
   - This practice is known as "private placement" and will be discussed in Part B of this Chapter. ASFA does not apply to these placements.

(2) You chose to place your child in foster care.
   - Again, your child may be living with foster parents who are relatives or persons unrelated to you. The state will supervise and provide funding to these foster parents for the care of your child. This practice is known as "voluntary placement" and will be discussed in Part C of this Chapter. If your child is in foster care and you would like to put him up for adoption, your options are discussed in Part F of this Chapter.

(3) Your child was taken from your home by either the Office of Children & Family Services (a New York state agency) or by the Administration for Children's Services (a New York City agency)[8] and placed in foster care.
   - Your child may be living with foster parents who are relatives or persons unrelated to you. Again, the state will supervise and provide funding to these foster parents for your child's care. This practice is known as "involuntary foster care" and will be discussed in Part C below.

New York law generally supports parents who want to take custody of their children after being in jail. The law states that it is desirable for a child to "be returned to the birth parent because the child's need for a normal family life will usually best be met in the [natural] home, and ... parents are entitled to bring up their own children unless the best interests of the child would be thereby endangered."[9] However, the law will only prioritize your parental rights if you show interest and involvement in your child's welfare and a commitment to parenting upon your release.[10] Evidence of involvement in your child's life may include letter writing, telephone calls, visits from your child, and efforts to communicate and cooperate with your case worker.[11]

The beginning of this Chapter discusses how your child will be cared for while you are in prison, both under private placement (Part B) and foster care (Part C). Part C explains placement in both voluntary and involuntary foster care. It describes the procedures for voluntary and involuntary placement, including court hearings and reviews. Part C then discusses placement and planning for your child, which are the same under both foster care plans. Part C then describes your rights and obligations as well as the obligations of

---

7. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e) (McKinney 2003).

8. The Office of Children and Family Services (OCFS) is the state agency responsible for supervising and managing foster care in New York State. The Administration for Children's Services (ACS) handles these duties in New York City, while county departments of social services manage foster care for areas outside of New York City. For simplicity, this Chapter uses "DSS" (Department of Social Services) to refer to all local child protective agencies that are responsible for foster care placement. Each county in New York has a social services department. For questions about foster care generally, you can call (800) 345-KIDS, a free phone number for OCFS. Also see the end of this chapter for more contact information for OCFS and county-specific DSS offices.

9. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(1)(a)(ii) (McKinney Supp. 2003); see also Ruth v. Beaudoin, 55 A.D.2d 52, 53–54, 389 N.Y.S.2d 473, 474 (3d Dept. 1976) (stating that this "law contains the presumption that the best interests of the child will be promoted by returning the child to the custody of its natural parent" (quoting People ex rel. Patricia "BB" v. Albany County Dept. of Soc. Serv., 47 A.D.2d 974, 974, 366 N.Y.S.2d 692, 694 (3d Dept. 1975)).

10. A recent amendment to the law exempts prolonged stays in foster care from mandatory termination of parental rights if "the parent or parents are incarcerated, or participating in a residential substance abuse treatment program, or the prior incarceration or participation of a parent or parents in a residential substance abuse treatment program is a significant factor in why the child has been in foster care for fifteen of the last twenty-two months, provided that the parent maintains a meaningful role in the child's life." N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 384-b(3)(l)(i), 409(e) (McKinney 2010). See also In re Lindsey B., 16 A.D.3d 1078, 791 N.Y.S.2d 261 (4th Dept. 2005) (finding that a father's incarceration was not a defense to an abandonment petition where father made no effort to communicate with daughter or learn of her whereabouts); In re Elizabeth Susanna R., 11 A.D.3d 619, 783 N.Y.S.2d 641 (2d Dept. 2004) (stating that "a parent's incarcerated status does not excuse him or her from establishing or maintaining contact with his or her child").

11. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 384-b(3)(l)(v), 409(e) (McKinney 2010).

the Department of Social Services (DSS),[12] while your child is in foster care. Finally, Part C explains how your child will be returned to you after your release.

Part D explains involuntary termination of your parental rights, a process that allows another person to adopt your child when he is in foster care. It details the ways you can defend yourself against involuntary termination and lists the steps you should take while your child is in foster care to make sure that your parental rights are not terminated. The end of Part D discusses the difficulties long-term prisoners face in preventing involuntary termination.

Part E discusses challenges unique to incarcerated fathers, explaining the extra steps fathers in prison must take in order to protect their rights. Part F discusses the procedure for voluntarily terminating your parental rights and putting your child up for adoption. Finally, Parts G and H explain your right to an attorney for different proceedings.

B. Private Placement with a Relative or Friend

Many incarcerated parents try to place their child in the home of a relative or friend without involving the foster care system. This practice is called "private placement." Private placement is the best way for parents in prison to keep their parental rights because the strict ASFA rules do not apply to children in private placements—they only apply to children in foster care. The main advantage to private placement is that your child will be cared for by someone you know and trust. It also allows your child to live in familiar surroundings, which can lessen the trauma that a child may feel from being separated from his parent. If you want a relative or friend (sometimes called a "caretaker") to care for your child, you should, if possible, enter into a written agreement signed by both you and by the relative or friend. The agreement should include three important points:

(1) You are giving temporary custody of your child to that person while you are in prison;
(2) Your child will be returned to you when you are released; and
(3) The caretaker (the relative or friend) will bring your child to visit you in prison.

This agreement will allow your child's caretaker (relative or friend) to register the child for school, get public assistance, and receive medical care for the child. It will also help secure the return of your child to your custody when you are released from prison. Note that you may have to fill out paperwork or releases in order to legally allow the caretaker to register your child for school and other public services.

If you know someone who is willing to care for your child but does not have the money to do so, he may be eligible to receive public assistance, food stamps, and Medicaid, so long as he assumes custody or guardianship. Your child can also be placed with a close relative through DSS, a practice called "kinship foster care." Under this arrangement, your child will be considered in foster care even though he is living with a relative. This arrangement, which is different from a private placement, is discussed in Part C(1)(d) of this Chapter. Granting custody or guardianship does not mean that you are permanently giving up your parental rights. The terms only mean that you are giving permission for someone else to care and be responsible for your child for a temporary period until you can resume caring for him yourself. It is worth checking with each agency to find out what paperwork you must fill out in order for the caretaker to receive assistance both for himself and for your child.

C. Foster Care

If private arrangements with your relatives or friends do not work out, you may choose to apply through DSS to have your child placed in foster care, either with a relative or with a certified foster parent who is not related to you (which can include a friend). Either way, you must make sure that someone will be caring for your child while you are in prison. If you do not arrange for the care of your child during your incarceration, permanent neglect proceedings can be initiated against you.[13] Foster care is a way of providing for children whose parents cannot care for them. The state has legal custody of children in foster care, which means that the state takes responsibility for the child. The state may hire a private foster care agency that will work with you and your child to find a placement in foster care. Foster care is not supposed to be a permanent

12. According to the State of New York, the 58 Departments of Social Services throughout the state are responsible for all publicly funded social services and cash assistance programs. Families qualify for DSS assistance based on income and other criteria. DSS assistance includes subsidies for childcare costs.

13. See Part D(1)(b) of this Chapter for a discussion of permanent neglect.

solution; it is meant to help families through difficult times and to make sure that children are living in safe and healthy environments.

There are several different ways children can be placed in foster care. When the parent or parents themselves choose to place their children in foster care, it is called "voluntary placement." When a judge orders the child to be placed in foster care because the child's previous caretakers were abusive or neglectful, it is called "involuntary placement." Children may be placed with relatives ("kinship foster care"), with an agency-approved foster family, in a group home, or in a residential facility. All foster care parents receive funding and supervision from either DSS directly or any separate foster care agency involved in the particular case.

1. Voluntary Placement

If you cannot arrange for the care of your child with family or friends or if you are not satisfied with the care your child is receiving, you may choose to place your child in foster care. Furthermore, under New York law, your child may have to be placed in foster care if you become "unavailable" due to "arrest, detainment, or imprisonment."[14]

You do not permanently give up your parental rights by placing your child in foster care. You are still legally his parent. It does not mean that you are giving up or abandoning your child, and it does not show that you are unfit as a parent. It only means that you are temporarily unable to provide your child with the care you think he needs. If you fulfill your foster care obligations and if you are released within a relatively short time, you will have a good chance of getting your child back after your release.

However, if you are going to be in prison for more than twelve months, then placing your child in foster care may create a risk of involuntary termination of your parental rights. You should seriously consider your decision to place your child in foster care because ASFA generally requires the state to file for termination of parental rights for children who have been in foster care for fifteen out of the last twenty-two months.

In summary, if you are able to privately place your child with a friend or relative, it may be the best way for you to protect your parental rights. It is important to consider all of your options carefully before placing your child in foster care for fifteen months or longer.

(a) Initial Placement Process

To arrange for your child's foster care, you should first contact the Department of Social Services (DSS).[15] Either you or someone you have entrusted with the care of your child can transfer your child to a foster care arrangement.[16] However, you should contact DSS yourself because if a relative or friend places your child in foster care for you, the agency might only communicate with that other person. Also, a foster care arrangement made by someone else does not affect your rights and obligations as a parent. DSS must consult with you regarding your child. If you are not being contacted, inform DSS and/or the foster care agency that you are the parent and tell them that you wish to make the decisions about your child's care.

When you make contact with DSS, a caseworker will arrange to meet with you to explain the process of placing your child in the custody of DSS and the available foster care options. He will also ask you to sign a Voluntary Placement Agreement,[17] a contract between you and DSS that places your child in foster care. By signing the Agreement, you temporarily transfer the custody and care of your child to the Commissioner of DSS. Read the form carefully because it will state what DSS must do for your child while he is in foster care. The Agreement also lists the responsibilities of DSS, as well as your obligations while the child is in foster

---

14. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.10(c) (1995). This section states that children must be removed from their homes and placed in foster care when removal is essential for securing proper care, nurturance, or treatment. It explains that one circumstance where foster care placement may be essential to ensuring proper care, nurturance, or treatment is when the parents of the child are arrest, detained, or imprisoned.

15. Contact the county department of social services for the county in which your child is living, or the Administration for Children's Services (ACS) if your child lives in New York City. See the end of this Chapter for contact information for ACS and all other New York counties.

16. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(1) (McKinney 2003), amended by 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws ch. 3, pt. A § 52 (McKinney).

17. You can obtain a New York City Voluntary Placement Agreement Form (Form W-864) by writing to the Administration for Children's Services (ACS), 150 Williams Street, 18th Floor, New York, New York 10038, or by calling ACS at (212) 341-0900. The website for ACS is www.nyc.gov/html/acs/home.html (last visited July 23, 2010).

care.[18] The Agreement must say that the agency may be required to file for termination of parental rights if your child remains in foster care for fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months.[19]

The Agreement is a standard form, which means it is the same for everyone. If you want to add something to the agreement that you feel is important, you have a right to suggest changes. For instance, you may wish to add any or all of the following: a release date for your child (perhaps the date of your release from prison); that your children, if you have more than one, be kept together; a request that your child remain in his current school; that the child be kept near the home neighborhood; or the minimum number of hours per month that you wish to visit with your child. You should strongly consider adding these items to the Agreement form because DSS is obligated to try to provide your child with the care established in the form.[20] You should be aware that DSS might resist making changes to the standard form. If you want the Agreement changed to fit your child's needs, speak to your caseworker about it.

Whether or not you add specific conditions to the Placement Agreement, it is very important to ask for a copy of the final Agreement that you sign. You should keep your own personal file, which should include a copy of the Agreement as well as any other letters sent to you by DSS or letters that you write to DSS.

During your first visit with your caseworker, you may also be asked to sign a Designation of Religious Preference for Children.[21] On this form, you may state whether you wish for your child to be placed with an independent foster care agency affiliated with a particular religion. You can state whether you want your child to receive religious training while in foster care. If you write down a religious preference and say that you want your child to be cared for by a family of that religion, DSS must either (1) place your child with a family practicing that religion, (2) show that your child's faith will be protected in the family in which he is placed, or (3) show why finding a placement with such a family was not "practicable" or "in the best interests of the child."[22] This means that if DSS does not place your child with a family practicing your chosen religion, DSS must be able to prove that it was practically impossible to find such a family or they must be able to give a good reason why it would be better for your child not to be in such a family. If DSS does not place your child in such a family and fails to give a good reason why not, you can demand that they place your child with a family that practices your religion.

Your caseworker may ask you to sign a form in which you agree you will be legally responsible for some of the costs of maintaining your child. You must write down on this form whether or not you can contribute to your child's expenses while he is in foster care. Even though you are in prison, you still have a duty to financially support your child. However, DSS could take your situation into consideration and not expect you to contribute to your child's expenses because you are in prison and probably have little or no income.

You and the caseworker will develop a plan to help keep a close relationship between you and your child. This plan, which includes the rights and obligations of both you and the agency, is discussed in Part C(4) of this Chapter.

Finally, DSS should provide you with a list of lawyers or legal services groups to help you in placing your child. One source of help may be Prisoners' Legal Services.[23] Unfortunately, it is extremely unlikely that you will be able to find a free lawyer for a voluntary placement case, so do not be afraid to take as much time and ask as many questions as you need in order to understand the forms that DSS will make you fill out since you will probably be the person making the decisions for the voluntary placement of your child.

(b) Court Approval of the Placement—358a Hearing

The next step in voluntary placement is court approval. New York state law requires a family court judge to review and approve every voluntary placement of a child in foster care lasting longer than thirty days.[24] This proceeding is called a "358a hearing" because it is required by Section 358a of the Social

---

18. These obligations are described in Part C(4) of this Chapter.

19. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(c)(ix) (McKinney 2003).

20. If you believe that the care your child is receiving in foster care does not satisfy the requirements set forth in the Voluntary Placement Agreement, you should first tell your caseworker. Then you or your lawyer, if you have one, should petition the family court judge who signed your child's placement order to review the care the agency is providing for your child and to order the agency to follow the Agreement.

21. The New York City Designation of Religious Preference for Children (Form CM-309) is similar to forms used throughout the state. You can get the appropriate form from the agency handling your case.

22. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.11(c)(2)(iii) (2009).

23. See Appendix IV of the JLM for addresses of legal services organizations.

24. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(1)(a) (McKinney 2003).

Services Law. DSS is responsible for filing a petition with the court asking for approval of the placement. The petition will include a notice "in conspicuous print"—which means it must be clear, obvious, and not in very small print—stating that if a child remains in foster care for fifteen of twenty-two months, the agency may be required to file for a termination of parental rights.[25]

The judge must give you notice of the hearing. In order to be present at the hearing, you should write a letter, similar to the one shown in Appendix A of this Chapter, asking the court to instruct the prison to bring you to the hearing.

Your caseworker may ask you to sign a waiver of your right to attend.[26] A waiver means that you formally agree to give up a particular right. You do not have to sign a waiver. Sometimes people choose to waive rights as part of a deal with the state, because they get something from the state in return for signing the waiver. If you do choose to sign a waiver of your right to attend the hearing, the court does not have to make sure that you can attend the hearing. Generally, signing a waiver is not a good idea because you give up the valuable opportunity to inform the judge of your problems or questions during the voluntary placement process.

You have a right to a lawyer for the hearing. If you cannot afford your own lawyer, the judge will assign you a free lawyer when you are brought to court for the hearing.[27] If you are using your own lawyer, make sure to contact him in advance about the proceeding. A lawyer is meant to be your voice during these proceedings, so if you have any questions or requests or if you are concerned about something, be sure to ask your lawyer.

At the hearing, the court is supposed to ensure that your child will be put in foster care only if the "best interest and welfare of the child would be promoted by the removal of such child from such home."[28] This means that foster care is appropriate only when a child would not otherwise receive proper care, nurturing, or treatment.[29] DSS must try to find relatives who can take care of your child.[30] This arrangement, called "kinship foster care," is not the same as the private placement discussed in Part B. Kinship foster care is explained in Part C(1)(d) of this Chapter. Apart from trying to find relatives, DSS must try to find and record information about your child's other parent.[31]

The judge must also verify that you knowingly and voluntarily signed the Voluntary Placement Agreement.[32] If you have any questions or problems regarding the placement process or the Voluntary Agreement, you should make them known at this hearing.

Any problems with the agency can be communicated to the judge at the hearing. Such problems might include the following situations: the agency refuses to add your requests to the Voluntary Placement Agreement; there have not been enough (or any) visits between you and your child; the agency has broken many of its promises; or it is difficult for you to communicate with the agency (in other words, the caseworker does not return your calls, the prison will not allow you to make calls, etc.). If you have signed a waiver and do not attend a 358a hearing, the judge will review the papers submitted by DSS, including the Voluntary Placement Agreement, and will generally approve the Agreement as you signed it.[33]

(c) Court Review of Placement—Permanency Hearings

(i) Automatic Review

Once a placement has been approved in a 358a hearing, the agency is required to check in with the family court from time to time for review of your child's situation in foster care. The agency must report to the family court within eight months of the date your child was removed from his home and then every six months thereafter.[34] The court may order a review at any time.[35] Also, you can ask the court for a review at

25. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2003).
26. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).
27. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 262(a)(iv) (McKinney 2010). See Part H of this Chapter for more on your right to counsel.
28. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003); N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358a(1)(a) (McKinney Supp. 2010).
29. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, §§ 430.8(a)(2), 430.10(c) (2006).
30. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(1-a) (McKinney 2010).
31. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(1-b) (McKinney Supp. 2010).
32. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law. § 358-a(3)(a) (McKinney 2003).
33. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law. § 358-a(5) (McKinney 2003).
34. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(a)(2)–(3) (McKinney Supp. 2010).
35. See N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1088 (McKinney Supp. 2010) (providing the family court with the express power to any time.[36] If a court decides for any of the reasons listed in the statute[37] that the agency does not have to make reasonable efforts to reunite your family, then a permanency hearing must take place within thirty days.[38] See Part C(4)(a) of this Chapter for a discussion of "reasonable efforts."

These reviews are called "permanency hearings," because they decide a permanent plan for your child.[39] A permanent plan considers (1) whether your child will be returned to you, placed with a relative, or released for adoption; (2) whether termination of parental rights will be filed against you; and (3) what services have been provided to reunite the family where appropriate.[40] The state may create an alternative permanent placement and must use reasonable efforts to find a placement if family reunification is not in the child's best interests.[41]

The court must notify you at least fourteen days before each of these hearings, and you have a right to attend.[42] As with the 358a hearing, you must ask the judge to order the prison to take you to the permanency hearing. You or your lawyer, if you have one, should write to the judge as soon as you know when your hearing is scheduled to request such an order. Information on getting to court is included in Part H of this Chapter. Also see the sample letter included in Appendix A of this Chapter.

At the hearing, explain to the judge any problems you have with the foster care your child is receiving.[43] By law, the judge has to look at what is in the "best interests" of the child, so if there is a problem, you should try to explain how your child's "best interests" are suffering.[44] The judge can order DSS to provide a variety of services for you and your child, including arranging additional visits.[45]

(ii) Requested Review

After the initial permanency hearing, you do not need to wait for another scheduled hearing to complain about your child's foster care. You may request a permanency hearing to address problems that arise between scheduled hearings and cannot be resolved with your caseworker.[46] In a motion to the court, you must explain why you need a new hearing, the type of problem you are having, the steps you have taken to resolve the problem, and what changes you believe are necessary. You may also file a motion to force the agency to obey court orders or to live up to agreements it has made with you.

(d) Kinship Foster Care

DSS will sometimes approve close relatives to become "kinship foster parents."[47] If you have a relative who would like to care for your child, you may be able to arrange for kinship foster care. The technical name for this arrangement is "approved relative home."[48] Under this program, your child lives with your relative.

---

rehear the case whenever it deems rehearing necessary or desirable).

36. See N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1088 (McKinney Supp. 2010) (providing the family court with the power to rehear the case when another party to the case makes a motion to do so).

37. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003).

38. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(3)(b) (McKinney 2003).

39. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1012(k) (McKinney Supp. 2010).

40. See N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(c) (McKinney Supp. 2010) for a full description of what needs to be included in the permanency plan.

41. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(1)(a)(iv) (McKinney 2010).

42. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(b)(1)(i) (McKinney Supp. 2010).

43. Although you may wait until your court appearance to voice your complaints, you should try to write out any problems you have with your child's foster care ahead of time. You can discuss your concerns with your lawyer, if you have one. You may mail the concerns to the judge, DSS, or the child's attorney. You should also take a copy of the list of complaints to court. You or your lawyer should mention your complaints in court so that they are not overlooked.

44. The court must determine how to protect the best interests of the children placed in the state's care by a voluntary placement agreement. See, e.g., Nicholson v. Scoppetta, 3 N.Y.3d 357, 376–81, 820 N.E.2d 840, 850–54, 787 N.Y.S.2d 196, 206–10 (N.Y. 2004) (determining whether the removal of the child was in the child's "best interests," according to the legislative requirement).

45. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(d)(2)(viii)(F) (McKinney Supp. 2010).

46. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1088 (McKinney Supp. 2010).

47. A relative may be approved as a foster parent if DSS believes that living with him is the best way to maintain continuity in the child's environment.

48. This arrangement is approved by N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 371, 375 (McKinney 2003). "Approved relative home" is defined in N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 443.1 (2008).

However, unlike in the private placement described above in Part B, DSS has legal custody of children in kinship foster care, just as it does in any foster care arrangement.

ASFA has made it more difficult for people with certain kinds of criminal records to be approved as foster parents. The ASFA restrictions may affect your decision to place your child in kinship foster care because the relatives you choose may no longer be allowed to be foster parents. In New York, a criminal history check will be performed on potential foster parents and on anyone over eighteen who is living in the home before the home can be certified as a foster home.[49] The criminal history check will also be repeated every time the foster parents apply for re-certification.[50]

A prospective foster parent can be denied for several reasons, including:

(1) Conviction at any time of a felony involving child abuse or neglect, spousal abuse, a crime against a child including child pornography, a violent crime including rape, sexual assault, or homicide;[51] or
(2) Felony conviction within the past five years for assault, battery, or a drug-related offense;[52] or
(3) Charge for an above-listed crime that has not been resolved yet;[53] or
(4) Felony conviction that may be for an above listed crime, when it is unclear whether such a crime was involved.[54]

If a prospective foster parent has been convicted of one or more of the crimes listed above, the foster care agency will remove any foster child living with the foster parent.[55]

(1) Requests to become a foster parent can also be denied if:
(2) The prospective foster parent has a criminal history consisting of crimes other than those specified above;[56] or
(3) Any other person over eighteen living in the proposed foster home has a criminal history (including a criminal charge or conviction).[57]

If any of these factors are found, the agency will check the safety of the home, including whether the person who committed the crime lives there, the amount of contact that person has with the child, and the nature of the charge.[58] Removing the child may be required to protect the child's health and safety.[59]

A disadvantage of kinship foster care in comparison with private placement is that DSS will be involved in your relationship with your child. DSS could decide to have your child removed from your relative's home to another foster home. It also means that you will not be able to simply ask your relative to return your child when you are released from prison, but must instead petition DSS to get custody of your child again.[60] Also, DSS may attempt to terminate your parental rights so that your relative or another person can adopt the child.[61]

An advantage of kinship foster care is that your child's caretaker is eligible for the same foster care payments available to unrelated foster care parents.[62] You and the potential kinship foster parent should consult DSS together about the funds available to him. Another advantage is DSS's obligation to support you with services, including providing regular visitation, parenting training, counseling for you or your child, and other services. For incarcerated parents, DSS's duty to you is generally limited to services offered by your facility, although your child is entitled to any services offered by the agency.

---

49. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).
50. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).
51. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(A) (McKinney 2010).
52. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e)(1)(B) (McKinney 2010).
53. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e)(2)(A) (McKinney 2010).
54. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e)(2)(B) (McKinney 2010).
55. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).
56. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e)(3)(A) (McKinney 2010).
57. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(e)(3)(B) (McKinney 2010).
58. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).
59. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a(2)(h) (McKinney 2010).
60. Petitioning for return of your child is discussed in Part C(5) of this Chapter.
61. Involuntary termination of parental rights is discussed in Part D of this Chapter.
62. Before relatives can get such payments, the DSS Commissioner must complete a foster care certification study of the relative's home. But, in an emergency, a relative can receive funds immediately. The caretaker can also receive Medicaid for the child but cannot get other forms of public assistance because foster care payments would replace them.

DSS should support your wishes for your child to be in kinship foster care because it is obligated to search for a relative to take care of your child.[63] If you disapprove of a particular relative that DSS is considering, you can tell the judge your concerns and ask that your child be placed with a different family member. At the hearing, you will have to convince the judge that the placement DSS wishes to make is not in the best interests of your child or that the individual being considered is unfit to care for your child. If you can arrange for the relative of your choice to attend the court hearing, the judge may have an opportunity to meet him.

2. Involuntary Placement

In some circumstances, your child may be placed in foster care without your consent. This is known as "involuntary placement." Involuntary placement can occur prior to, or as a result of, your incarceration. If you do not consent in writing to the removal of your child and a preliminary hearing has not yet been held, your child can be removed only if there is an immediate danger to his health or life. In such an emergency, the court may order removal without a hearing, or DSS may remove your child before receiving a court order.[64]

Involuntary placement does not mean that your child has been permanently taken from you. However, in order to avoid termination of your parental rights, you must fulfill certain obligations and demonstrate some responsibility for your child. The state also has a duty to make "diligent efforts"[65] to foster a close relationship between you and your child and to help you fulfill your duties as a parent so that you can get custody of your child back. ASFA has created some exceptions to the State's duty to show "diligent efforts." These obligations, rights, and exceptions are discussed below in Part C(4)(a) of this Chapter.

(a) Preliminary Hearing

DSS must petition the family court to hold a "preliminary hearing" during which the judge will decide whether your child must be removed from your home temporarily. The judge will look to see if there is an immediate risk to your child's health or life.[66] This hearing must be held the day after the petition to hold the hearing is filed.[67] If your child has already been removed, the judge will determine whether the child should remain in care outside of the home by also looking to see if there is an immediate risk to your child's health or life.[68] As in voluntary foster care placements, the state must search for a suitable relative to take your child. The court can order DSS to locate your child's other parent and any relatives and to inform them of the procedure for seeking custody or becoming foster parents of your child.[69]

DSS must try to notify you of the petition and proceedings, and you are allowed to attend them. However, the judge may proceed with the hearing even if you are not present.[70] If your child is removed, a date will be set for a permanency hearing.[71] It is important for you to note this date, which will be included in the court's order removing your child.

(b) Fact-Finding Hearing

After the preliminary hearing, the court will hold a full hearing to decide whether or not your child was neglected or abused, or is at risk of being neglected or abused.[72] This part of the case is called the "fact-

---

63. New York state law requires that the state attempt to locate adequate living arrangements with a relative or friend of yours before it places your child with strangers. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.10(b)(2) (2011); see N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.11(c)(1)(i) (2001) (temporary Emergency Regulation in effect until April 1, 2011, describing continuity in the child's environment); N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(1-a) (McKinney 2003) (describing voluntary placement); N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1017 (McKinney 2009) (describing involuntary placement).

64. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act §§ 1022(a)(1)(B), 1024(a) (McKinney 2009).

65. See Section 4(a) of this Part for examples of what DSS must do in order to meet the "diligent efforts" standard.

66. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1027(a)(i) (McKinney 2009).

67. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1027(a)(i) (McKinney 2009).

68. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1027(b)(i) (McKinney 2009).

69. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1017 (McKinney 2009).

70. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act §§ 1023, 1027(a)(iv), (b) (McKinney 2009).

71. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1027(h) (McKinney 2009); see also Subsection (d) of this Section, "Permanency Hearings."

72. A child is "neglected" if he has suffered or is in danger of suffering physical, mental, or emotional harm because the parent cannot or will not provide the proper care. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1012(f) (McKinney 2009). A child is "abused" when the parent causes, allows, or creates a risk of serious emotional or physical injury that is likely to cause death or serious physical harm, and the parent does not do so accidentally. A child is also considered abused when a finding hearing." Since you will not be in the home while you are in prison, the state can easily show that your child is at risk of neglect, unless you have arranged for a relative or a friend to take care of your child in your absence.

The judge must make sure that you are present at the hearing or that every reasonable effort has been made to notify you of it.[73] If you choose not to appear, the court will proceed without you.[74] If you do not have money to retain a lawyer, the judge must appoint a free lawyer to represent you at this hearing (and the later dispositional and permanency hearings) and must also appoint a lawyer to represent your child.[75]

To ensure you will be at the hearing, you or your lawyer should ask the judge to order the prison, using an Order to Produce, to bring you to court that day. Appendix A has a sample letter requesting that the judge submit an Order to Produce to your prison. If, because of your incarceration, you cannot be at the hearing on the day it is scheduled, you or your lawyer should explain that to the judge. The judge should change the date to make sure you can be there.

(c) Dispositional Hearing

If the court makes a finding of abuse or neglect, it will hold another hearing, called the "dispositional hearing." This hearing may take place directly after the fact-finding hearing,[76] but it usually happens after an adjournment (when the court postpones the hearing until a later date). You and your lawyer have the right to participate in the dispositional hearing, and the judge cannot proceed without proof that the agency actually notified you of the hearing. After hearing the case, the judge can make several rulings: return your child to you, adjourn the case for several months with the intention of dismissing the case later, or order placement of your child in foster care.[77]

The judge should inform you that if you fail either to maintain contact with your child or plan for your child's future, your parental rights may be terminated. Your duties as the natural parent are discussed in Part (C)(4)(b), and termination of parental rights is discussed in Part D of this Chapter.

Also, at the dispositional hearing or at the permanency hearing, (discussed in Subsection (d) of this Section), the court can order the foster care agency to make "diligent efforts" to "encourage and strengthen the parental relationship."[78] For example, the judge can order the agency to arrange visits between you and your child by bringing your child to visit you. You or your lawyer should ask the judge to order this visitation because visiting with your child will strengthen your relationship and will help you when you ask for your child to be returned to you. The judge can also order the agency to assist you with housing, employment, counseling, medical care, psychiatric treatment, and any other appropriate services that your prison facility can provide. The dispositional order:

(1) will include a description of the visitation plan;
(2) will state that you have a right to attend planning conferences (with a lawyer) about your child's foster care and that you should be told when those meetings will occur;[79] and
(3) must contain a notice that if your child remains in foster care for fifteen of the most recent twenty-two months, the agency may be required to file a termination of your parental rights.[80]

You have a right to a copy of this order, so remember to ask for a copy if one is not provided.[81]

(d) Permanency Hearings

The agency with custody of your child must conduct a permanency hearing within eight months of your child's removal.[82] The permanency hearing should have been scheduled during the original hearing when it parent commits or allows to be committed a sex offense against the child. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1012(e) (McKinney 2009).

---

73. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1041 (McKinney 2009).

74. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1042 (McKinney 2009). If you did not willfully refuse to appear at the hearing, you may petition the court for a rehearing, which the court should grant.

75. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act §§ 249 , 262 (McKinney 2009).

76. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1047(a) (McKinney 2009).

77. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1052(a) (McKinney 2009).

78. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(d)(2)(viii)(F) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

79. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(d)(2)(vii)(B) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

80. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(d)(2)(vii)(D) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

81. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(e) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

82. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(a)(2) (McKinney Supp. 2007). The statute states that the permanency hearing must take place "no later than six months from the date which is 60 days after the child was removed from his or her home …

was decided that your child would be removed, and it is assumed you will already know this date.[83] Still, the law requires that you be re-notified of the date of the permanency hearing at least fourteen days in advance.[84] The court has to hold a permanency hearing to decide what the permanency plan for your child should be.[85] The court will also examine whether you and the agency have been going along with the plan for your child and whether the plan should be adjusted because of changed circumstances.[86] In considering whether extension of placement is in the best interests of your child, the court will look at the permanency goal.[87] As a result of the ASFA, the statute was changed to allow alternative permanent plans to be made for the child, like discharge to a "fit and willing relative."[88]

As the natural parent, you are a necessary party to the hearing, and you have a right to be present and to have the court appoint a lawyer to represent you. It is very important to attend the permanency hearing. You should receive both a notice of the hearing and a copy of the agency's permanency hearing report,[89] a document that includes an update on your child's well-being and on the agency's recommendation for your child's future placement.[90]

If you are released from prison and want your child back immediately, or before the next permanency hearing, you should request that the agency return your child. If the agency does not fulfill your request within thirty days, you can move the court to terminate your child's placement.[91] But, this motion does not mean that the court will return your child immediately. The court will first have a hearing to determine whether your child should be returned.

3. Working with Foster Care Agencies

(a) Placement with an Agency

Soon after your child enters the foster care system, responsibility for the case may be transferred from DSS to an authorized private foster care agency. This transfer is often done in New York City cases, but usually not in the rest of New York state. The transfer does not mean your child will be moved but only that an agency other than DSS will supervise the placement.

If your child is placed with a private agency, you should be told the name of the agency as well as the agency caseworker assigned to your child. Until you receive this notice, you should maintain contact with the caseworker from DSS.[92] If you do not hear from the new caseworker, write to DSS and the new agency to let them know. You should show them that you are concerned about your child's well-being and that you want to be kept informed of your child's whereabouts. The more interest and concern you show for your child, the less likely it is that DSS will seek, or the court will approve, termination of your parental rights. It may also make the foster care agency more open to using one of the ASFA exceptions to the requirements for terminating parental rights. Termination of parental rights is discussed fully in Part D of this Chapter.

[and] shall be completed within thirty days of commencement." Adding the six months and 60 days requirement means that the hearing must happen within eight months from the day your child was removed from your home.

83. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(a)(2) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

84. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(b)(1)(i) (McKinney Supp. 2007); see In re Frederick W., 120 Misc. 2d 335, 342, 465 N.Y.S.2d 828, 833 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 1983) (requiring dismissal of agency's petition to extend the placement of the child where the agency failed to give notice to parent).

85. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(a) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

86. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(c)(5)(i) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

87. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(c)(1) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

88. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1089(c)(1)(iv) (McKinney Supp. 2007).

89. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act. § 1089(b)(1)(i) (McKinney Supp. 2007); see also In re Three Children Free for Adoption, 138 Misc. 2d 584, 586, 525 N.Y.S.2d 135, 137 (Fam. Ct. Delaware County, 1988) (dismissing petition for a permanency hearing as it would require the notice of parents even for children freed from adoption); In re Frederick W., 120 Misc. 2d 335, 341–42, 465 N.Y.S.2d 828, 833 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 1983) (dismissing petition to extend placement of child for failure to serve parent with petition).

90. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1087(e) (McKinney Supp. 2007); see also In re Frederick W., 120 Misc. 2d 335, 341–42, 465 N.Y.S.2d 828, 833 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 1983).

91. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1062 (McKinney 2009). You or your lawyer should go to the Petition Room at the family court. Someone there will help you put your case on the court calendar, which schedules a hearing to determine whether your child will be returned to you.

92. See N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(c)(v) (McKinney 2003) (describing parents' obligations when they have a child in foster care).

(b) Development of a Service Plan

When you are assigned a caseworker from DSS or a private agency, the caseworker should contact you to arrange a meeting to discuss your child's service plan. However, this is not usually done while you are incarcerated, so you should request a meeting in writing. It may be possible to arrange a conference by telephone. You should also try to keep the agency caseworker informed about programs you are participating in while incarcerated, such as drug treatment or parenting skills classes.

If you and the caseworker are able to meet, you will develop a plan for your child's time in foster care.[93] It is more likely, though, that the agency will develop the plan in your absence. If you voluntarily placed your child in foster care, the Voluntary Agreement Form might be the basis for this plan. The plan:

(1) Will include guidelines for the treatment your child will receive;
(2) Will state that a termination of parental rights proceeding may be filed against you by the agency if your child remains in foster care for fifteen out of twenty-two months;[94]
(3) Will outline the agency's program for helping to reunite you and your child;
(4) Should describe the care and services your child will receive while in foster care;
(5) Should state how often you will receive visits from your child;[95]
(6) Will state what you need to do to get your child back; and
(7) Will list your obligations for working to achieve a permanent home for your child.[96]

It is not always easy to get a copy of the plan. You should request it in writing. If the agency still does not provide you with the service plan for your family, you should inform the DSS case manager immediately in writing, as well as the judge at the next permanency hearing. When you get a copy of the plan, be sure to keep it for your records.

4. Rights and Obligations Under Voluntary or Involuntary Foster Care

Both you and the agency have obligations towards each other and towards your child. If you do not fulfill your obligations, the agency may go to court to try to terminate your parental rights, which means that someone else could adopt your child without your consent. In a termination of parental rights proceeding charging permanent neglect, the agency will first have to prove that it fulfilled its own obligations before the judge will consider ending your parental rights.

(a) The Department of Social Services' ("DSS") Obligations

DSS has certain responsibilities when it takes custody of your child. As previously discussed, its first obligation is to try to find a home for your child with a relative.[97] Again, if you know someone who can take good care of your child and whom your child likes, you can suggest this person or family member to DSS.

If DSS cannot find family members with whom your child might be able to live, it must do the following:

(1) Place your child in a setting that is the most like your home, if possible (for example, in your neighborhood or with someone of the same religion);[98]
(2) Keep a record of your child's progress;[99]
(3) Provide a caseworker who will regularly meet with you, your child, and your child's foster parents and who, with your help, will write a plan for the care of your child;[100]
(4) Make every effort to follow the plan;[101] and
(5) Provide reasonable care for and supervision of the child during the course of the placement.[102]

---

93. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 428.1 (2005).
94. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(c)(ix) (McKinney 2003).
95. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2003).
96. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(c)(v) (McKinney 2003).
97. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(1-a)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.10(b)(2) (2010) (describing standard for necessary activities prior to placement); N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1017(1) (McKinney Supp. 2008) (describing DSS obligations for placing children).
98. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.11(c)(1)(i), (d)(1) (2010).
99. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 428.3(b)(1)(vi) (2010).
100. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 428.1 (2010).
101. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 428.1 (2010).
102. See Andrews v. County of Otsego, 112 Misc. 2d 37, 39, 446 N.Y.S.2d 169, 171 (Sup. Ct. Otsego County 1982)

More importantly, in most cases, DSS has a general legal obligation to make what the law calls "diligent efforts" to encourage a relationship between you and your child, with some exceptions created by ASFA.[103] "Diligent efforts" include:

(1) Keeping you informed of your child's progress;[104]
(2) Making arrangements with your correctional facility for your child to visit you regularly in the facility;[105] and
(3) Providing counseling or other services to resolve problems that may prevent your child's eventual return to you.[106]

The exact meaning of "diligent efforts" will depend on the individual case. The agency may be required to investigate your financial problems, maintain regular contact with you, and inform you that failure to contact and plan for your child may result in a termination of your parental rights.[107] In one case, the court found an agency did not make diligent efforts when it did not help parents satisfy agency requirements for the return of their child. Although the parents did not fulfill the agency's plan, which included finding a suitable home, having the means to support the child, and going to family counseling, the court held the agency should have made efforts to address problems, such as poverty, that kept the parents from fulfilling the requirements.[108] In another case, an agency did not satisfy its statutory requirement when it failed to offer counseling to a child's incarcerated father, made no effort to help the father get visitation rights, and made no attempt to involve the father in his child's life.[109]

In defining "diligent efforts" the highest court of New York has said that the foster care agency must have made "meaningful efforts" to:

(1) Provide you and/or your child with counseling for any problem, such as drug or alcohol abuse, that might be an obstacle to your child's eventual return to you;
(2) Help you find housing or employment;

(holding that a county with custody of a foster care child has a continuing obligation to protect the child's health, safety, and welfare and can be held liable for negligent placement or supervision of a child).

103. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f) (McKinney 2003); see also In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 385, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1148, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 430 (1984) (explaining that the agency must make "affirmative, repeated, and meaningful efforts to assist" a parent before initiating a parental rights termination proceeding); In re Erika M., 285 A.D.2d 986, 986, 727 N.Y.S.2d 234, 234 (4th Dept. 2001) (dismissing petition for termination of parental rights because agency did not show, by clear and convincing evidence, that it made "diligent efforts" to strengthen the parent-child bond); In re Jamie M., 96 A.D.2d 737, 737, 465 N.Y.S.2d 339, 340 (4th Dept. 1983) (finding that the agency failed to make "diligent efforts" to help parents solve the very problems requiring removal of the children and causing the termination proceedings), aff'd, 63 N.Y.2d 388, 472 N.E.2d 311, 482 N.Y.S.2d 461 (1984).

104. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(4) (McKinney 2003); see also Seaman's Soc. For Children and Families v. Tanya V., 7 Misc.3d 1021(A), 801 N.Y.S.2d 242, at *3 (Fam. Ct. Richmond County Apr. 12, 2005) (holding that petitioner satisfied the requirement by providing father with "service plan reviews where child's health and progress was discussed").

105. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008). The agency is also responsible for making arrangements to transport your child to and from the facility to visit with you. See Seaman's Soc. For Children and Families v. Tanya V., 7 Misc. 3d 1021(A), 801 N.Y.S.2d 242, at *3 (Fam. Ct. Richmond County Apr. 12, 2005) (holding that "long trip" did not "absolve the Agency's duty to facilitate visitation").

106. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (requiring the agency to coordinate with the prison to provide "rehabilitative services to resolve or correct the problems, other than incarceration itself, that impair the incarcerated parent's ability to maintain contact with the child"); see also In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 373, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1140–41, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 422–23 (1984) (approving dismissal of permanent neglect petition filed by foster care agency where father had made visits regularly, established paternity, and developed a plan to take custody of the child but the agency did not fulfill its "diligent efforts" requirement).

107. See In re Shannon U., 210 A.D.2d 752, 753–54, 620 N.Y.S.2d 851, 852 (3d Dept. 1994) (holding that agency was found to satisfy its duty because it had maintained regular contact with parents by phone, mail, home visits, and meetings and had arranged visits, counseling, and parenting classes), leave to appeal denied, 85 N.Y.2d 807, 651 N.E.2d 918, 628 N.Y.S.2d 50 (1995); In re Suzanne N.Y., 102 Misc. 2d 215, 223, 423 N.Y.S.2d 394, 400 (Fam. Ct. N.Y. County 1979) (dismissing petition for termination of parental rights because the agency failed to assist the mother with her financial problems and inform her of her obligations in order not to lose her child), rev'd on other grounds, 86 A.D.2d 556, 446 N.Y.S.2d 81 (1st Dept. 1982), aff'd, 54 N.Y.2d 824, 427 N.E.2d 1187, 443 N.Y.S.2d 722 (1981).

108. See In re Jamie M., 63 N.Y.2d 388, 394–95, 472 N.E.2d 311, 314, 482 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (1984) (dismissing petition for termination of parental rights because the agency failed to show diligent efforts in addressing the unemployment and financial instability of parents).

109. See In re Jennifer Ann W., 198 A.D.2d 881, 882, 605 N.Y.S.2d 698, 699 (4th Dept. 1993).

(3) Help you plan for your child's future; and
(4) Provide opportunities for you and your child to have visits.[110]

Until the agency has demonstrated "some attempt" to assist you in these ways, a termination of parental rights should not be granted.[111]

However, ASFA has changed the Department of Social Services' obligation to provide reasonable, and therefore diligent, efforts to preserve the family in some circumstances. In New York, the law states that if an incarcerated parent has failed more than once while incarcerated to cooperate with the agency in its efforts to assist the parent to plan for the future of the child (or in the agency's efforts to plan and arrange visits with the child), then the agency will not have to present evidence that they made "diligent efforts."[112] Additionally, the law states that in making determinations involving reasonable or diligent efforts, "the child's health and safety" is the most important concern.[113] Reasonable efforts should be made to prevent removal of the child or to make it possible for the child to return home safely.[114] Reasonable efforts should also be made if it is in the best interests of the child's health and safety and would probably result in reunification of the parent and child in the near future.

Reasonable efforts to prevent the removal of a child or to reunite a child with the birth family are not required in the following situations:

(1) When a court has determined that the parent has subjected the child to aggravated circumstances, defined in New York as severe or repeated abuse;[115]
(2) When a court has determined that a parent has committed a serious act of violence, including murder or voluntary manslaughter of one of the parent's children; attempted, conspired, or solicited to commit such murder or voluntary manslaughter; or committed assault or aggravated assault on a child under eleven years old, resulting in serious bodily harm to the child or another child of the parent;[116] or
(3) When the parent's rights to one of the child's siblings (including half-siblings) have been terminated involuntarily.[117]

If the agency decides not to make reasonable efforts to reunite your family, it must file a motion in court and the judge will decide if the agency can stop such efforts.[118] You should be notified of and given a copy of the motion. The statute does not say whether a hearing has to be held by the court to decide the matter, nor does it say what the burden of proof to stop reasonable or diligent efforts would be.

(b) Your Obligations as a Parent

Like DSS, you must meet certain obligations while your child is in foster care. If you fail to satisfy these requirements, DSS may claim that you have abandoned or permanently neglected your child and may ask a court to terminate your parental rights. New York law states that a parent who wishes to be reunited with a child in foster care has the following obligations:

(1) To visit with the child;
(2) To plan for the future of the child;[119]

---

110. In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 387–88, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1148–49, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 431–32 (1984).

111. In re Jamie M., 63 N.Y.2d 388, 395, 472 N.E.2d 311, 314, 482 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (1984).

112. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(e)(ii) (McKinney 2010); see also In re Heart Share Human Services of N.Y., 906 N.Y.S.2d 472, 486 (Fam. Ct. Queens County 2010).

113. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(3)(c) (McKinney 2010).

114. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(2) (McKinney 2010).

115. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(12) (McKinney 2010). Severe abuse is defined to include conviction for (1) committing or soliciting murder or manslaughter of another child of the parent or another child for whom the parent is legally responsible; (2) assault against a child less than eleven years old; and (3) conviction for an above crime in any other jurisdiction. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(8)(a) (McKinney 2010). Repeated abuse is defined to include (1) a finding of abuse against the child, child's sibling, or any other child for whom the parent is legally responsible within the past five years; and (2) a finding that diligent efforts by the agency to encourage the parental relationship and to rehabilitate the parent have been unsuccessful and are "unlikely to be successful in the foreseeable future." N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(8)(b) (McKinney 2010).

116. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(12) (McKinney 2010).

117. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(3)(b)(6) (McKinney 2010).

118. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(1) (McKinney 2010).

119. For a definition of planning for the future of the child, see N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(c) (McKinney 2010)

(3) To consult with the foster agency about the child's foster care plan;
(4) To contribute financially to the support of the child, if the parent is able;
(5) To inform the agency of the parent's address every six months, even if it remains the same, and to inform the agency immediately of any change of name or address; and
(6) To cooperate with the agency.[120]

The courts interpret these requirements with an eye to both "the particular facts and [the] totality of circumstances."[121] Thus, the court will look at the facts of your particular case when deciding whether you are living up to your obligations. Also, the law says that, at the very least, an incarcerated parent has to "cooperate with [the agency] in its efforts to ... plan for the future of the child." [122] If an incarcerated parent on more than one occasion fails to cooperate or has failed to inform the agency of his address for six months, the agency does not have to continue making diligent efforts to preserve the family, including providing for visitation.[123]

If you want to retain your parental rights, you should make every effort to fulfill your obligations. In a termination proceeding, DSS has the burden of proof to show, by clear and convincing evidence, that you failed to fulfill your obligations.

(i) Visiting with Your Child

The law recognizes that incarcerated parents may have a difficult time arranging to visit with their children and planning for their children's futures. It will not be held against you if you cannot visit with your child as often as you would like or if the agency fails to provide you with visits.[124] Remember, though, that visiting regularly is one of the most effective ways to maintain a healthy relationship with your child and to avoid termination of your parental rights. It is generally accepted that visitation and other parental contacts, such as letters and phone calls, are in the best interests of the child.

Not visiting with your child can be proof of abandonment or permanent neglect and can lead to termination of your parental rights. For example, one court held that a parent who failed to substantially maintain contact with her children during a period of over one year had not lived up to her foster care obligations.[125] You should try very hard to maintain contact with your child. Whether your child is in the custody of a relative, a friend, your ex-spouse, or in foster care, that person should bring your child to visit you.[126] Your parental rights are at stake, so make sure that you continuously try to visit with your child even if the foster parents or agency are making it more difficult for you to see your child. If the judge sees that you did all that you could to try and maintain contact with your child, it will help in regaining custody of your child when you are released. Some prisons have programs to help prisoners keep in contact with their children.[127] You should look into any such programs available at your facility and tell your caseworker that you and your child wish to participate in the programs.

The foster care agency has a legal duty to make "diligent efforts" to encourage frequent and regular visits between you and your child.[128] The agency is typically under an obligation to provide biweekly visits if and the discussion in Part C(4)(b)(ii) below.

---

120. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 384-a(2)(c)(v), 384-b(5), 384-b(7) (McKinney 2010).

121. In re Orlando F., 40 N.Y.2d 103, 111, 351 N.E.2d 711, 716, 386 N.Y.S.2d 64, 68 (N.Y. 1976) (holding that finding of permanent neglect and termination of parental rights was appropriate where mother maintained contact with son but failed to plan for his future by not getting stable housing for three years).

122. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(e)(ii) (McKinney 2010).

123. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(e) (McKinney 2010).

124. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010).

125. See In re Comm'r. of Soc. Servs., 84 Misc. 2d 253, 258–59, 376 N.Y.S.2d 387, 393 (Fam. Ct. Ulster County 1975); see also In re I.R., 153 A.D.2d 559, 561, 544 N.Y.S.2d 216, 217–18 (2d Dept. 1989) (explaining that incarceration alone does not excuse a parent from maintaining contact with his child).

126. See Wise v. Del Toro, 122 A.D.2d 714, 714–15, 505 N.Y.S.2d 880, 881 (1st Dept. 1986) (reversing denial of visitation to an incarcerated father because he did not have the opportunity to present evidence and because incarceration alone does not make visitation inappropriate); R.J. v. D.J., 133 Misc. 2d 883, 887, 508 N.Y.S.2d 838, 841 (Fam. Ct. Broome County 1986) (holding that while incarceration alone does not prevent visitation with parent's child, here frequent visits were unnecessary because of stress to the mother who had to take the child to visits).

127. You may, for example, be eligible to apply for the Family Reunion Program ("FRP") if it is offered by your correctional facility. See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 220.2 (2010).

128. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

the permanency plan for the child is returning the child to you (or "reunification").[129] The agency must provide financial assistance, arrange transportation, or do anything else in its power to ensure you and your child meet.[130] A court may even order that you be allowed to visit with your child in a different facility if that will make it easier for your child to visit you, but this will generally be a day trip with a guard and not a permanent arrangement.[131]

Because prisons generally restrict visitation hours, it may be difficult for a caseworker to arrange for your child to meet with you in prison. If you are having difficulty arranging visits, remember that the law requires both the caseworker to set up visits and corrections officials to cooperate with the caseworker in making suitable visitation arrangements.[132] Prison officials do not have to set up visits between you and your child outside of your correctional facility unless it is "reasonably feasible" (not very difficult or inconvenient) and is in the best interests of your child.[133]

A court can also determine that visitation is harmful to the child's welfare and order that no visits occur. In New York, "[t]he denial of visitation to a natural parent is a drastic remedy and should be done only where there are compelling reasons and substantial evidence that such visitation is detrimental to the children's welfare."[134] This means there has to be an extremely important reason why visits would be harmful to your child, and the agency must be able to prove that such a reason actually exists and that it is truly harmful. Also, if visitation is not permitted, then the fact that you have not visited with your child cannot be the basis for a permanent neglect or abandonment proceeding.[135]

(ii) Planning for Your Child

Courts recognize that your ability to participate in your child's upbringing is limited because you are incarcerated. Nevertheless, they still require that you think ahead and plan for your child. This may include finding a home for your child among friends or relatives or preparing yourself for reunification with your child.

According to one parental rights specialist, plans should include the following:

(1) How you will support yourself and your child after your release (for example, by getting public assistance or finding a job);
(2) Where you and your child will live;
(3) Where your child will go to school;
(4) How you will provide for your child's medical needs (for example, with Medicaid);
(5) What kind of religious upbringing, if any, you want for your child;
(6) Who will watch your child if you are out of the house; and
(7) How you will provide for any special needs your child may have.[136]

It is important that you plan ahead for how you will appropriately care for your child after your release from prison. This planning will be viewed as a sign that you care about child and have an interest in being his parent.

To prepare yourself as a parent, you should take part in any parenting courses available at your institution, attend vocational training classes that will improve your chances of getting a job, and join drug

---

129. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.12(d)(1)(i) (2010).

130. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 430.12(d)(1) (2010).

131. See In re Gadson, 124 Misc. 2d 1024, 1026–27, 478 N.Y.S.2d 498, 500 (Fam. Ct. Onondaga County 1984) (permitting visitation at a facility different from the one where parent was incarcerated because it was in the best interests of the child, the alternate facility allowed for meaningful visitation, and transportation was feasible).

132. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010); N.Y. Correct. Law § 619 (McKinney 2003).

133. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(2) (McKinney 2010).

134. Parker v. Ford, 89 A.D.2d 806, 807, 453 N.Y.S.2d 465, 466 (4th Dept. 1982) (holding that petitioner father, despite alcohol abuse, was improperly denied supervised visitation, where there was no evidence that supervised visitation would be detrimental to the child's welfare). But see Sullivan County Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Richard C., 260 A.D.2d 680, 682–83, 687 N.Y.S.2d 470, 472 (3d Dept. 1999) (denying visitation between father and child where psychologist and child's therapist recommended that visits be suspended until child developed the strength to deal with family problems, since child consistently showed regression after contact with father).

135. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f)(5) (McKinney 2010).

136. Philip M. Genty, Memorandum for Incarcerated Parents with Children in Foster Care 3 (1988) (on file with the Columbia Human Rights Law Review).

or alcohol rehabilitation classes if necessary or ordered by a court. You should make every effort to participate in programs that your caseworker suggests.

It is also important to understand that if you are incarcerated for an extended period of time, arranging long-term foster care (as opposed to adoption) may not be considered an acceptable plan for your child's future. The state will not excuse you from the responsibility of planning for your child's future just because you are incarcerated.[137] In such a situation the state has the authority to terminate your parental rights.

(iii) Contact with Your Child and the Foster Care Agency

In addition to visiting with your child whenever you can, you should maintain contact by sending letters, birthday and holiday cards, and gifts to your child. If your child is too young to read, draw a picture or send a note that someone else can read aloud. These actions will show the court that you are interested in, and are planning for, your child's future and that you have made an effort to fulfill your foster care obligations. You should also contact your caseworker regularly both to inform him of your progress in prison and to ask about your child. If you fail to keep the agency informed of your address for six months or more, even if the address remained the same, the agency is not required to make diligent efforts to encourage and strengthen the relationship between you and your child.[138] Keep a record of all communications with your child and your caseworker, such as copies of letters and cards and a list of phone calls you make. Keeping accurate records is very important because if the agency ever petitions to terminate your parental rights, you will have proof that you were, in fact, fulfilling your obligations.

5. Assuming Care of Your Child After Release

If you voluntarily place your child in foster care, your Voluntary Placement Form may include a specific release date for your child. In that case, the agency must return the child to you on that date.[139] If you will still be incarcerated on the release date specified in the Voluntary Placement Form, you should inform your caseworker. A new release date can be established, and your child can remain in foster care until then.[140]

You may wish to have your child returned earlier than the date listed on the Voluntary Placement Form. If so, send a written request to the agency stating the new date of return and your reasons for changing the date.[141] The agency may either return the child or, within ten days, deny your request.[142] If your request is denied, you can challenge the decision in court.[143]

If the Placement Form does not mention a specific release date, you can request the return of your child at any time by writing a letter to the agency. The agency must return your child to you within twenty days or get a court order extending the care, in which case the agency probably will bring neglect proceedings.[144] Generally, the agency will have to prove that you would not be able to provide for your child—meaning that your child would be at risk of neglect or abuse—before it can get an order extending your child's care.

If you did not voluntarily place your child in foster care, but were forced to do so by the state involuntarily, you may file a motion with the court to terminate the involuntary placement.[145] However, you may file the motion with the court only after you have first applied to the agency for a termination of the placement and were denied.

---

137. In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 90, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (upholding termination of parental rights for incarcerated parents who made arrangements for long-term foster care until children were no longer minors); In re "Female" V., 21 A.D.3d 1118, 1119, 803 N.Y.S.2d 636, 637–38 (2d Dept. 2005) (upholding termination of parental rights for an incarcerated father who, among other things, "was unable to provide any 'realistic and feasible' alternative to having" his children remain in foster care until they became adults or he was released from prison (quoting N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(c) (McKinney 2010))).

138. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(e)(i) (McKinney 2010).

139. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

140. See N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(3) (McKinney 2010) (describing how to amend a Voluntary Placement Form).

141. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010). Valid reasons for changing the date of your child's release from foster care might include a shorter prison sentence than originally anticipated or your decision to place your child with a relative or friend.

142. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

143. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010); see also N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 358-a(8) (McKinney 2010) (pointing out that any order by a family court can be appealed pursuant to Article 11 of the Family Court Act).

144. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(a) (McKinney 2010).

145. See N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 1062 (McKinney 2009).

Whether your child has been placed in foster care voluntarily or involuntarily, you may be eligible for assistance from DSS once you are released from prison and have regained custody of your child. After your release, DSS must provide supportive and rehabilitative services, called "preventive services," to you and your family if there is a serious risk that you cannot care for your child and that he will be put in foster care again.[146] You should discuss getting additional assistance with your caseworker before your release from prison. If you fail to do this, and then return home and realize you need additional assistance, you still have an opportunity to discuss this with your caseworker afterwards because your caseworker must meet with you at least three times after your child is released from foster care.[147]

If you require housing after your release from prison, you may be eligible for a housing subsidy of up to $300 every month for up to three years. This subsidy is provided by DSS when the primary reason that a child is kept in foster care is that parents cannot find adequate housing.[148] If you are in need of such assistance, ask your caseworker about the subsidy and explain that you want to apply for it.

D. Involuntary Termination of Parental Rights

DSS, foster parents, or the child's legal guardian may begin proceedings to convince a court that terminating your parental rights and placing your child up for adoption is the best solution for your child.[149] New York state law specifically says that the state cannot terminate your parental rights just because you are in prison.[150] The law also recognizes that incarcerated parents have special circumstances that judges should consider when looking at a parent's efforts to maintain contact with and plan for their children.[151] However, ASFA has made it easier for the state to terminate your rights as a parent.

If you do not consent to the adoption of your child, a court can terminate your parental rights only if it finds that at least one of the following things is true:

(1) You have abandoned your child for a period of at least six months immediately prior to the date on which the termination petition was filed;[152]
(2) You permanently neglected your child;[153]
(3) You cannot and will not be able to provide proper care because of mental illness or mental retardation;[154] or
(4) You have severely or repeatedly abused your child;[155]

---

146. You may be eligible for any of the services described in N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 423.2 (2010), which include daycare, housekeeper/chore services, psychiatric counseling, and parent training services. See also N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 409, 409-a (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (defining preventive services); N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-a(2)(c)(iv)–(vii) (McKinney 2010) (describing the terms for transfer of care and custody of children).

147. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 18, § 423.4(h) (2010).

148. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 409-a(5)(c) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

149. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

150. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(2)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (stating that the term parent "shall include an incarcerated parent unless otherwise qualified"). But see In re Love Russell J., 7 A.D.3d 799, 800, 776 N.Y.S.2d 859, 859 (2d Dept. 2004) (finding that termination of parental rights due to permanent neglect was proper against an incarcerated father whose only plan for his children's welfare was extended placement in foster care, especially when he had been warned by the agency that this plan was insufficient).

151. See N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008); see also In re Custody & Guardianship of Sasha R., 246 A.D.2d 1, 7, 675 N.Y.S.2d 605, 609 (1st Dept. 1998) (discussing how the New York legislature acknowledged that incarcerated parents have "special circumstances" that should be taken into account when evaluating the parent's efforts to meet the statutory contact and planning requirements (citing In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 89, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1057, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 540–41 (1989))).

152. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(4)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008). Under New York state law, a parent abandons a child when he shows "an intent to forego his or her parental rights and obligations … by his or her failure to visit the child and communicate with the child or agency, although able to do so and not prevented or discouraged from doing so by the agency." N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(5)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

153. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(4)(d) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008). A parent permanently neglects a child when he "continuously or repeatedly" fails for a period of either one year, or fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months, "to maintain contact with or plan for the future of the child, although physically and financially able to do so." N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

154. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(4)(c) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

155. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(4)(e) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008). See Part C(4)(a) of this Chapter for a definition of severe and repeated abuse. Under N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(8)(b)(ii)(A) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008), repeated abuse for the termination of parental rights also includes a parent committing or "knowingly" allowing a felony

Under ASFA in New York, if any of the following are true, the foster care agency must file for termination of parental rights:

(1) The child has been in foster care for fifteen of the most recent twenty-two months;[156]
(2) The child has been determined by a court to be abandoned;[157]
(3) The parent has been convicted of a crime including conspiring, soliciting, attempting, or committing murder or manslaughter of another of his or her children for whom the parent is legally responsible;[158] attempting or committing assault on a child under eleven years of age who is a child of the parent or a child for whom the parent is legally responsible;[159] or
(4) The parent has been convicted of any of the above crimes in another jurisdiction.[160]

The State is still required to prove its case in order to actually terminate your rights. But even if any of the four above grounds are present (where the agency is required to file under AFSA), the agency does not need to file for termination proceedings if any of the following are also present:

(1) The child is being cared for by a relative;[161]
(2) The agency has documented in the plan a compelling reason that filing a petition to terminate parental rights would not be in the best interest of the child;[162] or
(3) The agency has not provided the parent(s) with adequate reunification services in cases where those services are part of the reasonable efforts requirement.[163]

When the foster care agency alleges in a petition that your case falls into one of the four categories listed above and files for termination of parental rights, the court will first hold a fact-finding hearing to see if the agency's allegation is correct. Then, in all cases involving permanent neglect or severe or repeated abuse, it will hold a dispositional hearing.[164] In the dispositional hearing, the judge will decide whether terminating your parental rights is in the best interests of your child. In cases of abandonment or mental illness, dispositional hearings are not required, and your parental rights may be terminated automatically upon a finding of abandonment or mental illness in the fact-finding hearing. However, the court may choose to hold a dispositional hearing.

One possible compromise in a proceeding to terminate parental rights is a suspended judgment for one year.[165] A suspended judgment means the actual judgment won't be given for a year so the court can monitor the situation during that time and see what to do. It is a type of probation that contains a number of conditions you must satisfy, like communication and visits with your child, enrollment in counseling programs, and cooperation with the agency in planning for your child's future. If you do not comply with the conditions of the order, the court may withdraw the suspended order and terminate your parental rights.

1. DSS-Initiated Termination Proceedings

Most termination proceedings against incarcerated parents charge the parent with abandonment or permanent neglect. These terms are defined below.

(a) Abandonment

In a proceeding based on abandonment, DSS only has to prove that for a period of six months prior to the date on which the termination petition was filed, the parent failed to communicate and visit with the child[166] sex offense to be committed against his child.

---

156. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

157. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

158. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(8)(a)(iii)(A)–(B) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

159. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(8)(a)(iii)(C) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

160. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(8)(a)(iii)(D) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

161. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(i)(A) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

162. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(i)(B) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008). Compelling reasons are defined in N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(ii) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

163. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(l)(i)(C) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

164. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3) (McKinney 2003); N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 623 (McKinney Supp. 2008).

165. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 633 (McKinney 1999 & Supp. 2007); see also Comm'r v. Rufelle C., 156 Misc. 2d 410, 416, 593 N.Y.S.2d 401, 405 (Fam. Ct. Kings County 1992) (granting respondent parent a rehearing to determine whether parent had fulfilled the conditions of the suspended judgment).

166. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(4)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

"although able to do so and not prevented or discouraged from doing so by the agency."[167] In order to prove abandonment, the agency does not have to show that it attempted to help the parent.[168] Thus, it is good to keep records of your attempts to communicate with the child and with the agency.

(b) Permanent Neglect

Under New York law, a parent permanently neglects his child when, although physically and financially able to do so, he fails to maintain contact with or plan for the future of the child for a period of either one year or fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months while the child is in the care of an authorized agency, even though the agency has made diligent efforts to strengthen the parental relationship.[169] The agency does not have to make diligent efforts where a court has previously decided that reasonable efforts are not necessary.[170]

In cases charging permanent neglect, the law and the courts require that the court must first examine the DSS actions in your case before they examine your behavior. DSS must prove that, where required, it or the foster care agency involved made diligent efforts (as discussed in Part C(4)(a)) to strengthen the relationship between you and your child and to reunite your family.[171] If you believe that the agency has not made diligent efforts, explain this to the judge. Your lawyer will need to show that diligent efforts have not been made. Perhaps you can show that the agency never brought your child to the prison for visits, despite your repeated requests, or that you did not receive the help that you asked for on another problem. Use telephone logs and copies of bills to establish that you made these efforts. Ask your lawyer to subpoena people from the prison to testify on your behalf.

Once a court has found permanent neglect, it will hold a dispositional hearing to consider the best interests of the child. A child's best interests (legally speaking) involve his physical and emotional well-being, including a permanent home and a normal, stable family atmosphere.[172]

2. Defending Yourself Against Termination of Parental Rights

It is very important that you be present at the termination hearing. The agency must serve you with notice (to let you know the time and location) of the hearing,[173] and you have a right to attend.[174] At the

---

167. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(5)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

168. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(5)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

169. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008); compare In re Sheila G., 61 N.Y.2d 368, 380, 462 N.E.2d 1139, 1145, 474 N.Y.S.2d 421, 427 (N.Y. 1984) (finding that the foster care agency did not exercise diligent efforts in fostering the relationship between a biological father and his child). But see In re Demetrius F., 176 A.D.2d 940, 941, 575 N.Y.S.2d 552, 552 (2d Dept. 1991) (finding that it is unnecessary for the agency to show that it exercised diligent efforts to foster the relationship where the ground for termination is mental illness).

170. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

171. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(7)(f) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

172. In re Michael B., 80 N.Y.2d 299, 311–12, 314–15, 604 N.E.2d 122, 129–31, 590 N.Y.S.2d 60, 67, 69 (N.Y. 1992) (concluding that awarding legal custody to respondent foster parents instead of biological father was error because the Appellate Division had used an erroneous "best interest" test; the Appellate Division relied on the child's length of stay and bonding with foster parents, instead of considering the fitness of the biological parent, the agency's plan for the child, and the child's emotional well-being); In re Suzanne N.Y., 77 A.D.2d 433, 434, 433 N.Y.S.2d 580, 581–82 (1st Dept. 1980) (granting termination of parental rights where an eight-year-old child had lived with her foster parents since the age of four months and mother was a schizophrenic who required medication to remain minimally functional), rev'd on other grounds, 54 N.Y.2d 824, 427 N.E.2d 1187, 443 N.Y.S.2d 722 (N.Y. 1981).

173. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(3)(e) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

174. New York courts have recognized the right to attend termination proceedings. See In re Daniel Aaron D., 49 N.Y.2d 788, 790, 403 N.E.2d 451, 452, 426 N.Y.S.2d 729, 730 (1980) (ruling that the mother should have been present at the hearing during the testimony of the court-appointed psychiatrist since mother had not waived her right to be present); see also In re Cleveland W., 256 A.D.2d 1151, 1151–52, 684 N.Y.S.2d 121, 121 (4th Dept. 1998) (finding family court abused its discretion by proceeding with termination hearing even though respondent mother had called the court to inform them that she was too ill to attend, her attorney appeared and also told the court, and mother supplied a note from a doctor documenting her illness); In re Kendra M., 175 A.D.2d 657, 658, 572 N.Y.S.2d 583, 585 (4th Dept. 1991) (finding that family court erred in conducting fact-finding hearing on a date when incarcerated parent could not attend and should have made arrangements to have parent brought from jail to be present at the hearing); In re Robert Allen V., 78 A.D. 2d 843, 844, 433 N.Y.S.2d 445, 446 (1st Dept. 1980), aff'd, 52 N.Y.2d 1071 (N.Y. 1981) (affirming the right of a father of a child born out of wedlock to participate and be heard at all stages of the proceeding regarding the child's foster care status); In re Tyrell M., 283 A.D.2d 500, 501, 724 N.Y.S.2d 874, 875 (2d Dept. 2001) (finding that the family court erred in not allowing the mother to testify on her own behalf at the next court date prior to finding that she had hearing, DSS will challenge your capabilities as a parent, and you should be there to respond to any issues raised. If you are not at the hearing, you will not be able to defend yourself, and it might look like you are not interested in protecting your parental rights.

Although you have a right to attend the hearing, if you are in a facility outside of the state where the hearing will be held, the officials at your correctional facility probably will not bring you to the hearing. In one such case, a court held that a hearing could proceed without the presence of the incarcerated parent because the interests of the state and the child outweighed the parent's interest in being at the hearing.[175] Thus, the court found that the reasons for the state and child to go on with the hearing were stronger than the reasons to wait for the parent. Other ways to participate in the hearing include testifying by deposition (a deposition is a special legal document where you answer questions or make statements in another place and it is brought before the court in writing instead of you being there in person), aggressive representation by your attorney (get your lawyer to really advocate for you), and a telephone conference call during the hearing.

To find that you have not "abandoned" or "permanently neglected" your child, the court must find that you (a) made an effort to keep in contact with your child (which includes contact with the agency); and (b) planned for your child's future during your incarceration. These two conditions were discussed above.

In New York, you have a right to a lawyer for the termination hearing.[176] The lawyer will help you argue your case for keeping your parental rights. You can either hire a lawyer yourself or ask the judge to assign one to you. Unfortunately, the family court is unlikely to appoint an attorney if you do not appear at the hearing. You may try to write to the court and respond to the allegations in the petition or ask to have an attorney appointed.

(a) Maintaining Contact with Your Child

The best way to demonstrate that you have maintained contact with your child is to give the judge copies of all letters and proof of other communications that you have had with DSS, the caseworker, your child, the family court, the foster parent, and anyone else involved in your child's foster care. You should keep a file with photocopies or carbon copies of all of these documents to help with this task. If you cannot photocopy the letters, keep a written record of each letter and a brief summary of what you wrote in the letter. You should also keep a telephone log of all of the calls you make. If you get charged for and pay for phone calls that you make, make sure to get receipts to show the judge.

Incarceration does not justify not staying in contact with your child. An incarcerated parent who does not make an effort to keep in touch with the child may be charged with permanent neglect or abandonment.[177] A parent must personally make contact and cannot rely on a relative to make contact.[178] neglected her children). The only other states that have found such a right are Arizona, California, and Florida. Texas has held specifically that a prisoner has no right to be at the termination hearing. See Philip M. Genty, Procedural Due Process Rights of Incarcerated Parents in Termination of Parental Rights Proceedings: A Fifty State Analysis, 30 J. Fam. L. 757, 774–75 (1991/92).

---

175. See In re A.O., 157 Misc. 2d 177, 179, 596 N.Y.S.2d 971, 973 (Fam. Ct. Bronx County 1993) (finding that hearing could proceed because incarcerated father's correctional facility in Connecticut refused to produce him and father refused alternate methods for out-of-court participation, such as telephone conference and written sworn testimony); see also In re James Carton K., III, 245 A.D.2d 374, 376–77, 665 N.Y.S.2d 426, 428–29 (2d Dept. 1997) (affirming termination of parental rights despite parent's absence because a parent's right to be present for fact-finding and dispositional hearings in termination cases is not absolute since the child whose guardianship and custody is at stake also has a fundamental right to a prompt and permanent adjudication), appeal denied, 91 N.Y.2d 809, 693 N.E.2d 750, 670 N.Y.S.2d 403 (N.Y. 1998). All the states that have decided this issue have ruled that a prisoner incarcerated out of state does not have a right to be produced for the termination hearing. See Philip M. Genty, Procedural Due Process Rights of Incarcerated Parents in Termination of Parental Rights Proceedings: A Fifty State Analysis, 30 J. Fam. L. 757, 775–76 (1991/92).

176. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 262(a)(iv) (McKinney 1999). See Part H of this Chapter for more information on your right to counsel.

177. See In re Antia Siami D., 192 A.D.2d 389, 389, 596 N.Y.S.2d 64, 64 (1st Dept. 1993) (terminating incarcerated parent's rights because parent had failed to contact child for more than six months); In re Ravon Paul H., 161 A.D.2d 257, 257, 555 N.Y.S.2d 49, 49 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding termination of parental rights to be in the best interests of the child where incarcerated parent did not write, send gifts, telephone, or otherwise try to keep a relationship with the child or the agency; stating that "sporadic and minimal attempts to maintain a parental relationship are insufficient to prevent a finding of abandonment"); see also In re Shannon Q., 262 A.D.2d 679, 680, 690 N.Y.S.2d 788, 789 (3d Dept. 1999) (stating that "incarceration alone does not excuse respondent's failure to contact his

Also, visitation and contact may not be enough if the court finds the quality of the visits or contacts poor or too infrequent.[179]

The court may decide not to terminate your parental rights if you can show a good reason for failing to communicate with your child and the agency. The standard generally requires that it was impossible for you to communicate.[180] However, in one case, an abandonment proceeding failed where an incarcerated father adequately explained his failure to contact the child or agency for six months.[181] The father argued that he was concerned that his child would be upset by visiting him in a prison setting, that the child was an infant and therefore could not have read letters or talked on the telephone, and that he was scared to contact the agency because he was incarcerated. Also, he had once attempted to contact the agency (although this attempt was not successful), had made plans for his child's future, and had asked his girlfriend to seek visitation with the child. The court concluded that the father's conduct did not demonstrate an intent to give up his rights and responsibilities.[182]

(b) Planning for Your Child

The second requirement you must satisfy to maintain your parental rights is planning for your child. Planning for your child is discussed above in Part C(4)(b)(ii). Your plan must be reasonable and achievable.[183]

Efforts that can demonstrate planning for your child's future include participating in whatever programs your facility offers for parents, such as parenting courses and drug and alcohol abuse counseling. It is critical that you have evidence of such participation, so you should try to get a certificate of participation in or completion of the program. Otherwise, you can ask your lawyer to subpoena a supervisor or counselor who can testify at the hearing about your progress and participation in a program.

3. Termination Proceedings Against Prisoners with Long-Term Sentences

Prisoners with long-term sentences are at a particular disadvantage with respect to maintaining their parental rights. A plan for long-term foster care, even with adequate visitations and contacts, is insufficient to fulfill the obligation of planning for an alternative living arrangement for your child.[184] ASFA's time limits make the protection of parental rights especially difficult in this context.

New York's highest court has held that parents who will be in prison for ten to twenty years or twenty-five years to life, and who have no plan for their children other than to have the children remain in long-term foster care, should lose their parental rights.[185] The court found that the legislature did not mean "to approve a plan of indefinite foster care for the child of an incarcerated parent who is serving a lengthy prison term and who cannot provide the child with an alternative living arrangement."[186] In other words, foster child" where parent did not try to contact Social Services to find the location of his daughter).

---

178. See In re Thomas G., Jr., 165 A.D.2d 729, 729, 564 N.Y.S.2d 32, 33 (1st Dept. 1990) (refusing to consider communication between paternal grandmother and agency to satisfy the incarcerated father's obligation to make contact with his child); see also In re Christopher MM., 210 A.D.2d 767, 767, 620 N.Y.S.2d 853, 854 (3d Dept. 1994) (finding father's contacts "minimal and insubstantial" for purposes of abandonment proceeding when the only attempts to contact the child were three phone calls placed to child's grandparents), appeal denied, 85 N.Y.2d 807, 651 N.E.2d 918, 628 N.Y.S.2d 50 (N.Y. 1995).

179. See In re Cecelia "A," 199 A.D.2d 582, 583, 604 N.Y.S.2d 327, 329 (3d Dept. 1993) (finding "sporadic and unsubstantial contacts" insufficient to defeat an abandonment petition supported by "clear and convincing evidence"); In re Tasha Monica B., 156 A.D.2d 247, 247, 548 N.Y.S.2d 508, 509 (1st Dept. 1989) (finding visitation alone insufficient to show parent was fulfilling obligations where the quality of visitation was poor).

180. See In re Trudell J.W., 119 A.D.2d 828, 829, 501 N.Y.S.2d 453, 453 (2d Dept. 1986) (finding termination of parental rights appropriate where the mother did not produce evidence that her failure to contact the child or agency was a result of circumstances that made it impossible for her to do so).

181. See In re Baby Girl I., 210 A.D.2d 601, 619 N.Y.S.2d 832 (3d Dept. 1994).

182. See In re Baby Girl I., 210 A.D.2d 601, 602–03, 619 N.Y.S.2d 832, 833 (3d Dept. 1994).

183. See In re Leon RR, 48 N.Y.2d 117, 125–26, 397 N.E.2d 374, 379, 421 N.Y.S.2d 863, 868–69 (1979) (finding parents' plans for child's future adequate where they solved personal problems that had led to the child's initial removal, found employment, found suitable housing, and sought psychological counseling).

184. See In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 90, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (finding that leaving a child to foster care until he is no longer a child is not an acceptable plan).

185. See In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 90, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (finding that leaving a child to foster care until he is no longer a child is not an acceptable plan).

186. In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 89, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (finding that

care cannot be used to preserve your parental rights if it is clear that you will never be able to care for your children, and you have not on your own arranged for another person to care for them while you are in prison. The court noted that even though there is a legislative concern for the rights of incarcerated parents, the law states that a child deserves a "normal family life in a permanent home" with a nurturing family relationship.[187] In the court's eyes, a parent who will be incarcerated for more than ten years cannot provide such a nurturing family relationship.

Another case terminating the parental rights of a long-term prisoner involved a father who would be eligible for parole in seven years. The court reached a similar conclusion, holding long-term foster care was not an appropriate plan.[188] Likewise, a father's plan for his child to remain in foster care for six years or more while he was incarcerated was found to be inappropriate. The father's parental rights in that case were terminated for permanent neglect.[189]

A plan for long-term foster care is not adequate for a parent to keep his parental rights even when that parent has maintained contact and a close relationship with the child. If you are serving a long sentence and your child is in foster care, it is very important that you attempt to remove your child from foster care by privately placing him with a relative or another person. If relatives are found who will care for the child, termination of your parental rights might not be ordered.[190] Otherwise, you risk losing your parental rights.

4. Practical Tips for Preventing Termination of Parental Rights

(1) Know the Legal Status of Your Child in Placement. Is he in foster care or private custody? If he is in foster care, what type is it? Was your child voluntarily or involuntarily placed? Gather all documents relating to your child's placement in one place, and keep safe and precise records.

(2) Maintain Contact with Your Child. Write letters and cards. If possible, telephone your child. Try to arrange for visitation as often as possible. Keep copies of everything you send and a log of your phone calls.

(3) Maintain Contact with Your Caseworker or Your Child's Guardian. Write or telephone him often. Ask about your child's progress in school, interests, health, problems, etc. Also ask to establish a regular schedule for visitation. Again keep accurate records of your contact with caseworkers and guardians.

(4) If Your Child Is in Foster Care, Maintain Contact with the Social Services Agency. At least once every six months, notify the agency of your current address in writing. Cooperate with the foster care agency if it attempts to arrange visits or help you plan for your child's future by asking you to attend classes or complete programs at your facility.

(5) Attend Court Hearings. Make sure that the judge knows you are involved and are concerned about your child. If you learn that a court hearing has been scheduled, send a letter to the family court clerk asking that you be produced in court and asking to have legal representation assigned to you. Once your lawyer is assigned, make sure you know his name, address, and telephone number.

(6) Most Importantly, Keep Records. Make a record of every phone call you make to your child, your caseworker, a court, or foster care agency. If possible, make copies of every letter you send. This is very important and might mean the difference between keeping and losing your child after you are released.

---

leaving a child to foster care until he is no longer a child is not an acceptable plan).

187. In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 89, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1058, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 541 (N.Y. 1989) (quoting In re Joyce T., 65 N.Y.2d 39, 47, 478 N.E.2d 1306, 1311–12, 489 N.Y.S.2d 705, 711 (N.Y. 1985) (emphasis added)); see also N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384-b(1)(a) (McKinney 2010) (describing legislative intent behind guardianship and custody statutes).

188. See In re Omar Garry G., 198 A.D.2d 149, 149, 603 N.Y.S.2d 860, 861 (1st Dept. 1993) (finding termination of parental rights appropriate where incarcerated parent's only plan for his child was to have the child remain in foster care until his release, especially since there were relatives who appeared to be "ready, willing, and able" to care for the child during his incarceration), appeal denied, 83 N.Y.2d 753, 634 N.E.2d 603, 612 N.Y.S.2d 107 (N.Y. 1994).

189. See In re Guardianship and Custody of Latasha C., 196 A.D.2d 756, 756, 602 N.Y.S.2d 11, 11 (1st Dept. 1993).

190. See In re Omar Garry G., 198 A.D.2d 149, 149, 603 N.Y.S.2d 860, 861 (1st Dept. 1993); see also In re Gregory B., 74 N.Y.2d 77, 88, 542 N.E.2d 1052, 1057, 544 N.Y.S.2d 535, 540 (N.Y. 1989).

E. Incarcerated Fathers with Children in Foster Care

Incarcerated fathers with children in foster care face unique challenges. As a father, your biological link to your child is not enough to protect your rights as a parent.[191] You must take affirmative actions to protect your rights, such as maintaining contact with your child while he is in foster care. Without these actions, you risk losing your child to adoption without the court seeking your consent or even notifying you of its actions.

1. Establishing Paternity—Becoming a "Legal Father"

In order to exercise the parental rights described in this Chapter, you must establish paternity by proving to a court that you are the legal father of your child. Apart from giving you rights, establishing paternity also gives you responsibilities. One of the major responsibilities that goes along with a court finding that you are a child's father is a possible obligation to pay child support.[192]

Establishing paternity is only necessary if your child was born out of wedlock. If you were or are married to the mother of your child, you are automatically considered to be the father of all children conceived or born to the mother during the marriage, and you do not have to establish paternity. However, if you are unmarried, you are not the child's legal father even if you lived with the mother of your children for a number of years. Additionally, having your name on your child's birth certificate does not automatically make you the child's legal father.[193] Therefore, if you were not married to the mother of your child when your child was conceived or born, you will have to prove your paternity. This requirement extends to fathers who married their child's mother after the child was born.

To prove your paternity, you should file a petition for an order of "filiation"[194] (another word for paternity) in family court in the county where either the child or the child's mother lives.

Your paternity petition:

(1) Must be in writing. You must write or type the petition.
(2) Must state that you ("petitioner") are the father of the child. You must say you are the father of the child and why. This is done by alleging that you had sexual intercourse with the child's mother during a time about nine months prior to the child's birth.
(3) Must be verified. You must have a notarized statement that the reasons you give in the petition and the claims you make about paternity are true.
(4) Must be served on the respondent. This means you must have someone over the age of eighteen deliver a copy of the petition to your child's mother. This will inform the mother of the paternity proceedings in family court so that she can be present during the proceedings.[195]

If on the court date the mother agrees that you are the child's father, the judge may find that paternity has been proven. If the mother disputes that you are the father, the judge may order DNA testing to prove

---

191. In re Robert O., 80 N.Y.2d 254, 265, 604 N.E.2d 99, 104, 590 N.Y.S.2d 37, 42 (1992) (holding that the biological link of the father is insufficient to create a constitutionally protected interest and that the unwed biological father must demonstrate some action for him to enjoy protection of his parental rights); see also Caban v. Mohammad, 441 U.S. 380, 392, 99 S. Ct. 1760, 1768, 60 L. Ed. 2d 297, 307 (1979) (finding that where the father has not taken action to "participate in the rearing of his child, nothing in the Equal Protection Clause precludes the State from withholding from him the privilege of vetoing the adoption of that child").

192. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 413 (McKinney 2010).

193. See In re Strong's Estate, 168 Misc. 716, 723, 6 N.Y.S.2d 300, 306 (Sur. Ct. N.Y. County 1938) ("The fact of birth may be established by a birth certificate, although such certificate is not admissible to establish parentage."), aff'd, 256 A.D. 971, 11 N.Y.S. 2d 225 (1st Dept. 1939); see also Stanford v. Union Labor Life Ins. Co., 74 Misc. 2d 781, 786, 345 N.Y.S.2d 928, 934 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 1973) ("It is the rule in New York that a birth … certificate is admissible as a public document only to show the fact of birth …, and not as evidence of the additional facts recited therein pursuant to law.").

194. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 542 (McKinney 2009).

195. This step may be both difficult and expensive, but it is required. If you do not do this, the court will dismiss your petition and you will have to start all over again. However, if reasonable and numerous attempts are made to serve the mother and these are documented with affidavits of attempted service, the court can authorize "service by alternative means," which can include sending a letter to her last known address, putting an advertisement in a local paper, or posting a legal notice in the local post office. See New York City, Administration for Children's Services, Out of Sight, Not out of Mind: Important Information for Incarcerated Parents Whose Children Are in Foster Care (February 5, 2005). You can obtain a copy of this pamphlet by writing to the Administration for Children's Services, 150 William Street, 18th Floor, New York, New York 10038, or by calling ACS at (212) 341-0900.

paternity, which you may be required to pay for. Once your paternity is established, you have the right to request visits with your child and to be involved in planning for your child's future (permanency planning) while he is in foster care. If paternity is not proven, you do not have a legal right to visits or to a say in permanency planning.

Even if paternity is proven, you may not necessarily have the right to stop your child's adoption proceedings. The following Section outlines the steps you can take to become a "consent" father (one who has the right to consent to adoption). It also explains the requirements for being considered a "notice" father (one who has a right to be notified of termination of parental rights and subsequent adoption).

2. Types of Fathers

As explained in Part D, while your child is in foster care, proceedings may begin to convince the court that terminating parental rights and placing your child for adoption is the best option for your child. Your permission, or consent, may or may not be required for these proceedings to go forward. Your right to consent to adoption or even be notified about the adoption depends on how the law classifies you as a father.

(a) Married Fathers

Married fathers have all the rights and obligations that a biological mother would have.[196] If you are a married father, your consent will be needed before any adoption takes place, and you have the right to be present at all hearings, as well as to initiate hearings, as described generally in Part D of this Chapter.

(b) Consent Fathers

If your child was born out of wedlock, you will retain your right to withhold consent for your child's adoption only if you fulfill the obligations of a "consent father." As a consent father, you will have the right to be present at all proceedings concerning your child, and, unless your parental rights have been terminated, you must give consent for your child to be adopted.[197] In order to be considered a consent father, you must maintain "substantial and continuous" contact with your child.[198] Substantial and continuous contact is demonstrated by paying a reasonable sum to support the child.[199] Additionally, you must demonstrate that you have either:

(1) Visited the child at least monthly when physically and financially able to do so, unless you were prevented from visiting by the person or agency with custody of your child; or
(2) Had regular communication with your child (or the person or agency with custody) when you are unable to visit.[200]

Even if you are a consent father, if the court rules that you have abandoned your child (see Part D(1)(a) of this Chapter), the court will say that you have lost your right to consent to the adoption and will not require your consent for the adoption to proceed.[201]

(c) Notice Fathers

Being a "notice father" means that the court must inform you if proceedings to terminate parental rights of your child and/or free him for adoption are initiated. As a notice father, your consent will not be required

---

196. See N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 417 (McKinney 2008) ("A child born of parents who at any time prior or subsequent to the birth of said child shall have entered into a ceremonial marriage shall be deemed the legitimate child of both parents for all purposes of this article regardless of the validity of such marriage."); N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111(1)(b) (McKinney 2008) ("[C]onsent to adoption shall be required … of the parents or surviving parent, whether adult or infant, of a child conceived or born in wedlock.").

197. Note that until your child is six months old, if you are not married to the mother of your child, she can place the child for adoption without your consent. In this case, you can attempt to block the adoption only by seeking full custody of the child. In re Raquel Marie X, 76 N.Y.2d 387, 408, 559 N.E.2d 418, 428, 559 N.Y.S.2d 855, 865 (N.Y. 1990).

198. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111(1)(d) (McKinney 2008).

199. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111(1)(d)(i) (McKinney 2008).

200. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111(d) (McKinney 2008).

201. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111(2)(a) (McKinney 1999); see In re Eugene "MM," 132 A.D.2d 780, 781, 517 N.Y.S. 2d 326, 328 (3d Dept. 1987) (holding that father who had minimal contact with mother and child, had failed to pay any child support, and had never requested visitation while incarcerated, failed to meet the threshold criteria needed to require his consent to the adoption); In re Joshua II, 296 A.D.2d 646, 647–48, 745 N.Y.S.2d 112, 113 (3d Dept. 2002) (holding that incarcerated father's consent to adoption was not required because father abandoned child).

before your child is adopted, but you will be able to present evidence to the court about what you believe is in the best interest of your child. If you do not satisfy the requirements to be considered a consent father, but you meet one of the following requirements, you may be considered a notice father:

(1) If you have been "adjudicated" by a court to be the father of your child;[202]
(2) If you have filed a notice to claim paternity of your child;[203]
(3) If you are on the child's birth certificate;[204]
(4) If you were openly living with your child and his mother when the proceedings started, and you held yourself out to the world as his father;[205]
(5) If the mother has identified you as a father in a written sworn statement;[206]
(6) If you were married to the child's mother within six months after the birth;[207] or
(7) If you have filed an Acknowledgement of Paternity (a sworn statement on a prescribed form) with the Putative Father Registry.[208]

Note that these categories include persons who are listed on the child's birth certificate and persons who have been found to be "legal fathers" by the court. Therefore, even if you are the legal father or the father on the birth certificate, your consent may not be required before your child is adopted, unless you meet the additional requirements listed above for consent fathers. Your status as a notice father or consent father is not permanent. You can move from the notice category to the consent category by maintaining substantial and continuous contact with your child. Likewise, if you stop maintaining contact with your child, the court will consider you a notice father, even if at one point you may have qualified as a consent father.

If you have had minimal or no contact with your child and you do not fall under any of the above categories (married, notice, consent, or legal father), you have no rights or duties respecting your child. The court need not notify you or ask for your consent before placing your child for adoption.

F. Voluntary Adoption

You might decide that the best choice for your child is adoption. In order to do this, you must "surrender" your child, which generally means that you give up all of your parental rights to that child. Generally, you give up the right to visit your child, call your child, or even learn how your child is doing.[209] However, it may be possible to negotiate some conditions to the surrender of your child, such as naming the person who adopts your child or preserving your right to see your child after adoption.[210] This option is called a "conditional surrender." If you negotiate these conditions and the person who adopts your child prevents you from seeing him, you may petition a court for visitation. The court would then conduct a hearing to determine if visitation is in the best interests of the child.[211]

Whether you choose a total or conditional surrender, this is a serious decision and you should get all the advice and help that you think you need. You have the right to talk with a lawyer before you sign a "Surrender Instrument," which is the form you sign to give up your child. If your child is in foster care, you have the right to supportive counseling before you sign the surrender instrument.[212] Make sure you have read and fully understand any and all documents that you are asked to sign. If you do not understand something in the document, ask your lawyer to explain it. Do not sign anything until you are sure that you

---

202. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a(2)(a) (McKinney 1999).
203. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a(2)(c) (McKinney 1999).
204. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a (2)(d) (McKinney 1999).
205. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a(2)(e) (McKinney 1999).
206. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a(2)(f) (McKinney 1999).
207. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a(2)(g) (McKinney 1999). Note that marriage within six months of the child's birth makes you a notice father, but not necessarily a consent father. You can become a consent father by maintaining substantial and continuous contact with your child.
208. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 111-a(2)(h) (McKinney 1999).
209. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 383-c(3)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010). However, a surrender of a child in foster care may include a provision for visitation with the child after adoption.
210. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 383-c(2) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).
211. See In re Sabrina H., 245 A.D.2d 1134, 1135, 666 N.Y.S.2d 531, 531 (4th Dept. 1997) (finding that a biological mother can petition the court for enforcement of conditions in the surrender agreement). However, an adoptive parent's refusal to let a biological parent see the child would not allow the biological parent to automatically revoke the surrender.
212. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law §§ 383-c(3)(b), (5)(b)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

understand what the consequences of signing will be and are sure that this is what you want to do and what you think is best for your child.

The adoption process is different depending on whether your child is in foster care or has been placed privately with friends or relatives.

1. If Your Child Is in Private Placement

If your child is living with a friend or relative through a private arrangement, you can surrender your child either by giving him to a foster care or adoption agency or by making a private adoption agreement.[213] The surrender is made by signing the form in or out of court.

After you have surrendered your child to the agency, you have thirty days to change your mind.[214] If you change your mind after thirty days, you may regain your parental rights only if the child has not yet been placed in an adoptive home.[215] If you change your mind about the surrender and the child is already in an adoptive home, the judge will decide who has legal custody based on the "best interests of the child."[216]

2. If Your Child Is in Foster Care

If your child is in foster care, contact your child's caseworker and explain that you are interested in giving up your child for adoption. The surrender can take place in one of two ways when the child is already in foster care. The first is to "execute and acknowledge" the surrender instrument in court before a judge.[217] If the surrender takes place in court, the termination of your parental rights is irrevocable.[218] This means you cannot change your mind and regain the rights to your child. The second type of surrender takes place outside of court and is called an "extra-judicial surrender." If you sign the surrender instrument outside of court, you have forty-five days after signing the surrender to change your mind.[219]

As with foster parents, ASFA requires that the agency check the criminal records of prospective adoptive parents. The requirements for approval or denial of an adoptive parent are the same as for a foster parent.[220]

G. Getting to Court

Parents have a right to attend all court proceedings involving the foster care and adoption of their child. For parents who are prisoners, you will have to arrange to be brought to court. You should request permission to attend such proceedings from your correctional facility as far in advance of the court date as possible. You should also contact your caseworker and tell him you wish to attend. You have to write to the judge well in advance of the hearing date and explain why your presence at the hearing is essential and request that the judge order the Department of Correctional Services to produce you in court. See Appendix A of this Chapter for a sample letter asking the judge to order you to be produced for the hearing.

H. The Right to Counsel

Even though the U.S. Supreme Court has held that there is no constitutional guarantee of a right to a lawyer in proceedings for termination of parental rights or foster care, New York state law guarantees this right.[221] In most other states, the right to a lawyer in such proceedings has been granted either by the state constitution or by state law. Usually, if you cannot afford to hire your own attorney, the court will appoint what in New York is called an "18-b attorney" when you get to court.[222] You also can try to contact a legal services organization for help, but attorneys at those organizations are generally unavailable for these kinds of cases. See Appendix B of this Chapter, as well as Appendix IV of the JLM, for a list of legal service organizations.

---

213. N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law §§ 115–16 (McKinney 1999 & Supp. 2010). A private adoption involves a contract between the birth parents and adoptive parents without agency involvement.

214. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

215. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

216. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 384(6) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

217. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 383-c(3)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

218. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 383-c(3)(b)(McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

219. N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 383-c(5)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010).

220. See N.Y. Soc. Serv. Law § 378-a (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2010); see also Part C(1)(d) of this Chapter.

221. N.Y. Fam. Ct. Act § 262 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2010).

222. "18-b" refers to a free attorney assigned by the court under Article 18-b of the County Law. N.Y. County Law § 722 (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2010).

I. Conclusion

If you are incarcerated and have a child, it is important for you to know the options you have in order to maintain your relationship with your child. First, you should decide whether you want your child in private placement (with a family or friend) or in foster care. Different benefits attach to different situations, so it is important to weigh all of your options. In order to have the best opportunity possible to retain custody of your child when you are outside of prison, you should maintain contact with your child and with your caseworker. You should also keep records of all of the contact you have with both your child and caseworker in case you need to prove your efforts. You should also maintain contact with the custodian of the child and keep records of all contact.

APPENDIX A

REQUEST FOR AN ORDER TO PRODUCE

Date:_____, 20__

ATTENTION: Court Clerk
Family Court
State of New York
County of [Name of County]
[Street Address]
[City or Town], New York, [Zip Code]

RE: [Child's Name], [Child's Birth Date]

Dear Sir or Madam:

I respectfully request to be present for the hearing that is to be held on the [##] day of [month], 20[##], for my child/children, [Name of Children]. I am presently incarcerated at [name of facility], located at the below address. Please submit an "Order to Produce" upon this institution, so that I may be available for this pending hearing.

I am also requesting that the court assign an attorney to represent me in the above proceeding and that all court proceedings be adjourned until I am able to be physically present.

[If applicable: I have not been informed of the date that my child/children will be appearing before your court. Would you kindly notify me of the date and enter this into the record as a Notice of Appearance and request to be produced.]

NOTIFY: [Warden's Name]
[Your Name and Address]

Sworn to me on the [##] day of [month] of 20[##].

Name of Parent (Print): _____

NYSID #:_____

Signature of Parent: _____

Notary Public Signature: _____

APPENDIX B

SERVICES FOR INCARCERATED PARENTS

Edwin Gould Services for Children and Families
Incarcerated Mothers Program
P.O. Box 287926
New York, NY 10128
Phone: (646) 315-7604
Area Served: New York City
The purpose of this organization is to prevent placement of children in foster care. This organization provides counseling for mothers incarcerated in New York City or New York State, makes monthly visits to your children, and encourages visits between mothers and children. To be eligible for these services, your child or children must be under 18 years old and must not already be in foster care.

Women in Prison Project
Correctional Association of New York, Inc.
2900 Adam Clayton Powell Blvd., Suite 200
New York, NY 10027
Phone: (212) 254-5700 ext. 306
Area Served: New York State

Legal Action Center
200 Varick Street
New York, NY 10014
Phone: (212) 243-1313
Area Served: New York State
Provides legal information for people with criminal records.

Administration for Children's Services ("ACS")
Office of Advocacy
Parents' and Children's Rights Ombudsman
150 Williams Street, First Floor
New York, NY 10038
Phone: (212) 676-9421
You can contact this branch of ACS if your child is in foster care in New York City and your child's foster care agency is refusing to bring your child to visit you in prison.

The Osborne Association, "Family Resource Center" and "Family Works"
175 Remsen Street, 8th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
Toll-Free Hotline: 1-800-344-3314
Phone: (718) 637-6560
www.osborneny.org
Area Served: New York State
The Family Resource Center runs a toll free hotline and a support group. Family Works manages a parent education program for incarcerated fathers and a children's center in the visiting areas at Sing Sing, Woodbourne, and Shawangunk Correctional Facilities.

Hour Children
36-11A 12th Street
Long Island City, NY 11106
Phone: (718) 433-4724
Area Served: New York State
Provides five community residential programs for female ex-offenders and their children. Provides parent education, enhanced visiting, and transportation assistance for women incarcerated in two New York State prisons.

Women's Prison Association
110 Second Avenue
New York, NY 10003
Phone: (646) 336-6100
Area served: New York City
Provides comprehensive services to incarcerated and formerly incarcerated women. Services include parent education, self-help support group, information, referrals, case management, mentoring, group activities, gifts for children, nursery family reunification support, family therapy, community residential services, and legal services and information.

The following organizations provide free legal services in New York City. Contact them if you need to take some action for your child and you cannot afford a lawyer. For a more extensive list of legal services organizations throughout New York State, turn to Appendix IV of the JLM.

Legal Services for New York City (PLSNY)
350 Broadway, 6th Floor
New York, NY 10013
Phone: (646) 442-3600

Prisoners' Legal Services of NY

102 Prospect Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
Phone: (607) 273-2283
Prisons Served: Auburn, Butler, Camp Georgetown, Monterey Shock, Camp Pharsalia, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Southport, Watertown, Willard.

Albany Office
41 State Street, Suite M112
Albany, NY, 12207
Phone: (518) 438-8046
Prisons Served: Arthurkill, Bayview, Beacon, Bedford Hills, Mt. McGregor, Summit Shock, CNYPC, Coxsackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecombe, Fishkill, Fulton, Great Meadow, Greene, Greenhaven, Hale Creek, Hudson, Lincoln, Marcy, Midstate, Mid-Orange, Mohawk, Oneida, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Walsh, Washington, Woodbourne.

Buffalo Office
237 Main Street, Suite 1535
Buffalo, NY 14203
Prisons Served: Albion, Attica, Buffalo, Collins, Gowanda, Groveland, Lakeview, Livingston, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, Wyoming.

Plattsburgh Office
121 Bridge Street, Suite 202
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
Prisons served: Adirondack, Altona, Bare Hill, Camp Gabriels, Chateaugay, Clinton, Franklin, Gouverneur, Lyon Mountain, Moriah Shock, Ogdensburg, Riverview, Upstate.

REGIONAL OCFS OFFICES

ALBANY REGIONAL OFFICE

Room 309 South Building
52 Washington Street
Rensselaer, NY 12144
Phone: (518) 402-3038
Counties served: Albany, Clinton, Columbia, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Hamilton, Montgomery, Otsego, Rensselaer, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Warren, Washington

BUFFALO REGIONAL OFFICE

Ellicott Square Building, Room 545
295 Main Street
Buffalo, NY 14203
Phone: (716) 847-3828
Counties served: Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Niagara, Orleans, Wyoming

LONG ISLAND REGIONAL OFFICE

Courthouse Corporate Center
320 Carelton Avenue, Suite 4000
Central Islip, NY 11722
Phone: (631) 342-7100
Counties served: Nassau, Suffolk

NEW YORK CITY REGIONAL OFFICE

2 Lafayette Street, 22nd Floor
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 676-2444
Fax: (212) 676-2424
Counties served: 5 Boroughs of New York City

ROCHESTER REGIONAL OFFICE

259 Monroe Avenue, 3rd Fl. Monroe Square
Rochester, NY 14607
Phone: (585) 238-8531
Counties served: Chemung, Livingston, Monroe, Ontario, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Yates

SYRACUSE REGIONAL OFFICE

The Atrium
100 S. Salina Street, Suite 350
Syracuse, NY 13202
Phone: (315) 423 1202
Counties served: Broome, Cayuga, Chenango, Cortland, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Madison, Oneida, Onondaga, Oswego, St. Lawrence, Tioga, Tompkins

SPRING VALLEY REGIONAL OFFICE

11 Perlman Drive, Pascack Plaza
Spring Valley, NY 10977
Phone: (845) 708-2400
Counties served: Dutchess, Orange, Putnam, Rockland, Sullivan, Ulster, Westchester

CONTACT INFORMATION FOR COUNTY DEPARTMENTS OF SOCIAL SERVICES

Albany County DSS
162 Washington Avenue
Albany, NY 12210
Phone: (518) 447-7300

Allegany County DSS
County Office Building
7 Court Street
Belmont, NY 14813-1077
Phone: (585) 268-9622

Broome County DSS
Thomas P. Hoke Human Services Center
36-42 Main Street
Binghamton, NY 13905-3199
Phone: (607) 778-8850

Cattaraugus County DSS
One Leo Moss Drive, Suite 600
Olean, NY 14760-1158
Phone: (716) 373-8065

Cayuga County DSS
County Office Building
160 Genesee Street
Auburn, NY 13021-3433
Phone: (315) 253-1207

Chautauqua County DSS
Hall R. Clothier Building
7 North Erie Street
Mayville, NY 14757
Phone: (716) 753-4421

Chemung County DSS
Human Resource Center
425 Pennsylvania Avenue
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902
Phone: (607) 737-5309

Chenango County DSS
5 Court Street
Norwich, NY 13815
Phone: (607) 337-1500
Toll Free: (877) 337-1501

Clinton County DSS
13 Durkee Street
Plattsburgh, NY 12901-2911
Phone: (518) 565-3222

Columbia County DSS
25 Railroad Avenue
P.O. Box 458
Hudson, NY 12534
Phone: (518) 828-9411

Cortland County DSS
County Office Building
60 Central Avenue
Cortland, NY 13045-5590
Phone: (607) 753-5248

Delaware County DSS
111 Main Street
Delhi, NY 13753
Phone: (607) 832-5300

Dutchess County DSS
60 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601-3299
Phone: (845) 486-3000

Erie County DSS
Services for Children, Families, and Adults
Hens & Kelly Building
478 Main Street
Buffalo, NY 14202-3959
Phone: (716) 858-8000

Essex County DSS
7551 Court Street
P.O. Box 217
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
Phone: (518) 873-3441

Franklin County DSS
355 West Main Street
Malone, NY 12953
Phone: (518) 483-6770

Fulton County DSS
4 Daisy Lane
P.O. Box 549
Johnstown, NY 12095
Phone: (518) 736-5600

Genesee County DSS
5130 East Main Street, Suite #3
Batavia, NY 14020-3700
Phone: (585) 344-2580

Greene County DSS
411 Main Street
P.O. Box 528
Catskill, NY 12414-1716
Phone: (518) 943-3200

Hamilton County DSS
White Birch Lane
P.O. Box 725
Indian Lake, NY 12842-0725
Phone: (518) 648-6131

Herkimer County DSS
301 North Washington Street, Suite 2110
Herkimer, NY 13350
Phone: (315) 867-1291

Jefferson County DSS
250 Arsenal Street
Watertown, NY 13601
Phone: (315) 782-9030

Lewis County DSS
5274 Outer Stowe Street
Lowville, NY 13367
Phone: (315) 376-5400

Livingston County DSS
1 Murray Hill Drive
Mt. Morris, NY 14510
Phone: (585) 243-7300

Madison County DSS
Madison County Complex, Building 1
133 North Court Street
P.O. Box 637
Wampsville, NY 13163
Phone: (315) 366-2211

Monroe County DSS
111 Westfall Road
Rochester, NY 14620
Phone: (585) 753-6298

Montgomery County DSS
County Office Building
P.O. Box 745
Fonda, NY 12068
Phone: (518) 853-4646

Nassau County DSS
60 Charles Lindbergh Blvd.
Uniondale, NY 11553
Phone: (516) 227-8265

New York City DSS (merged with the Human Resources Administration)
180 Water Street, 25th Floor
New York, NY 10038
Toll-Free: (877) 472-8411
Outside NYC: (718) 557-1399

NYC Administration for Children's Services
150 William Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10038
Phone: (212) 341-0900

Human Resources Administration
Office of Legal Affairs
Records Access Officer
180 Water Street, 17th Floor
New York, NY 10038
Toll-free: (877) 472-8411

Niagara County DSS
20 East Avenue
P.O. Box 506
Lockport, NY 14095
Phone: (716) 439-7600

Oneida County DSS
County Office Building
800 Park Avenue
Utica, NY 13501
Phone: (315) 798-5700

Onondaga County DSS
John H. Mulroy Civic Center, 12th Floor
421 Montgomery Street
Syracuse, NY 13202-2923
Phone: (315) 435-2985

Ontario County DSS
3010 County Complex Drive
Canandaigua, NY 14424-1296
Phone: (585) 396-4060
Toll-free: (877) 814-6907

Orange County DSS
11 Quarry Road, Box Z
Goshen, NY 10924-0678
Phone: (845) 291-4000

Orleans County DSS
14016 Route 31 West
Albion, NY 14411-9365
Phone: (585) 589-7000

Oswego County DSS
100 Spring Street
P.O. Box 1320
Mexico, NY 13114
Phone: (315) 963-5000

Otsego County DSS
County Office Building
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326-1196
Phone: (607) 547-4355

Putnam County DSS
110 Old Route Six Center, Building #2
Carmel, NY 10512
Phone: (845) 808-1500

Rensselaer County DSS
127 Bloomingrove Drive
Troy, NY 12180
Phone: (518) 833-6000

Rockland County DSS
Robert L. Yeager Health Center
Building L, Sanatorium Road
Pomona, NY 10970
Phone: (845) 364-2000

St. Lawrence County DSS
6 Judson Street
Canton, NY 13617
Phone: (315) 379-2111

Saratoga County DSS
152 West High Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
Phone: (518) 884-4140

Schenectady County DSS
797 Broadway
Schenectady, NY 12305-2704
Phone: (518) 388-4470

Schoharie County DSS
P.O. Box 687
Schoharie, NY 12157
Phone: (518) 295-8334

Schuyler County DSS
323 Owego Street – Unit 3
Montour Falls, NY 14865
Phone: (607) 535-8303

Seneca County DSS
1 DiPronio Drive
P.O. Box 690
Waterloo, NY 13165-0690
Phone: (315) 539-1865

Steuben County DSS
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
Phone: (607) 776-7611

Suffolk County DSS
3085 Veterans Memorial Highway
Ronkonkama, NY 11779
Phone: (631) 854-9935

Sullivan County DSS
P.O. Box 231
Liberty, NY 12754
Phone: (845) 292-0100

Tioga County DSS
P.O. Box 240
Owego, NY 13827
Phone: (607) 687-8300

Tompkins County DSS
320 West State Street
Ithaca, NY. 14850
Phone: (607) 274-5252

Ulster County DSS
1061 Development Court
Kingston, NY 12401-1959
Phone: (845) 334-5000

Warren County DSS
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845-9803
Phone: (518) 761-6300

Washington County DSS
Municipal Center, Building B
383 Broadway
Fort Edward, NY 12828
Phone: (518) 746-2300

Wayne County DSS
77 Water Street
P.O. Box 10
Lyons, NY 14489-0010
Phone: (315) 946-4881

Westchester County DSS
County Office Building #2
112 East Post Road
White Plains, NY 10601-5113
Phone: (914) 995-5000

Wyoming County DSS
P.O. Box 231
Warsaw, NY 14569
Phone: (716) 786-8900

Yates County DSS
County Office Building
417 Liberty Street, Suite 2122
Penn Yan, NY 14527-1118
Phone: (315) 536-5183

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 34:
The Rights of Pretrial Detainees

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 34

THE RIGHTS OF PRETRIAL DETAINEES*

Pretrial detention is the time period that you are incarcerated between being arrested and your trial. Detention is only supposed to be used to ensure that the person will not flee prior to trial or pose a danger to other people. It is not supposed to be used to punish or rehabilitate that person. This is because as a pretrial detainee, you have not been convicted of a crime and are not guilty since under the U.S. Constitution, a person accused of a crime is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Because of this difference between pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners, you might think that detainees would retain greater rights and privileges than other incarcerated persons. Pretrial detainees, however, are rarely treated much differently than convicted prisoners. In many instances, the conditions at jails, where pretrial detainees are often held, are substantially worse than in state prisons.

This Chapter covers your rights under the Fifth and Sixth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution after the police have deemed you a suspect. Part A discusses interrogation law and your Fifth Amendment right to counsel. Your Sixth Amendment right to counsel is discussed in Part B. Part C discusses bail and Part D discusses your right to a speedy trial. Part E covers the conditions of your pretrial detention, including punishment, medical treatment, protection from violence, food and housing, excessive force, access to counsel, and voting rights.

This Chapter does not cover most "search and seizure" law under the Fourth Amendment, which determines when the police can legally arrest you or search you or your possessions. This area of law is complicated and beyond the scope of this Chapter.[1] Instead, this Chapter discusses your rights after the police have already detained you. It focuses specifically on interrogation law and your right to counsel under the Fifth and Sixth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

If you are not a U.S. citizen, you also have a treaty right to communicate with consular officers from your home government.[2] If you have citizenship with some other country Chapter II of the JLM Immigration and Consular Access Supplement (ICA) is of special interest to you. It explains your right to consular access as well as the reasons why you may want to contact your consulate and reasons why you may not want to do so. Consular officers may be able to help you in criminal cases—for example, they can gather mitigating evidence in death penalty cases. Your consular officers may also help you if your rights have been violated, and they will often assist you in deportation proceedings. That Chapter will give you some practical advice on when and how to contact your consulate.

A. Your Rights During Investigation and Interrogation

The U.S. Constitution protects you against compelled self-incrimination during a police interrogation[3], regardless of whether you are charged with a federal or state offense.[4] In other words, you cannot be forced to confess to a crime or any part of a crime. Your state constitution may also protect you,[5] but regardless of what protections the state constitution provides, the police must, at a minimum, satisfy the relevant federal tests.[6] Therefore, before you are interrogated, the police must always give you your "Miranda warnings."[7]

---

* This Chapter was revised by Julian Perez, based in part on previous versions by Jared Pittman, Sarah Abramowicz, Kai-lin Hsu, Christian Parker, Elif Uras, Erica Bazzell, and Julie Caskey. Special thanks to John Boston and Steven Wasserman of the Legal Aid Society for their valuable comments.

1. If you want to learn more about search and seizure law, a good overview is found in 1 Joshua Dressler & Alan C. Michaels, Understanding Criminal Procedure (4th ed. 2006). You should also read the cases regarding search and seizure law in your own state.

2. See JLM ICA Supplement, Chapter II "The Right to Consular Access"; Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, adopted Apr. 24, 1963, art. 36, 21 U.S.T. 77, 596 U.N.T.S. 261).

3. The term "Police" here may include state agents such as jailhouse informants, i.e., fellow prisoners that are cooperating closely with and acting for the police.

4. U.S. Const. amend. V; see Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 6, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 1492, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653, 658 (1964) (holding that the states cannot abridge your 5th Amendment right against self-incrimination because the 14th Amendment makes the 5th Amendment applicable to states); Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 607, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2607, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 652 (2004) (noting that the 5th and 14th Amendment voluntariness tests are identical) (citing Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 6, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 1492, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653, 658 (1964))).

5. See, e.g., Cal. Const. art. I, § 15, cl. 6; N.Y. Const. art. I, § 6; Tex. Const. art. I, §10.

6. State constitutional standards may give you more protection than the U.S. Constitution. Read the cases that

The exact nature of these warnings and when they apply is set forth in the next three subsections. In brief, under Miranda, you are entitled to a lawyer both before and during police custodial interrogation, and you have the right to refuse to answer any and all questions asked of you by the police.[8] If a proper Miranda warning has not been given and you have not waived your rights, any incriminating statements made by you during an interrogation cannot be used against you at trial. However, a statement taken in violation of Miranda can be used during your trial to "impeach" you (to cast doubt on your credibility),[9] as can any physical evidence obtained as a result of the statements you made. [10]

1. Your Miranda Rights

Your Miranda rights are: (1) the right to remain silent, since anything you say may be used against you in court; (2) the right to counsel, both before and during interrogation; and (3) the right to a free lawyer, if you cannot afford one.[11] You may have heard these warnings on TV shows, and many people can recite them by heart. However, even though the police on television always read the warnings to a suspect at the time of arrest, Miranda applies to interrogation, not arrest. Importantly, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that there are no "special words" which the police must say in order to satisfy their constitutional obligations. As long as the police explain all of your rights to you, they have complied with Miranda.[12]

Furthermore, Miranda applies only during "custodial interrogations."[13] "Custodial" in this case means either: (1) after you have been taken into police custody;[14] or (2) when you have been deprived of your freedom of movement.[15] "Interrogation" can be either: (1) direct questioning by the police; or (2) the "functional equivalent" of direct questioning.[16] It is considered interrogation whenever the police say or do something to you that they should know is likely to cause you to confess or say something incriminating.[17] interpret your state's constitution to find out what specific rights are guaranteed to you by the state. For an introduction to legal research, see Chapter 2 of the JLM.

---

7. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1966) (holding that procedural safeguards are required to protect the 5th Amendment privilege against self-incrimination); see also Dickerson v. United States, 530 U.S. 428, 444, 120 S. Ct. 2326, 2336, 147 L. Ed. 2d 405, 420 (2000) (holding that Miranda's warning-based approach to determining admissibility of a statement made by the accused during custodial interrogation was constitutionally-based, and could not be overruled by a legislative act).

8. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 469–74, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1625–28, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 720–24 (1966).

9. Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222, 91 S. Ct. 643, 28 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1971) (holding that the state may use previous statements for the purposes of impeachment even if the statements were obtained in violation of the detainee's Miranda rights). Contra State v. Santiago, 53 Haw. 254, 266, 492 P.2d 657, (1971) (rejecting Harris and finding state use of a statement obtained in violation of Miranda for impeachment purposes violated Hawaii Constitution). Note that Hawaii is the only state that does not follow Harris.

10. United States v. Patane, 542 U.S. 630, 634, 124 S. Ct. 2620, 2624, 159 L. Ed. 2d 667, 673 (2004) (holding that physical evidence obtained as a result of "unwarned" statements—i.e. statements made without being told your Miranda rights—is still admissible in court as long as the statement was voluntary). The statements leading to the discovery of the evidence still must have been made voluntarily. But see Com. v. Martin, 827 N.E.2d 198, 444 Mass. 213 (2005) (holding that Massachusetts state constitution prohibits law enforcement from using evidence obtained from "unwarned" statements); State v. Knapp, 285 Wis.2d 86, 700 N.W.2d 899, 2005 WI 127 (2005) (holding that where physical evidence is obtained as the result of an intentional Miranda violation, the Wisconsin state constitution requires that the evidence be suppressed).

11. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 706–07 (1966).

12. See California v. Prysock, 453 U.S. 355, 359–61, 101 S. Ct. 2806, 2809, 69 L. Ed. 2d 696, 701 (1981) (per curiam) (holding that Miranda warnings did not have to use precise language of the Miranda opinion as long as the warnings reasonably conveyed to a suspect his rights).

13. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 706 (1966).

14. Whether you are considered "in custody" depends on "how a reasonable man in the suspect's position would have understood his situation." Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 442, 104 S. Ct. 3138, 3151, 82 L. Ed. 2d 317, 336 (1984).

15. See Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 441–42, 104 S. Ct. 3138, 3151, 82 L. Ed. 2d 317, 335–36 (1984) (holding that an ordinary traffic stop, where the officer had decided that the suspect would be taken into custody as soon as he exited his car but did not tell the defendant of that decision, did not constitute custody for Miranda purposes).

16. Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 300–01, 100 S. Ct. 1682, 1689, 64 L. Ed. 2d 297, 307–08 (1980) ("[T]he Miranda safeguards come into play whenever a person in custody is subjected to either express questioning or its functional equivalent.").

17. See Rhode Island v. Innis, 446 U.S. 291, 303, 100 S. Ct. 1682, 1691, 64 L. Ed. 2d 297, 309 (1980) (holding that a short conversation between policemen in front of a suspect was not the "functional equivalent" of interrogation, as a reasonable police officer would not think that the conversation would provoke an incriminating statement from the suspect).

Some law enforcement departments have developed a two-step interrogation technique to get around the Miranda requirements. They start by questioning the suspect without giving him the Miranda warnings until he confesses to committing the crime (this statement cannot be admitted in court except for impeachment purposes, to challenge the defendant's credibility). He is then given his Miranda warnings and the officer asks similar questions to try to get the suspect to give up the same information.[18] The suspect often confesses again, believing that since he already confessed once, there is no harm in doing so again. However, any suspect being questioned in this situation should be careful, because in some cases the second confession can be used against you.

It is unclear whether the second, post-Miranda confession is admissible due to a recent Supreme Court decision, Missouri v. Seibert,[19] and its relation to an earlier decision, Oregon v. Elstad.[20] The Court suggested that the proper test was an evaluation of how effective the "Miranda warnings delivered midstream," actually were.[21] One concurring opinion instead thought the important question was whether the two-step interrogation was deliberately designed to get around the Miranda rule or instead resulted from decisions made in good faith by law enforcement officials.[22] Given this uncertainty, the most basic principle to remember is that sometimes it's not in your best interests to cooperate with questioning that occurs after you have received your Miranda warnings simply because you already made potentially incriminating statements. The earlier statements may not be admissible and you have a right to ask for and receive counsel.

During any interrogation, your right to counsel is guaranteed under the Fifth Amendment. Your Fifth Amendment right to counsel is designed to protect you from self-incrimination.[23] Under Miranda, you are entitled to the advice of counsel before the interrogation and while the interrogation is taking place. If you ask for a lawyer, any interrogation should stop.[24]

2. Voluntariness

The confession you make to the police must be voluntary in order to be used at your trial.[25] The word voluntary may be confusing, however, because in this context what it actually means is something like "not coerced."[26] Several things can make a court decide that your confession was not voluntary. The police cannot use[27] or threaten to use[28] physical violence in order to get you to confess. If the police threaten to administer

---

18. See Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 604–06, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2605–06, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 650–51 (2004) (plurality opinion) for a full discussion of the two-step interrogation and an example of this technique.

19. Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643 (2004) (plurality opinion) (holding that the second confession, made after Miranda warnings, was not admissible in the circumstances of the case).

20. Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298, 309, 105 S. Ct. 1285, 1293, 84 L. Ed. 2d 222, 232 (1985) (holding that a second confession was admissible where the two-step process resulted from a simple failure to administer Miranda warnings, unaccompanied by actual coercion, and was later corrected by the giving of the Miranda warnings).

21. Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 615–16, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2612–13, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 657–58 (2004) (plurality opinion) (considering the most important factors to be "the completeness and detail of the questions and answers in the first round of interrogation, the overlapping content of the two statements, the timing and setting of the first and the second, the continuity of police personnel, the degree to which the interrogator's questions treated the second round as continuous with the first," and any statements by the police officers to let the suspect know whether his statements made prior to the Miranda warnings would be admissible).

22. Missouri v. Seibert, 542 U.S. 600, 622, 124 S. Ct. 2601, 2616, 159 L. Ed. 2d 643, 661 (2004) (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment).

23. This is different from the 6th Amendment right to counsel discussed in Part B of this Chapter. The 6th Amendment right ensures that you have good representation once formal criminal proceedings have been initiated against you.

24. See Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 485, 101 S. Ct. 1880, 1885, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378, 387 (1981) ("[I]t is inconsistent with Miranda … for the authorities, at their instance, to reinterrogate an accused in custody if he has clearly asserted his right to counsel.").

25. See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 462, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1621, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 716–17 (1966) (holding that a confession must be excluded where the accused was "involuntarily impelled to make a statement when but for the improper influences he would have remained silent.").

26. See Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 165, 107 S. Ct. 515, 521, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 483 (1986) (holding that there must be "an essential link between coercive activity of the State … and a resulting confession by a defendant" if the evidence is to be excluded).

27. See Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278, 56 S. Ct. 461, 80 L. Ed. 682 (1936) (holding that the defendant could not be convicted on the basis of a confession obtained during a physical beating by a police officer); United States v. Abu Ali, 395 F. Supp. 2d 338, 379–80 (E.D.Va. 2005), aff'd, 528 F.3d 210 (4th Cir. 2008) (holding that evidence obtained by extreme physical coercion "ha[s] no place in the American system of justice").

a painful medical procedure in an attempt to get you to confess, even though they may be legally entitled to order this procedure, the court may consider your subsequent statements to be involuntary.[29] Your confession may not be considered voluntary if it occurs after the police have interrogated you for a long period of time.[30] Likewise, confessions from detainees who have been deprived of food or sleep[31] have been deemed involuntary or if the interrogation room is in extremely poor condition,[32] courts may find your confession to be involuntary. In addition, the use of deception or promises of leniency in sentencing can sometimes make the confession involuntary.[33] If your confession is involuntary, that is, if it has been improperly compelled, it cannot be used at trial for any purpose.[34]

3. Waiving your Miranda Rights

If you waive (give up) your Miranda rights, the burden is on the prosecutor to show that you waived them "voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently."[35] If you never read or had your Miranda rights explained to you, then the prosecutor will have a hard time showing that you knowingly and intelligently waived them.

If, after having your Miranda rights read to you, you assert your right to be silent, the interrogation must stop.[36] However, you must say that you are asserting your right to be silent. Simply remaining silent will not be considered enough to demonstrate that you have chosen to exercise your rights, and officers may continue interrogating you despite your silence until you make clear your choice to remain silent and no longer cooperate with the interrogation[37]. If you ask for a lawyer during the interrogation, the interrogation

---

28. See Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 287, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1252–53, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 316 (1991) (noting that "a finding of coercion need not depend upon actual violence by a government agent," and a "credible threat of physical violence" is enough to find coercion); Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 170, 107 S. Ct. 515, 523, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 486 (1986) ("The voluntariness of a waiver of this privilege has always depended on the absence of police overreaching, not on 'free choice' in any broader sense of the word.").

29. See, e.g., State v. Phelps, 456 N.W.2d 290, 235 Neb. 569 (1990) (holding that a rape suspect's confession, made after police described a painful penile swab procedure that would be unnecessary if suspect confessed, was involuntary).

30. See Spano v. New York, 360 U.S. 315, 79 S. Ct. 1202, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (1959) (finding a confession involuntary, in part, because the suspect was subjected to prolonged interrogation of almost eight hours); Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 322 U.S. 143, 154, 64 S. Ct. 921, 926, 88 L. Ed. 1192, 1199 (1944) (finding a confession to be coerced where suspect was questioned for thirty-six hours without sleep or rest). See also Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 98 S. Ct. 2408 57 L. Ed. 2d 290 (1978) (holding that the statements of a suspect were involuntary where an interrogation lasted for four hours while the suspect was severely injured).

31. See Stidham v. Swenson, 506 F.2d 478, 480–81 (8th Cir. 1974) (holding a prisoner's confession to be coerced in part because he was denied food and water for a four-day period); Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 322 U.S. 143, 154, 64 S. Ct. 921, 926, 88 L. Ed. 1192, 1199 (1944) (finding a confession to be coerced where suspect was questioned for thirty-six hours without sleep or rest).

32. See Stidham v. Swenson, 506 F.2d 478, 481 (8th Cir. 1974) (holding a prisoner's confession to be coerced in part because the condition of his cell was "subhuman").

33. See Lynumn v. Illinois, 372 U.S. 528, 83 S. Ct. 917, 9 L. Ed. 2d 922 (1963) (finding confession to be involuntary where police told defendant that state financial aid to her child would be cut off and her children taken from her if she failed to cooperate); United States v. Tingle, 658 F.2d 1332, 1335–36 (9th Cir. 1981) (holding that intentionally causing the suspect to fear that she would not see her children for a "long time" was "patently coercive").

34. See Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 398, 98 S. Ct. 2408, 2416, 57 L. Ed. 2d 290, 303 (1978) (noting that any use at trial of an involuntary statement violates the defendant's due process rights).

35. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 707 (1966). The prosecution does not need to prove this beyond a reasonable doubt, however. Colorado v. Connelly, 479 U.S. 157, 168, 107 S. Ct. 515, 522, 93 L. Ed. 2d 473, 485 (1986) ("[T]he State need prove waiver only by a preponderance of the evidence."). See also, People v. Seymour, 14 A.D.3d 799, 801, 788 N.Y.S.2d 260, 261–62 (3d Dept. 2005) (a valid waiver of Miranda rights is established if defendant understood the immediate meaning of the warnings).

36. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 474, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1627, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 723 (1966). Note that the police can continue to question you about unrelated crimes. See Michigan v. Mosley, 423 U.S. 96, 104–07, 96 S. Ct. 321, 326–28, 46 L. Ed. 2d 313, 322–323 (1975) (holding that although the suspect invoked the right to remain silent on robbery charges, several hours later another police officer could permissibly question the suspect about an unrelated homicide upon providing the Miranda warnings and securing a waiver from the suspect). But see People v. Boyer, 48 Cal. 3d 247, 273, 768 P.2d 610, 623, 256 Cal. Rptr. 96, 109 (1989) (finding that under California state law, police can no longer attempt to question a suspect in custody once the suspect has invoked both a right to remain silent and to an attorney), overruled on other grounds by People v. Stansbury 889 P.2d 588 (Cal. 1995).

37. See United States v. Ramirez, 79 F.3d 298, 305 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that a suspect can selectively assert his right to remain silent but simply failing to answer some questions "does not constitute the invocation of the right to remain silent").

must stop until you have had time to talk to a lawyer or until you reinitiate the interrogation.[38] However, you must be clear that you are asking for an attorney to represent you in this circumstance.[39] In addition, you are entitled to an attorney whenever the interrogation resumes.[40]

B. Your Right to Counsel at Trial

Your right to counsel is protected by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. It is important to realize that these two amendments differ in the kind of protections that they provide you. This chapter is concerned with your right to the assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment. In short, you should know that statements made by you, outside the presence of your counsel and when you have not waived your right to counsel may not be used against you at your trial. It is important to realize, however, that the Sixth Amendment is "offense specific."[41] Offense specific means that, while you are detained, the state may continue investigating you for other crimes with which you have not yet been charged and may use your statements against you to prove those crimes.

1. Overview of the Sixth Amendment

The Sixth Amendment guarantees your right to the assistance of counsel,[42] among other things.[43] This right is different and independent from your Fifth Amendment right to counsel during custodial interrogations.[44] The Sixth Amendment right to counsel has special significance for you as a pretrial detainee because it begins the moment formal criminal proceedings are started against you[45] and continues through trial preparation, the trial itself, the sentencing phase,[46] and beyond.[47] If you cannot afford a lawyer, the government must provide one for you if: (1) you are being prosecuted in a federal court; or (2) you are charged with a felony in state court.[48] The state is not required to appoint a lawyer to represent you if 38. See Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 484–85 , 101 S. Ct. 1880, 1884–85, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378, 386 (1981) (holding that once the suspect asks for an attorney, interrogation cannot resume until counsel has been made available, or the accused himself initiates further conversations with the police). But see Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 437, 104 S. Ct. 3138, 3148–49, 82 L. Ed. 2d 317, 333 (1984) (holding that Miranda must be enforced strictly but only in those situations where "the concerns that powered the decision are present"). This has been interpreted by lower courts as allowing police to ask clarifying questions to suspects who have volunteered information after asserting their rights to remain silent and to counsel. See e.g., United States v. Rommy, 506 F.3d 108, 133 (2nd Cir. 2007), cert, den'd, 128 S. Ct. 1681, 170 L. Ed. 2d 358 (2008) (holding that "simple clarifying questions do not necessarily constitute interrogation").

---

39. See Davis v. United States, 512 U.S. 452, 462, 114 S. Ct. 2350, 2356–57, 129 L. Ed. 2d 362, 373 (1994) (holding that a suspect must be clear in his desire for counsel; it is not enough for the suspect to state, "Maybe I should talk to a lawyer.").

40. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 474, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1628, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 723 (1966).

41. See McNeil v. Wisconsin, 501 U.S. 171, 175, 111 S. Ct. 2204, 2207, 115 L. Ed. 2d 158, 166 (1991) ("The Sixth Amendment right … is offense specific. It cannot be invoked once for all future prosecutions, for it does not attach until a prosecution is commenced…."); Rothgery v. Gillespie County, 128 S. Ct. 2578, 2602, 171 L. Ed. 2d 366, 395 (2008) (stating that the 6th Amendment right to counsel "attaches only to those offenses for which the defendant has been formally charged").

42. U.S. Const. amend. VI ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right … to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense."). Note that the 6th Amendment does not apply to civil proceedings. For example, if you were to bring a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights claim against the state, you would not have 6th Amendment protections during that case.

43. The 6th Amendment also guarantees your right to a speedy trial. See Part D(1) of this Chapter for more information. Other rights under the 6th Amendment not covered in this Chapter include trial by jury and the right to cross-examine witnesses against you.

44. For information concerning your 5th Amendment right to counsel, see Part A(1) of this Chapter.

45. See Fellers v. United States, 540 U.S. 519, 523, 124 S. Ct. 1019, 1022, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1016, 1022 (2004) (holding that the right to counsel under the 6th Amendment "is triggered 'at or after the time that judicial proceedings have been initiated ... whether by way of formal charge, preliminary hearing, indictment, information, or arraignment.'" (quoting Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1977))).

46. Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 137, 88 S. Ct. 254, 258, 19 L. Ed. 2d 336, 342 (1967) (holding that the right to counsel extends to every stage of criminal proceedings where the substantive rights of the accused might be affected, including post-conviction sentencing and revocation of probation).

47. See JLM, Chapter 9 for information on the appeals process.

48. See Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S. Ct. 792, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799 (1963) (holding that the 6th Amendment should be interpreted to mean that defendants must be provided with counsel in federal courts, unless the right is waived, and that this right is extended to state court matters through the 14th Amendment).

you are facing a misdemeanor or less (even if imprisonment is a possible sentence upon conviction).[49] However, if the state does not appoint a lawyer, and you are convicted, you may not be imprisoned.[50]

Unlike your Fifth Amendment right to counsel, under the Sixth Amendment your right to counsel does not depend upon your request for a lawyer.[51] The state, including police investigators and prosecutors, has a duty to protect and to respect this right.[52] Officials may not deliberately elicit incriminating statements from you to use against you at your trial while you are unrepresented.[53] As explained in the next section, the Sixth Amendment has become especially important in cases where the police (or police informants) have "interrogated" or questioned defendants prior to trial.

This Sixth Amendment right applies in both federal and state court trials.[54] If you are facing state proceedings, that state may also have a similar provision in its state constitution, which may provide you with additional protection.

The state (which is defined to include the Department of Corrections and your prison) has an "affirmative obligation" to respect your right to counsel.[55] Some courts have held that this means the state may not take certain actions—such as transferring you to a distant prison, or curtailing your telephone access—which might make it significantly more difficult for you to consult with your attorney.[56] Your right to counsel, however, as with all constitutional rights, will be balanced against the state's legitimate interests, such as security or order.[57] See Part E(4) of this Chapter for more information on pretrial detainees' right of access to counsel.

2. The "Deliberately Elicited" Test

Under the Sixth Amendment, at trial, the state may not use incriminating remarks which were deliberately elicited from you after you were charged with a crime if: (1) the statements are about the crime

---

49. Argersinger v. Hamlin, 407 U.S. 25, 40, 92 S. Ct. 2006, 2014, 32 L. Ed. 2d 530, 540 (1972) (stating that imprisonment cannot be imposed without representation by counsel, even if the charge is a misdemeanor which results in a conviction). See also Alabama v. Shelton, 535 U.S. 654, 122 S. Ct. 1764, 152 L. Ed. 2d 888 (2002) (holding that defendant may not receive a suspended prison sentence which could be triggered by a subsequent violation of probation unless counsel is provided).

50. Scott v. Illinois, 440 U.S. 367, 374, 99 S. Ct. 1158, 1162, 59 L. Ed. 2d 383, 389 (1979) (holding that a defendant can be sentenced to imprisonment, but that he cannot actually be imprisoned unless he was represented by counsel).

51. See Carnley v. Cochran, 369 U.S. 506, 513, 82 S. Ct. 884, 889, 8 L. Ed. 2d 70, 76 (1962) (holding that "it is settled that where the assistance of counsel is a constitutional requisite, the right to be [appointed] counsel does not depend on a request.").

52. See Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 171, 106 S. Ct. 477, 484, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985) ("The Sixth Amendment also imposes on the State an affirmative obligation to respect and preserve the accused's choice to seek this assistance.").

53. See Fellers v. United States, 540 U.S. 519, 524, 124 S. Ct. 1019, 1023, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1016, 1023 (2004) (holding that evidence derived from a discussion that took place after the defendant's indictment was inadmissible because it was obtained "outside the presence of counsel, and in the absence of any waiver of petitioner's Sixth Amendment rights"); Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (holding that petitioner's 6th Amendment protections had been violated where evidence of his own incriminating words were used against him at his trial and agents had intentionally elicited those words after he had been indicted without his counsel present).

54. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S. Ct. 792, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799 (1963) (holding that the right to a counsel applies in state proceedings).

55. See Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 171, 106 S. Ct. 477, 484, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985) ("The Sixth Amendment also imposes on the State an affirmative obligation to respect and preserve the accused's choice to seek this assistance.").

56. See, e.g., Covino v. Vermont Dept. of Corr., 933 F.2d 128, 130 (2d Cir. 1991) (noting that a prison transfer making it difficult for the detainee to talk to his lawyer—due to the distance the lawyer would have to travel—might violate right to counsel); Tucker v. Randall, 948 F.2d 388, 390 (7th Cir. 1991) (noting that denying a pretrial detainee telephone access for four days, if no other contact with the attorney was allowed, would possibly violate the 6th Amendment); Cobb v. Aytch, 643 F.2d 946, 951, 957 (3d Cir. 1981) (finding that transferring detainees from Philadelphia jails to Pennsylvania facilities hundreds of miles away, when most detainees were represented by city public defenders, violated the detainees' right to counsel). See also Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 184 (2d Cir. 2001) (noting that courts, when determining whether a burden on the prisoners' right of access to the courts is unjustifiable, will "weigh[ ] the financial and time costs imposed on attorneys by travel to remote prisons")

57. See, e.g., Feeley v. Sampson, 570 F.2d 364, 373–74 (1st Cir. 1978) (finding that jail officials should be given discretion to balance detainee's legitimate need to communicate with attorneys against security concerns of unlimited phone calls, subject to judicial review to prevent unreasonable restrictions).

you are charged with;[58] and (2) you have not waived your right to counsel.[59] Exactly when the state has "deliberately elicited" incriminating statements can be confusing. The Sixth Amendment is not violated just because the state receives incriminating statements "by luck or happenstance."[60] Instead, the government has "deliberately elicited" statements whenever it intentionally creates a situation where it is likely that the defendant will make incriminating statements without the assistance of counsel.[61] In addition, the government is also considered to have violated the test when it knowingly takes advantage of a situation to interrogate the accused without counsel present.[62] Proof that the state "must have known" its agent was likely to receive incriminating statements is enough to find a Sixth Amendment violation.[63]

You may be able to better understand the "deliberately elicited" test by familiarizing yourself with two of the Supreme Court's Sixth Amendment cases. In Massiah v. United States,[64] the defendant (Massiah) and his co-defendant (Colson) were charged with drug crimes and then released on bail. Without Massiah's knowledge, Colson agreed to cooperate with the police. Colson allowed the police to put a radio transmitter under the front seat of his car so the police could listen to conversations taking place there. Colson then had a conversation in his car with Massiah while the police listened. During this conversation, Massiah made incriminating statements, which were used in his trial and led to his conviction.

The Supreme Court reversed Massiah's conviction, finding that federal agents had deliberately elicited these incriminating statements from Massiah after his Sixth Amendment right to counsel had attached. Even though the "interrogation" was not conducted in police custody, and despite the fact that Massiah was not aware he was being interrogated, the Supreme Court held the Sixth Amendment protection still applied. For the Sixth Amendment to have any force, the Supreme Court said, it must apply to "indirect and surreptitious [undercover] interrogations as well as those conducted in the jailhouse."[65]

United States v. Henry,[66] another Sixth Amendment case, shows how the state's use of paid informants to elicit incriminating statements can sometimes make those statements inadmissible. In Henry, the defendant was charged with armed robbery and placed in jail to await trial. An FBI agent contacted a paid informant, who was in the same cell block as Henry. The FBI agent told the informant to listen to what Henry said and report back any incriminating statements Henry made. By telling the informant not to question Henry, the FBI agent was trying to comply with the Sixth Amendment restrictions on eliciting incriminating statements. The paid informant talked to Henry in prison about the charged crimes.

The Supreme Court found that this arrangement violated the Sixth Amendment by interfering with Henry's right to counsel. The Court cited three reasons for its decision. First, the paid informant got his orders from the FBI, and he was paid only if he produced useful information. Thus, despite the agent's instruction not to question Henry, the agent must have known that the arrangement would likely lead to the

---

58. See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more information on this limitation.

59. See Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (finding that the 6th Amendment was violated when prosecutors relied on defendant's words that were "deliberately elicited'" from him after he had been indicted and in the absence of his counsel); see also Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 171, 106 S. Ct. 477, 484, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985) ("The Sixth Amendment also imposes on the State an affirmative obligation to respect and preserve the accused's choice to seek" the assistance of counsel); Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 415, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 1248, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424, 447 (1977) ("[T]he lawyer is the essential medium through which the demands and commitments of the sovereign are communicated to the [suspect]. If …we are seriously concerned about the individual's effective representation by counsel, the State cannot be permitted to dishonor its promise to this lawyer.") (Stevens, J., concurring).

60. Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 176, 106 S. Ct. 477, 487, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 496 (1985) (holding that defendant's right to counsel was violated when co-defendant, in cooperation with police, recorded incriminating statements made to him by defendant after indictment).

61. See United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 274, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2189, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 125 (1980).

62. See Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 176, 106 S. Ct. 477, 487, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 496 (1985) (stating that at the very least, the prosecutor and the police have a duty not to act in a manner aimed at getting around the protection created by the right to counsel).

63. See Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 176, 106 S. Ct. 477, 487, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 496 (1985) (finding a 6th Amendment violation when police knew that defendant would make statements to their agent that he had a constitutional right not to make before consulting counsel, even though police had told their informant not to interrogate the defendant).

64. Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246 (1964).

65. Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (quoting United States v. Massiah, 307 F.2d 62, 72–73 (2d Cir. 1962) (Hays, J., dissenting)).

66. United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1980).

informant trying to secure incriminating statements from Henry without counsel present.[67] Second, the informant pretended to be nothing more than a fellow inmate. Conversation in such a situation may elicit information which would not be revealed to known government agents. Henry could not have "knowingly and voluntarily" waived his Sixth Amendment rights, since he did not know the paid informant actually worked for the police.[68] Finally, the fact that Henry was in prison was important to the Court's decision.

Even if your confession is normally inadmissible under the Sixth Amendment because it was deliberately elicited, the state can admit that confession to impeach your testimony. In other words, if you give testimony at trial that differs from the informant's account of your conversations, the informant can testify afterwards that your testimony is unreliable.[69]

3. Offense Specific Limitation

The Sixth Amendment is "offense specific."[70] Offense specific means that the state may continue investigating you for other crimes with which you have not been charged and may use your statements against you. For example, imagine you are in jail waiting to be tried for a drug crime and the police suspect you of robbery (but you have not been charged with the robbery). The police could use any of the Massiah or Henry techniques to get information about the robbery, but not about the drug crime. Although the Sixth Amendment is offense specific, in some instances your Fifth Amendment Miranda rights could be implicated,[71] which is important to keep in mind when appealing your conviction.

4. Waiver of Your Right to Counsel

As with your Fifth Amendment right to counsel, your Sixth Amendment right to counsel can be waived. You must have waived your Sixth Amendment right knowingly and voluntarily.[72] The burden is on the prosecution to show that your waiver meets those conditions.[73] Importantly, "if police initiate interrogation after a defendant's assertion, at an arraignment or similar proceeding, of his right to counsel, any waiver of the defendant's right to counsel for that police-initiated interrogation is invalid."[74]

---

67. United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 270–71, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2186–87, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 122 (1980).

68. United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 273, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2188, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 124 (1980). For more information on waiver, see Section 4 of this Part.

69. Kansas v. Ventris, 129 S. Ct. 1841, 173 L. Ed. 2d 801 (2009).

70. See Texas v. Cobb, 532 U.S. 162, 174, 121 S. Ct. 1335, 1344, 149 L. Ed. 2d 321, 332 (2001) (holding that where a pretrial detainee had been indicted for one crime but had not yet been charged with a closely related crime, his "Sixth Amendment right to counsel did not bar police from interrogating" him regarding the related crime); McNeil v. Wisconsin, 501 U.S. 171, 175, 111 S. Ct. 2204, 2207, 115 L. Ed. 2d 158, 166 (1991) ("The Sixth Amendment right … is offense specific. It cannot be invoked once for all future prosecutions, for it does not attach until a prosecution is commenced…"); Rothgery v. Gillespie County, 128 S. Ct. 2578, 2602 171 L. Ed. 2d 366, 395 (2008) (stating that the 6th Amendment right to counsel "attaches only to those offenses for which the defendant has been formally charged"). Some states treat the question of crime relatedness slightly differently and depending on where you have been charged this may be to your advantage. See, e.g., People v. Bing, 76 N.Y.2d 331, 350–51, 558 N.E.2d 1011, 1022, 559 N.Y.S.2d 474, 485 (1990) ("[P]ermitting questioning on unrelated crimes violates neither the State Constitution nor … our prior right to counsel cases.").

71. Compare Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292, 299–300, 110 S. Ct. 2394, 2398–99, 110 L. Ed. 2d 243, 252–53 (1990) (holding that an undercover agent, while in jail posing as a fellow prisoner, may question a prisoner about a crime without giving a Miranda warning if the prisoner has not yet been charged with that crime), with Mathis v. United States, 391 U.S. 1, 4–5, 88 S. Ct. 1503, 1505, 20 L. Ed. 2d 381, 385 (1968) (holding that questioning of a prisoner by a person known to be an Internal Revenue Service official about tax violations, without the giving of a Miranda warning, violated the prisoner's 5th Amendment rights, when the prisoner was in prison for an entirely different offense). See Part A of this Chapter for more information on your 5th Amendment rights.

72. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 835–36, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 2541, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562, 581–82 (1974) (holding that waiver of the right to counsel must be made knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently). Note that while the waiver must also be made competently and intelligently, those criteria are generally satisfied if you are competent to stand trial. Compare Godinez v. Moran, 509 U.S. 389, 396–97, 113 S. Ct. 2680, 2685, 125 L. Ed. 2d 321, 330–31 (1993) (holding that if a person is competent to stand trial, he is also competent to waive the right to counsel or to plead guilty), with Indiana v. Edwards, 128 S. Ct. 2379, 2387–88, 171 L. Ed. 2d 345, 357 (2008) (holding that "the Constitution permits States to insist upon representation by counsel" for defendants who are competent enough to stand trial but "who suffer from severe mental illness to the point where they are not competent to conduct trial proceedings by themselves").

73. Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 404, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 1242, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424, 439 (1977) (noting that "it [is] incumbent upon the State" to prove the validity of a waiver).

74. Montejo v. Louisiana, 129 S. Ct. 2079, 2091, 173 L. Ed. 2d 955 (2009) ("What matters in [Sixth Amendment cases] is what happens when the defendant is approached for interrogation, and (if he consents) what happens during

C. Bail

Bail is the release from custody of a charged suspect who must appear before the court at later date. The suspect may be required to pay money or post bond in an amount set by the judge in order to make sure he appears in the future.[75] The judge is allowed to decide whether you will be released or held for trial; there is no constitutional right to bail. The only constitutional rights you have regarding bail are: (1) the court's discretion cannot be exercised arbitrarily (randomly) in making the determination whether to release you on bail or to detain you; and (2) excessive bail cannot be imposed because that is expressly prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.[76] However, despite the weak constitutional standards regarding bail, the federal government and many states have passed legislation protecting the rights of pretrial detainees to bail.

1. The Federal Bail Reform Act

The Federal Bail Reform Act describes the federal government's authority to detain or release prisoners before trial, appeals of a release or detention order, penalties for failure to appear and for offenses committed while on release, and pretrial services for detainees.[77] In United States v. Salerno, the Supreme Court considered a constitutional challenge to the Federal Bail Reform Act by a pretrial detainee.[78] The defendants in Salerno argued that the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution prohibited the detention of arrestees without bail; however, the Court held that the Act's authorization of pretrial detention on the basis of future danger did not violate due process and was not impermissible punishment before trial.[79] The Court found that as long as the provisions of the Act were not intended to punish dangerous individuals, preventing danger to the community was an adequate reason to justify detention before trial.[80] The rest of this Part deals with your rights under the Bail Reform Act.

(a) Timing of Bail Hearing

If you are a federal pretrial detainee, you are entitled to a detention hearing at your first appearance before a judge to determine whether you are entitled to receive bail. In setting your bail, the judge focuses on whether: (1) there is enough assurance that you will appear for trial; and (2) you will pose a significant threat to the safety of the community.[81] The default rule is that you will be released either on your own recognizance[82] or upon your payment of an amount of bail set by the judge.[83] If the judge does not believe that releasing you on those terms will satisfy the two factors, she may impose a number of conditions on your release.[84] If the judge finds that no condition or combination of conditions will satisfy the two factors, the judge must order detention before trial.[85]

It is important to note that the detention hearing can be postponed for five weekdays at your request, or for three days at the request of the government.[86] At this hearing, you have a right to be represented by counsel or to have counsel appointed if you cannot afford to pay for counsel. You have the right to testify, to the interrogation—not what happened at any preliminary hearing.").

---

75. Black's Law Dictionary 150 (8th ed. 2004).

76. "Excessive bail shall not be required ...." U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

77. Bail Reform Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3141–3156 (2006).

78. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 95 L. Ed. 2d 697 (1987).

79. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 748–54, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 2102–05, 95 L. Ed. 2d 697, 709–13 (1987).

80. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 746–47, 107 S. Ct. 2095, 2101, 95 L. Ed. 2d 697, 708–09 (1987).

81. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f) (2006).

82. A defendant is released on his "personal recognizance" when he is released after promising to appear for trial at a later date without being required to pay bail. Black's Law Dictionary 1299 (8th ed. 2004).

83. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(b) (2006).

84. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(c)(1) (2006). Some examples of conditions of release that a court may impose include: where you may live or travel; with whom you may associate; that you comply with a specified curfew; that you return to custody for specified hours following release for limited purposes such as employment or schooling; that you remain in the custody of a designated person who agrees to assume your supervision; that you maintain employment, or if unemployed, seek employment; that you maintain or start an educational program; that you avoid the alleged victim or any potential witnesses; that you regularly report to a designated law enforcement agency or other agency; that you not possess a firearm or other dangerous weapon; that you refrain from excessive use of alcohol or use of any non-prescription drug; that you undergo medical, psychological, or psychiatric treatment (including drug and alcohol treatment); or any other condition necessary to assure your appearance and the safety of any other person or the community. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(c)(1)(B) (2006).

85. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(e) (2006).

86. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f)(2)(B) (2006).

present witnesses, and to cross-examine witnesses that appear at the hearing.[87] Any ruling by the court that you are not entitled to be released prior to trial must be supported by "clear and convincing evidence" that no combination of conditions on your release will reasonably assure the safety of others and your appearance at trial.

A delay in the hearing will not defeat the government's power to seek your detention. The Supreme Court held that the government's failure to comply with the prompt hearing provision of the Act did not require the release of a person otherwise considered likely to flee or cause danger to others.[88] So, improper timing or delay of your detention hearing will not by itself require your release under the statute if you are considered a flight risk or a danger to other persons in the community.

(b) Denial of Bail

The text of Section 3142(f) indicates that, if you are a flight risk or threaten the safety of the community, you must be detained before trial. Most courts of appeal hold that only one of the two conditions needs to be satisfied in order to justify detainment before trial.[89] However, some circuits have held that a showing of dangerousness to the community, without more, is not enough for a judge to order pretrial detention.[90] Regardless of the circuit, if the court finds a risk of flight and wants to keep you detained, it must also find that there are no conditions that could reasonably assure your presence at trial.[91] The court, in making this determination, must look to the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, the weight of evidence against the defendant, the history and characteristics of the defendant, and the danger posed to the community by the defendant's release.[92]

If you are denied bail, the hearing may be reopened at any time before the trial if the judge finds there is information that was unknown at the time of the hearing and which is relevant to whether the two factors above (appearance at trial and safety of the community) can be met.[93] If a judge grants you bail and you cannot afford to pay it, you will be held in a detention facility until your trial date arrives. If you are found guilty, any time that you have already served will be deducted from your sentence.

The judge is prohibited from imposing a bail so high that you are unable to pay and are ultimately detained prior to trial.[94] However, this provision does not automatically require the release of a person who is unable to meet the bail requirement. If you move to reduce the amount of the initial bail, the judge will hold a detention hearing. However, the judge may still determine that without bail there are no conditions that will reasonably assure your presence for trial. In such a situation, the court may decide that the initial amount was necessary and reasonable.

(c) Review and Appeal of Bail Decision

Importantly, you can ask for a review of the hearing officer's decision regarding bail and you can also appeal the decision. If the original decision on bail was made by somebody other than the judge who has jurisdiction over the criminal case (such as a magistrate judge), you or the government may appeal the officer's decision to the judge who has jurisdiction over the case.[95] For example, if you are granted release

87. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f)(2)(B) (2006).

88. United States v. Montalvo-Murillo, 495 U.S. 711, 717, 110 S. Ct. 2072, 2077, 109 L. Ed. 2d 720, 729–30 (1990).

89. See United States v. King, 849 F.2d 485, 488 (11th Cir. 1988) (finding pretrial detention appropriate if defendant is a flight risk or a danger to the community); United States v. Ramirez, 843 F.2d 256, 257 (7th Cir. 1988) (per curiam) (same); United States v. Sazenski, 806 F.2d 846, 848 (8th Cir. 1986) (per curiam) (same); United States v. Coleman, 777 F.2d 888 (3d Cir. 1985) (holding that danger to the community is sufficient under the statute to justify detention).

90. United States v. Ploof, 851 F.2d 7, 11–12 (1st Cir. 1988) (holding that detention based on dangerousness is only proper if the case involves one of the circumstances in 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f)(1)); United States v. Friedman, 837 F.2d 48, 49 (2d Cir. 1988) (same). See also United States v. Sabhnani, 493 F.3d 63, 76 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that factors which make the defendant more likely to flee such as relative ease and family living in other countries may, combined with dangerousness, support preventative detention).

91. See United States v. Berrios-Berrios, 791 F.2d 246, 250–51 (2d Cir. 1986).

92. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(g) (2006); see United States v. Jackson, 823 F.2d 4, 6–7 (2d Cir. 1987) (affirming the pretrial detention of a defendant who faced the possibility of a severe sentence, where the crime charged involved narcotic drugs, and where the government had shown extensive criminal history, general lack of ties to the community, hidden assets, and use of false names).

93. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f) (2006).

94. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(c)(2) (2006)(2)(B).

95. 18 U.S.C. § 3145(a) (2006) (providing for review of a release order); 18 U.S.C. § 3145(b) (2006) (providing for review of a detention order).

but you think the court imposed too many conditions on your release, you could ask for the judge to amend the conditions imposed by the judicial officer.

After the order has been reviewed, both you and the government have the right to appeal the decision to a circuit court.[96] If you do appeal, the appellate circuit court will review both the lower court's finding of facts and its resulting decision to grant or deny bail under the "clearly erroneous" rule,[97] which means that the appellate court must have a "definite and firm conviction" that the lower court made a mistake.[98] This standard of review means that most bail decisions are not overturned on appeal, however it is an option you should consider if you feel that bail was unfairly denied and believe that you can show that you are not a danger to the community nor a flight risk.

2. New York's Bail Statute

In New York, the issue of whether you are eligible to be released on your own recognizance or on bail is governed by Articles 510 and 530 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law. If you were charged in a state other than New York, you should check the relevant state statutes, some of which have been provided as an appendix to this Chapter.

Under Section 510.10, at your initial appearance the court is required to issue a securing order that either releases you on your own recognizance, fixes bail, or commits you to the custody of the sheriff.[99] Section 510.20 provides you with the right to make an application for bail or recognizance, as opposed to commitment to the custody of the sheriff, and to present arguments and evidence in support of your application in court. According to the language of the statute, the application can be made at the time of the original securing order or any time afterward,[100] however, in practice, bail applications are confined to the post arrest arraignment or the arraignment on your indictment unless there is a subsequent change in the circumstances of your detention.

The decision on your application is not left entirely up to the discretion of the judge. If you were charged with an offense less than a felony, the court must order recognizance or bail.[101] If you are charged with a felony, the court may, in its discretion, order recognizance or bail (subject to some restrictions discussed below) or commit you to the custody of the sheriff.[102] Certain local criminal courts (city courts, town courts, and village courts) lack the authority to release you on recognizance or bail if you are charged with certain types of felonies (class A felonies) or if you have been convicted of two prior felonies.[103] No local criminal court may order recognizance or bail if you are charged with a felony until it has received a fingerprint report concerning your prior criminal record, and the district attorney has had an opportunity to be heard on the matter.[104] If a report on your past criminal behavior is unavailable, the district attorney may consent to recognizance or bail without it.[105]

Section 530.30 provides you with an opportunity to apply to a superior court to grant recognizance or bail in felony cases 'where certain local criminal courts have no authority to do so.[106] This section also provides an opportunity for the review of securing orders fixed by criminal courts if you contest that the

---

96. 18 U.S.C. § 3145(c) (2006).

97. See United States v. Berrios-Berrios, 791 F.2d 246, 250 (2d Cir. 1986) ("In reviewing a district court's order granting or denying bail, we apply the clearly erroneous rule to the court's predicate factual findings." (citing United States v. Matir, 782 F.2d 1141 (2d Cir. 1986))).

98. United States v. Berrios-Berrios, 791 F.2d 246, 250–51 (2d Cir. 1986) (explaining that in order to reverse a lower court's ruling when applying the clearly erroneous standard, the reviewing court must hold a "definite and firm conviction that a mistake had been committed" (quoting United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S. Ct. 525, 542, 92 L. Ed. 746, 766 (1948))).

99. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.10 (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

100. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.20 (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008); See, e.g., People ex rel. Rosenthal (Kolman) v. Wolfson, 48 N.Y.2d 230, 233, 397 N.E.2d 745, 746, 422 N.Y.S.2d 55, 56 (1979) (holding that when pertinent new evidence becomes available the trial court should reconsider their initial decision to grant or withhold bail).

101. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.20(1) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008). See also N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.40(3) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008) ("If the bail fixed is not posted, or is not approved after being posted, the court must order that the principal be committed to the custody of the sheriff.").

102. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.20(2) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

103. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.20(2)(a) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

104. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.20(2)(b)(i)–(ii) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

105. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.20(2)(b)(ii) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

106. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.30(1)(a) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

terms were unlawful or excessively severe.[107] Unlawful or severe, in this context, means that your application for recognizance or bail was denied by the local criminal court or that the court fixed an excessive amount of bail.[108] If you have been charged with a felony, the district attorney must have the opportunity to be heard and the superior court judge must be provided with a copy of your criminal record.[109] Note that under New York's Bail statute, you may appeal your bail to the superior court only once.[110]

If the denial of bail is not required by law, Section 510.30 provides the criteria to be considered by the court when determining the amount of bail to be imposed. Your application for recognizance or bail will be determined after the court has taken into account the following information:

(1) Your character, reputation, habits, and mental condition;
(2) Your employment and financial resources;
(3) Your family ties and length of residency in the community;
(4) Your criminal record;
(5) Your juvenile record;
(6) Your previous record with respect to court appearances and flight to avoid criminal prosecution;
(7) The weight of evidence against you in the pending criminal action; and
(8) The sentence that may be imposed upon conviction.[111]

You should note that under New York's statute, the courts are not allowed to consider your potential threat to the community based on future criminal conduct when considering your application for recognizance or bail. The only matter that the court may consider is whether any bail, or the amount fixed as bail, is necessary to ensure your future court appearance.[112] However, some case law suggests that the goal of assuring the safety of the community can indirectly be taken into consideration.[113] Moreover, as a practical matter, the above factors provide enough room for courts to detain defendants whom they find to be potentially dangerous.[114] Also, because there is no statutory requirement for the court to take the defendant's financial resources into account, a small amount of bail can sometimes be enough to ensure that you are detained until trial.

D. Your Right to a Speedy Trial

1. The Sixth Amendment: Constitutional Right to a Speedy Trial

Your right to a speedy trial is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and applies to trials in both federal and state courts.[115] You have a right to a speedy trial even if you are released on bail

---

107. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.30(1) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

108. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.30(1)(b)–(c) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

109. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.30(2) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

110. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 530.30(3) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

111. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.30(2)(a) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008).

112. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 510.30(2)(a) (McKinney 1995 & Supp. 2008); see Sardino v. State Comm'n on Judicial Conduct, 58 N.Y.2d 286, 289–90, 448 N.E.2d 83, 84, 461 N.Y.S.2d 229, 230 (1983) (finding disregard of due process when judge arbitrarily set bail without any regard to the statutory factors); People ex rel. Schweizer v. Welch, 40 A.D.2d 621, 622, 336 N.Y.S.2d 556, 557–58 (4th Dept. 1972) (noting that, when the setting of bail is discretionary, the safety of the community may not be properly considered as it "is not one of the listed criteria"); People ex rel. Bauer v. McGreevy, 555 N.Y.S.2d 581, 583, 147 Misc. 2d 213, 215–16 (Sup. Ct. Rensselaer County 1990) (holding that county court cannot deny bail application solely to protect the community; ensuring defendant's appearance in court is the only matter of legitimate concern).

113. See People v. Torres, 446 N.Y.S.2d 969, 972, 112 Misc. 2d 145, 149 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1981) (holding that the defendant's potential danger to the community cannot be considered in fixing the amount of bail, but may be relevant in court's threshold determination as to whether bail should or should not be set at all); People v. Mohammed, 171 Misc. 2d 130, 136, 653 N.Y.S.2d 492, 497–98 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 1996) (noting that there are several statutes aimed at remedying the abuse caused by the idea that the only reason for "bail is to ensure the defendant's return to court"); People v. Melville, 62 Misc. 2d 366, 373, 308 N.Y.S.2d 671, 677 (N.Y. Crim. Ct. N.Y. County 1970) (stating that bail may be denied because, among other things, he poses a threat to the community if released on bail).

114. See, e.g., People ex rel. Hunt v. Warden, Riker's Island Corr. Facility, 161 A.D.2d 475, 476, 555 N.Y.S.2d 742, 743 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding that nature and extent of more than 100 counts of sexual abuse and exploitation of young children, taken together with the criteria spelled out in the statue and "the defendant's general reputation and character" supported denial of bail).

115. U.S. Const. amend. VI; U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1; see Klopfer v. North Carolina, 386 U.S. 213, 223, 87 S. Ct. 988, 993, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1, 8 (1967) (holding that the 6th Amendment is enforceable in state as well as federal actions).

before trial.[116] Note, however, that this right does not apply until you have been formally charged or are arrested.[117] The remedy for the violation of the right to a speedy trial is the dismissal of the indictment.[118]

The courts have not defined a specific number of days after which your federal constitutional right to a speedy trial has been violated. Instead, the Supreme Court has created a balancing test for courts to use in speedy trial cases. The four factors to be considered in determining whether there has been a violation of the detainee's constitutional rights are: "[l]ength of delay, the reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant."[119] The Supreme Court held that unless there is some delay that is presumptively prejudicial—that is, a delay that appears to have damaged the defendant's case—the other three factors do not need to be considered.[120] Furthermore, the length of delay that will trigger an application of all four factors will depend on the particular circumstances of the case.[121] As a general guideline, note that the Supreme Court observed that delays approaching or exceeding one year usually trigger a full, four-part analysis.[122]

While the Supreme Court has ruled that "[a] showing of prejudice is required to establish a violation of the Sixth Amendment Speedy Trial Clause,"[123] the government's justification for the delay is also important. A deliberate attempt by the government to delay your trial may help establish your claim to a constitutional violation, but negligence or overcrowded courts will be weighed less heavily against the government.[124] In addition, failing to file a complaint to assert your right will make it difficult to prove that you were denied your constitutional right to a speedy trial.[125]

The federal government[126] and most state governments have enacted speedy trial statutes to guarantee this right. We discuss the federal and New York statutes below. While most speedy trial statutes are similar, if you are accused of a state crime outside of New York, you should locate and read the speedy trial statute of your particular state. See Appendix A of this Chapter for a listing of state speedy trial statutes and for an introduction to legal research, see Chapter 2 of the JLM.

2. The Federal Speedy Trial Act[127]

Hoping to implement a quicker procedure for trying cases in the federal courts and ensure that the right to a speedy trial would be respected, Congress passed the Speedy Trial Act. If you are charged with a federal crime, you have a statutory right to have your case tried within the time limits specified in the Act. The Act provides (1) that the indictment charging you with an offense must be filed within thirty days from the date on which you were arrested or served with a summons for the charges;[128] (2) that your trial must start 116. United States v. MacDonald, 456 U.S. 1, 8, 102 S. Ct. 1497, 1502, 71 L. Ed. 2d 696, 704 (1982) (stating that the speedy trial guarantee is designed in part to "reduce the lesser, but nevertheless substantial, impairment of liberty imposed on an accused while released on bail").

117. See United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 320, 92 S. Ct. 455, 463, 30 L. Ed. 2d 468, 479 (1971) ("[I]t is either a formal indictment or information or else the actual restraints imposed by arrest and holding to answer a criminal charge that engage the particular protections of the speedy trial provision…").

118. See Strunk v. United States, 412 U.S. 434, 440, 93 S. Ct. 2260, 2264, 37 L. Ed. 2d 56, 62 (1973) (holding that the only remedy available for such violations is reversing the convicting, vacating the sentence and dismissing the indictment).

119. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 116–17 (1972) (holding that courts must conduct a balancing test when considering speedy trial cases and listing some of the factors that courts should weigh).

120. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 116–17 (1972) ("Until there is some delay which is presumptively prejudicial, there is no necessity for inquiry into the other factors that go into the balance.").

121. See Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 531, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972) ("To take but one example, the delay that can be tolerated for an ordinary street crime is considerably less than for a serious, complex conspiracy charge.").

122. Doggett v. United States, 505 U.S. 647, 652, 112 S. Ct. 2686, 2691, 120 L. Ed. 2d 520, 528 n.1 (1992).

123. Reed v. Farley, 512 U.S. 339, 353, 114 S. Ct. 2291, 2299, 129 L. Ed. 2d 277, 290 (1994).

124. See Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 531, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972).

125. See Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 531–32, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192–93, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117–18 (1972).

126. Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3161–3174 (2008).

127. Speedy Trial Act of 1974, 18 U.S.C. §§ 3161–3174 (2008). The most important sections are § 3161 which deals with time limits, and § 3162 which specifies the sanctions imposed when the time limits are violated.

128. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(b) (2008). However, the section also provides that if you are charged with a felony in a district in which no grand jury has been in session during this thirty-day period, the period of time for filing of the indictment will be extended for an additional thirty days.

within seventy days of the filing of the indictment or from the date you first appeared in court, whichever date is later;[129] and (3) that your trial must not begin less than thirty days from when you first appear in court through counsel or expressly waive the right to have counsel.[130]

In case the government fails to indict you within the thirty-day time limit explained above, the charges against you that are contained in the complaint will be dismissed.[131] In case the prosecution fails to bring your case to trial within seventy days of filing an indictment,[132] the indictment will be dismissed on your motion.[133] If you fail to move for dismissal prior to trial or if you enter a plea of guilty or nolo contendere (no contest),[134] your right to have the charges dismissed under the statute will be waived.[135]

(a) Dismissal With or Without Prejudice

If there is a violation of the time limits set by the Speedy Trial Act, the Court will dismiss the charges either with or without prejudice. If the dismissal is "with prejudice," the government cannot reinstate the case. If the dismissal is "without prejudice," the government can file the same charges again. In determining whether to dismiss with or without prejudice, the court will consider: (1) the seriousness of the offense; (2) the facts and circumstances that led to its dismissal; and (3) the effect of re-prosecution on the administration of the Speedy Trial Act and the administration of justice.[136]

In balancing the considerations listed above, the court will often favor dismissal without prejudice. The Supreme Court has reversed the dismissal of a criminal prosecution with prejudice for violation of the Speedy Trial Act, as an abuse of discretion because the lower court failed to state the reasons for its conclusion that the government's conduct was careless.[137] The Court also stated that the lower court erred in not considering the lack of prejudice to the defendant from the brief delay and the fact that defendant's behavior in failing to appear for trial contributed to the delay. The Supreme Court held that the lower court's desire to send a message to the government—that unexcused delays will not be tolerated—is not enough to bar the reprosecution of the defendant by dismissing with prejudice.[138] Courts also tend to rule for dismissal without prejudice in cases where the offense charged is serious.[139]

---

129. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(1) (2008).

130. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(2) (2008).

131. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(1) (2008). See United States v. Cortinas, 785 F. Supp 357, 360–62 (E.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd mem., 999 F.2d 537 (2d Cir. 1993) (holding that a violation of the Speedy Trial Act requires dismissal only of charges alleged in the complaint; prosecution for other conduct arising out of the same criminal incident, even though it was known or reasonably should have been known at the time of the complaint, is not barred).

132. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(c)(1) (2008).

133. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(2) (2008).

134. A plea of no contest means that the defendant, "while not admitting guilt … will not dispute the charge. This plea is often preferable to a guilty plea, which can be used against the defendant in a later lawsuit." Black's Law Dictionary 1074 (8th ed. 2004).

135. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(2) (2008). See also United States v. Brown, 498 F.3d 523, 532 (6th Cir. 2007) (observing that the defendant hadn't asserted his right to a speedy trial before this appeal and stating that that fact "weighs heavily toward a conclusion that no Sixth Amendment violation occurred."), cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 674, 169 L. Ed. 2d 528 (2007); United States v. Morgan, 384 F.3d 439, 442 (7th Cir. 2004) (dismissing defendant's appeal based on speedy trial grounds as he did not file a pretrial motion on the issue); United States v. Jackson, 30 F.3d 572, 575 (5th Cir. 1994) (holding that defendant waived right to dismissal by conditionally pleading guilty to one count before moving for dismissal).

136. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(1) (2008). See United States v. Taylor, 487 U.S. 326, 336, 108 S. Ct. 2413, 2419, 101 L. Ed. 2d 297, 310 (1988) (holding that district courts must carefully consider the specified statutory factors as applied to the particular case and articulate clearly their effect in rendering its decision).

137. United States v. Taylor, 487 U.S. 326, 343, 108 S. Ct. 2413, 2423, 101 L. Ed. 2d 297, 314 (1988) (holding that the district court abused its discretion because it failed to factor in the seriousness of the crime charged and relied heavily on an unexplained characterization of the government's actions as "lackadaisical").

138. United States v. Taylor, 487 U.S. 326, 338–43, 108 S. Ct. 2413, 2420–23, 101 L. Ed. 2d 297, 311–15 (1988). See also New York v. Hill, 528 U.S. 110, 118, 120 S. Ct. 659, 666, 145 L. Ed. 2d 560, 569 (2000) (declining to affirm dismissal with prejudice and holding "objection to a specified delay may be waived" if not raised at trial).

139. See United States v. Abdush-Shakur, 465 F.3d 458, 464 (10th Cir. 2006) (holding that dismissal with prejudice is not called for when "the delay caused by the government is unintentional and the district court … share[s] in the blame for the delay"), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 1321, 167 L. Ed. 2d 130 (2007). The 8th Circuit has one of the most defendant friendly precedents on this topic. See, e.g., United States v. Duranseau, 26 F.3d 804, 809 (8th Cir. 1994) (dismissing of indictment without prejudice is not an abuse of discretion where delay resulted from inadvertent noncompliance with Act and not from desire to gain tactical advantage against defendant, and reprosecution would not prejudice defendant despite his claim that alibi witness had died). Compare United States v. Wilson, 11 F.3d 346, 353

(b) "Stop the Clock" Provisions

Upon a motion to dismiss the case, the defendant must prove that the indictment or trial was delayed beyond the time period allowed under the statute.[140] Once the defendant has shown that the government has violated the statutory time limits, the government may attempt to prove that the indictment or trial was still timely. The government will do so under subsection 3161(h)(3) of the Act,[141] which allows the tallying to stop in certain circumstances. There are many provisions in the statute ("stop the clock" provisions) that exclude certain periods of time in determining whether the indictment was filed in a timely or the trial was commenced on time.[142] No delay because of general congestion in court, lack of diligent preparation, or failure to obtain witnesses on the part of the prosecution may be excluded.[143] However, the wide variety of the provisions that "stop the clock" will generally allow a delay longer than the statutorily defined time period without violating your right to a speedy trial. A recent Supreme Court case has held that the prosecutor may not rely on the defendant's promise not to raise a speedy trial claim, when scheduling the trial.[144] In other words, even if you believe that you intentionally "opted out" of your speedy trial rights before the trial, you are not prevented from raising them during trial.[145] Importantly, the fact that there has been no violation of the federal Speedy Trial Act does not prevent the court from finding that you have been denied your Sixth Amendment right to a speedy trial.[146]

3. New York's Speedy Trial Statute

Your right to a speedy trial under New York law is governed by Sections 30.20 and 30.30 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law.[147] Although the New York Constitution does not expressly contain a speedy trial clause, you still have a state constitutional right to a speedy trial under the guarantee of due process.[148] When filing your claim that you have been denied a speedy trial, you should raise the constitutional provisions as well as the statutory ones in order to preserve your right to a speedy trial.

As for the state constitutional right to a speedy trial, the New York courts have articulated the factors to be balanced in determining whether your right has been violated. The factors to be considered in the test are: (1) the extent of the delay; (2) the reason for the delay; (3) the nature of the underlying charge; (4)

(2d Cir. 1993) (finding that lower court did not abuse its discretion in finding that unexcused delays in filing indictments did not justify dismissal of indictments with prejudice where narcotics charges were very serious and where defendants had consented to delays), and United States v. Wells, 893 F.2d 535, 538 (2d Cir. 1990) (finding that charge of impersonating federal officer was "serious offense" for purposes of determining whether dismissal should be without prejudice), with United States v. Clymer, 25 F.3d 824, 831–32 (9th Cir. 1994) (dismissing indictment with prejudice despite seriousness of drug charge where defendant was detained under cloud of pending indictment for 522 days, at least five months of which was not excludable).

140. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(2) (2008).

141. 18 U.S.C. § 3162(a)(2) (2008).

142. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(1)–(9) (2008). The following are some examples of the periods of delay that are included in this subsection: (1) any period of delay resulting from other proceedings concerning the defendant, including a delay resulting from any proceeding to determine the mental competency or physical capacity of the defendant, from trial with respect to other charges against the defendant, from any pretrial motion (from the filing of the motion through the conclusion of the hearing on the motion), from the removal of the case to another district, or from any delay reasonably attributable to any period, not to exceed thirty days, during which any proceeding concerning the defendant is actually under advisement by the court; (2) any period of delay during which the prosecution is deferred pursuant to written agreement with the defendant, for the purpose of allowing the defendant to demonstrate his good conduct; (3) any period of delay resulting from the absence or unavailability of the defendant or an essential witness.

143. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(8)(C) (2008).

144. Zedner v. United States, 547 U.S. 489, 509, 126 S. Ct. 1976, 1990, 164 L. Ed. 2d 749, 769 (2008).

145. Zedner v. United States, 547 U.S. 489, 501, 126 S. Ct. 1976, 1985, 164 L. Ed. 2d 749, 764 (2008) (holding that the "public interest cannot be served … if defendants may opt out of the Act").

146. 18 U.S.C. § 3173 (2008) (stating that "[n]o provision of [the Speedy Trial Act] shall be interpreted as a bar to any claim of denial of speedy trial as required by" the 6th Amendment).

147. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§ 30.20–30.30 (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2008).

148. N.Y. Const. art. I, § 6; People v. Singer, 44 N.Y.2d 241, 253, 376 N.E.2d 179, 186, 405 N.Y.S.2d 17, 25 (1978) (holding that unreasonable delay in prosecution violates the defendant's state constitutional right to due process of law and noting that "the State due process requirement of a prompt prosecution is broader than the right to a speedy trial guaranteed by statute (citation omitted) and the Sixth Amendment."). But see People v. Vernace, 96 N.Y.2d 886, 888, 756 N.E.2d 66, 68, 730 N.Y.S.2d 778, 780 (2001) (holding that good faith determinations to delay prosecution with cause, "will not deprive defendant of due process even though there may be some prejudice to defendant.").

whether there has been an extended period of pretrial incarceration; and (5) whether there is any indication that your defense has been impaired by the delay.[149]

Under the state speedy trial statute, the amount of time in which the state must bring you to trial depends on the offense with which you are charged. For each level of offense, there are two time periods. Which of the two time limits the state has violated will determine the remedy that is available to you for the violation.

Type of Offense	Short Period[150]	Long Period[151]
Felony	Ninety days	Six months
Misdemeanor punishable for more than three months	Thirty days	Ninety days
Misdemeanor punishable for less than three months	Fifteen days	Sixty days
Violation	Five days	Thirty days

If the government has violated the short period for the offense for which you are charged, you must be released from detention,[152] unless you are being held for another offense or have previously violated the terms of your release. [153] The short time period begins when you are committed to the custody of the sheriff.

If the government has failed to bring you to trial within the long period, the charges against you must be dismissed.[154] The long time period begins on the day following the commencement of the criminal action, which is the filing of the first accusation.[155] For both the short and long time periods, the elapsed time and the excludable time periods will be related back to the first day the time period began, even when new accusations have been filed to replace the original charges.[156]

Like the federal Speedy Trial Act, the New York statute also provides that certain periods of time before you are brought to trial are not included in determining whether your right to a speedy trial has been violated.[157] There are also statutory limitations on when the relief described above is available to you.[158] For example, no remedies are available if the state was ready for trial before the time period expired, but is now not ready due to an "exceptional fact or circumstance."[159] Additionally, the time limits do not apply if you are 149. People v. Taranovich, 37 N.Y.2d 442, 445, 335 N.E.2d 303, 306, 373 N.Y.S.2d 79, 82–83 (1975); People v. Vernace, 96 N.Y.2d 886, 887–88, 756 N.E.2d 66, 67, 730 N.Y.S.2d 778, 779 (2001).

150. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(2)(a)–(d) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009).

151. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(1)(a)–(d) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009).

152. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(2) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009). Note that even if release is required, the judge can require you to meet bail or impose other conditions on your release. The judge can also order your redetention if you violate those conditions. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2008). In practice, this may be known as a 30:30 release. For more information about the conditions which can be imposed on your pretrial release, see Part C(2) of this Chapter.

153. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(3)(c) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009).

154. In practice, this may be known as a 30:30 dismissal.

155. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009).

156. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(2) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009).

157. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(4) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009). These exceptions function the same way as the similar federal provisions discussed in Part D(2) of this Chapter. Some examples of "excludable time" under this statute include: (a) certain pretrial procedures; (b) continuances granted at the defendant's request or on his consent; (c) when the defendant cannot be found or has escaped from custody; (d) when the defendant is without counsel through no fault of the court; (e) under exceptional circumstances when the government needs more time to prepare. See, e.g., People v. Reed, 19 A.D.3d 312, 318, 798 N.Y.S.2d 47, 54 (1st Dept. 2005) (holding that the period of time caused by the prosecutor's adjournment could count toward the defendant's speedy trial claim where the defendant did not request or consent to that adjournment).

158. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(3) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2008).

159. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(3)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2008). For example, a court may decide that the state encountered an "exceptional circumstance" if evidence material to the state's case suddenly became unavailable, despite the district attorney's efforts to obtain the evidence, if it is reasonable to believe that the evidence will become available in a reasonable time. Evidence is material when it has "some logical connection with the facts of consequence or the issues." Black's Law Dictionary 598 (8th ed. 2004).

charged with criminally negligent homicide,[160] first[161] or second-degree[162] manslaughter, or first[163] or second-degree[164] murder.[165]

If you feel that you have been denied access to a speedy trial, you must raise this issue before the trial begins or before you before plead guilty.[166] The claim will not be preserved for appeal if not properly raised in the trial court.[167] Unlike statutory speedy trial claims, however, properly asserted constitutional speedy trial claims are not waived by a guilty plea or by making a plea bargain agreement.[168] Most speedy trial claims are raised in pretrial motions (such as a motion to dismiss) or state habeas corpus petitions.[169] If you are represented by counsel, confer with your attorney as to which procedure best fits your case.

E. Conditions of Pretrial Detention

While you are held in a prison or other detention facility prior to or during trial, you are a pretrial detainee. As a pretrial detainee, you have, at minimum, the same rights as a convicted prisoner.[170] Unlike a post trial prisoner, however, you have not been convicted of any crime—thus in some cases you may be entitled to a higher level of constitutional protection.

The leading case on the rights of pretrial detainees is Bell v. Wolfish.[171] Wolfish made clear that the most important difference between pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners is that pretrial detainees cannot be punished. Convicted prisoners often contest prison conditions on the basis that they violate the Eighth Amendment prohibition on "cruel and unusual punishment." Pretrial detainees cannot be punished at all because they have not been convicted. To punish a pretrial detainee who has been convicted of no crime would violate the Due Process Clauses of the U.S. Constitution.[172]

Generally, claims brought by prisoners or pretrial detainees about conditions of detention are brought under one of three constitutional amendments. Convicted prisoners are protected by the Eighth Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishment. Pretrial detainees in federal facilities are protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Pretrial detainees in state facilities are protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The protections of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments against poor detention conditions are otherwise equal. Pretrial detainees have at least the same rights under the Due Process Clause as convicted prisoners do under the Eighth Amendment; thus, as a pretrial detainee you may use cases which involve the Eighth Amendment, as long as you point out that your argument is based on one of the due process clauses.

The right not to be punished without due process of law is one of the constitutional rights that protect you while you are detained. Pretrial detainees are entitled to the same constitutional protections as

---

160. N.Y. Penal Law § 125.10 (McKinney 2009).

161. N.Y. Penal Law § 125.20 (McKinney 2009).

162. N.Y. Penal Law § 125.15 (McKinney 2009).

163. N.Y. Penal Law § 125.27 (McKinney 2009).

164. N.Y. Penal Law § 125.25 (McKinney 2009).

165. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 30.30(3)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp 2009).

166. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 170.30(2) (McKinney 2007); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 210.20(2) (McKinney 2007); People v. Cintron, 7 A.D.3d 827, 828, 776 N.Y.S.2d 919, 919 (3d Dept. 2004) (holding defendant's guilty plea waived appellate review of his statutory right to speedy trial).

167. See People v. Bancroft, 23 A.D.3d 850, 850–51, 803 N.Y.S.2d 824, 825–26 (3d Dept. 2005) (holding that the right to a speedy trial may be waived where a defendant fails to raise the claim in either a pretrial motion "or otherwise register an appropriate objection on this ground throughout the course of his prosecution").

168. See People v. Savage, 54 N.Y.2d 697, 698, 426 N.E.2d 468, 468, 442 N.Y.S.2d 974, 975 (1981) (noting that a guilty plea does not waive the constitutional speedy trial right); People v. Blakley, 34 N.Y.2d 311, 313, 313 N.E.2d 763, 764, 357 N.Y.S.2d 459, 460–61 (1974) (dismissing defendant's indictment because plea bargain should not have been made in exchange for withdrawal of claim of speedy trial violation); People v. Thorpe, 160 Misc. 2d 558, 559, 613 N.Y.S.2d 795, 796 (2d Dept. 1994) (holding that "a constitutional speedy trial claim is not waived by a guilty plea").

169. For more information on state habeas corpus petitions, see JLM, Chapter 20, "New York Habeas Corpus-New York, Florida and Texas". Note that the New York Court of Appeals has held that habeas corpus petitions asserting a denial of the defendant's right to speedy trial cannot be brought during a pending criminal proceeding. People ex rel. McDonald v. Warden, 34 N.Y.2d 554, 555, 310 N.E.2d 537, 537, 354 N.Y.S.2d 939, 939 (1974).

170. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 545, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1877, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 472 (1979) ("[P]retrial detainees, who have not been convicted of any crimes, retain at least those constitutional rights that we have held are enjoyed by convicted prisoners.").

171. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447 (1979).

172. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) ("[U]nder the Due Process Clause, a detainee may not be punished prior to an adjudication of guilt in accordance with due process of law.").

convicted prisoners.[173] Even if a condition of pretrial confinement cannot be shown to constitute punishment in violation of due process, it may still violate one of your other constitutional rights. If the conditions of your detention would violate the constitutional rights of a convicted inmate, they violate your rights as a pretrial detainee.

To find out what these rights are, you should consult the other chapters of the JLM, which explain the rights of convicted inmates. These rights include, among others, freedom of religion and speech under the First and Fourteenth Amendments, the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures under the Fourth Amendment, and the right under the Equal Protection Clause not to be discriminated against on the basis of race. A chapter which may be helpful is Chapter 15, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law." Immigrant or foreign pretrial detainees should also consult Chapter II of the JLM ICA Supplement.

While the law is unclear whether the Fourteenth and Fifth Amendments give pretrial detainees a higher level of constitutional protection than convicted prisoners, the Supreme Court has repeated that pretrial detainees are entitled to at least the same rights as those enjoyed by convicted prisoners.[174] Some courts have found that pretrial detainees may enjoy greater rights than convicted prisoners. However, most courts have found that the same standards apply to convicted and pretrial detainees alike. These cases are discussed in more detail below.

The rest of Part E focuses only on areas of prison life where there may be a difference between the rights of pretrial detainees and those of convicted prisoners. Section 1 deals with your right not to be punished. Section 2 discusses medical care, protection from violence, and food and housing. Section 3 examines your right not to be subjected to excessive force. Your right of access to counsel is covered in Section 4, and Section 5 examines your right to vote.

1. The Right Not to be Punished

(a) Punishment for Underlying Crime

The purpose of detaining you prior to or during trial is not to punish you, but to ensure your presence at trial.[175] Thus, under Bell v. Wolfish, while you are a pretrial detainee, you cannot be punished for the crime of which you are accused.[176] Under Wolfish, therefore, the central question is whether the conditions to which you are subject constitute punishment.[177]

(i) Intent to Punish

The most direct way to show that the conditions are punitive is to show that they were intended to punish you. For example, in a case involving a pretrial detainee who was confined in a restraint chair for eight hours after fighting with prison guards, the court held that it was for the jury to determine whether the guards confined the prisoner in the chair for the purpose of maintaining prison order and security or for the purpose of punishment. If the guards' intent was to maintain order, then their actions were constitutional; if their intent was to punish, then their actions violated the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.[178]

---

173. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 545, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1877, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 472 (1979) ("[P]retrial detainees, who have not been convicted of any crimes, retain at least those constitutional rights that we have held are enjoyed by convicted prisoners.").

174. See City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 611 (1983) (holding that the due process rights of a pretrial detainee "are at least as great as the Eighth Amendment protections available to a convicted prisoner.").

175. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 536, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 467 (1979).

176. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) ("[U]nder the Due Process Clause, a detainee may not be punished prior to an adjudication of guilt in accordance with due process of law."). You also cannot be treated in a way that is intended to promote the traditional aims of criminal punishment. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 539, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1874, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 469 n.20 (1979) ("Retribution and deterrence are not legitimate nonpunitive governmental objectives.").

177. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1872, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 466 (1979) ("In evaluating the constitutionality of conditions or restrictions of pretrial detention that implicate only the protection against the deprivation of liberty without due process of law, we think that the proper inquiry is whether those conditions amount to punishment of the detainee.").

178. Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 342, 346 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that while the pretrial detainee may have shown that the prison officials overreacted in their use of a restraint chair, he still failed to show that their intentions were punitive, i.e., "maliciously and sadistically to cause harm").

(ii) Not related to Nonpunitive Government Goals

It is often difficult to prove the intent behind a set of conditions imposed by a prison. Without proof of intent, the conditions will amount to punishment if you can show that they are not reasonably related to a legitimate, nonpunitive government goal. This involves a two-part inquiry: (1) is the goal of the conditions legitimate and nonpunitive; and (2) are the conditions an excessive way to achieve that goal.[179] Under this two-part test, it is difficult but not impossible to show that the conditions or restrictions of your pretrial detention amount to punishment.

In applying the first part of the test, the Wolfish court found that the maintenance of order and security in a detention facility is a legitimate nonpunitive government goal.[180] Jail officials will generally claim that whatever they did to you was for legitimate purposes of maintaining order and security, not for punishment, but a court may find the conditions impermissible despite these claims.[181] For example, if one prison official makes up a charge against you, and then other guards take measures that they legitimately believe to be non-punitive, you may be able to show that the officer who falsely accused you intended to punish you. If you can trace back the harmful treatment to any prison official who intended to punish you, you may be able to establish unconstitutional pretrial punishment.[182]

In examining whether the measures taken were excessive, the Wolfish court stated that courts should grant prison authorities "wide-ranging deference" in their judgments about what practices are needed to maintain order and security in a prison or detention facility.[183] This means that even if the prison's methods for maintaining order and security are unpleasant, the court is unlikely to substitute its judgment for that of the prison officials.[184] That doesn't mean, however, that conditions and restrictions are not violations when they are overly harsh.[185] For example, where a detainee was kept in isolation lockup for nine months for no apparent reason, the court held that on its face such treatment "smacks of punishment."[186] The court remanded the case to determine whether there was a reason to justify the lockup in the isolation wing.[187]

In another case, prisoners were chained and handcuffed for over twelve hours and deprived of access to toilets after a failed escape attempt. The court held that such restraints would violate the Fourteenth Amendment if the jury found that the restraints were not a reasonable method of preventing prisoners from

---

179. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873–74, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 468 (1979) (holding that without a showing of an expressed intent to punish, whether conditions or restrictions amount to punishment "generally will turn on whether an alternative purpose to which the restriction may rationally be connected is assignable for it, and whether it appears excessive in relation to the alternative purpose assigned to it.") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

180. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 540, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1874, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 469 (1979).

181. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 538–39, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1873–74, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 468–69 (1979) (the characterization by prison officials of a condition or restriction as "nonpunitive" does not make it so); see, e.g., Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 188 (2d Cir. 2001) (upholding the lower court's ruling that restraints that were characterized as nonpunitive by the city's corrections department caused so much pain to detainees that they had the same effect as punishment).

182. Surprenant v. Rivas, 424 F.3d 5, 16 (1st Cir. 2005) (holding that fabricating a serious charge, knowing that the lie would have serious negative consequences for a pretrial detainee, is an illegal manipulation of legitimate prison regulations and "can constitute arbitrary punishment by a correctional officer, even if the response by other (unwitting) prison officials is legitimate and non-punitive").

183. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 540, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1875, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 469 n. 23 (1979) ("In determining whether restrictions or conditions are reasonably related to the Government's interest in maintaining security and order … courts must heed our warning that such considerations are peculiarly within the province and professional expertise of corrections officials, and, in the absence of substantial evidence … that the officials have exaggerated their response …, courts should ordinarily defer to their expert judgment in such matters.") (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

184. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 542, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1876, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 470 n.25 (1979) ("Governmental action does not have to be the only alternative or even the best alternative for it to be reasonable, to say nothing of constitutional.").

185. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 539, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1874, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 469 n.20 (1979) ("[L]oading a detainee with chains and shackles and throwing him in a dungeon may ensure his presence at trial and preserve the security of the institution. But it would be difficult to conceive of a situation where conditions so harsh, … that could be accomplished in so many alternative and less harsh methods, would not support a conclusion that the purpose for which they were imposed was to punish.").

186. Covino v. Vt. Dept. of Corr., 933 F.2d 128, 130 (2d Cir. 1991).

187. Covino v. Vt. Dept. of Corr., 933 F.2d 128, 130 (2d Cir. 1991); s*ee also* United States v. Gotti, 755 F. Supp. 1159, 1164 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) (placing detainee in administrative detention because of the crime for which he has been charged rather than his actions while incarcerated constitutes punishment).

escaping again, or if "alternative and less harsh measures" could have been used.[188] Furthermore, "a severe curtailment" of pretrial detainees' out of cell time may be evidence of punitive intent and constitute punishment,[189] even when dealing with prisoners who "are determined to be prone to: escape; assault staff or other inmates … or likely to need protection from other inmates [sic]."[190]

The Wolfish case itself involved a wide range of prison practices, all of which the Court upheld as reasonably related to a legitimate need to maintain order and security in a detention facility. Double-bunking of pretrial detainees,[191] random shakedown searches of detainees' cells,[192] a "publishers-only" rule that prohibited detainees from receiving hardcover books unless they were mailed directly from the publisher,[193] and routine body cavity searches after contact visits[194] were all found to be reasonable security measures that did not violate the due process rights of pretrial detainees. This shows how difficult it may be to convince a court that the measures taken by the prison officials were meant to be punitive in violation of your constitutional rights.

(b) Disciplinary Measures for Infractions of Prison Rules

Courts have found that you can be disciplined if you break the prison rules while you are a pretrial detainee or if officials have reason to believe that you need to be restrained for the safety and order of the detention facility. In other words, you can be punished for breaking prison rules as long as you are not being punished for the underlying crime that led to your arrest in the first place.[195] Unfortunately, there is little clear guidance as to what distinguishes "discipline" from "punishment."[196] What is important to understand is that when you break prison rules, you can be subjected to additional restraints on your liberty, including being placed in administrative detention or isolation,[197] having privileges removed,[198] and being held in handcuffs or other restraining devices.[199]

---

188. Putman v. Gerloff, 639 F.2d 415, 420 (8th Cir. 1981).

189. Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1208 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that pretrial detainees must be give adequate time out of their cells to exercise and observe their religion).

190. Cal. Code Regs. Tit. 15, § 1053.

191. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 542, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1875, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 470 (1979) (stating that there is no "'one man, one cell' principle lurking in the Due Process Clause …").

192. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 556–57, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1883–84, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 480 (1979) (finding that the searches did not violate the 4th Amendment and did not constitute punishment under the Due Process Clause).

193. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 550–52, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1879–81, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 475–77 (1979) (finding no 1st Amendment violation, or punishment in violation of the Due Process Clause).

194. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 560–61, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1885, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 482 (1979) (finding no 4th Amendment violation, or punishment in violation of the Due Process Clause). But see U.S. v. Calhoun, 2002 U.S. Dist. Lexis 23277 (D. Kan. Nov. 13, 2002) (stating that strip searches of people arrested on non-violent misdemeanors must be justified by a reasonable suspicion outside the confinement context).

195. See Rapier v. Harris, 172 F.3d 999, 1003 (7th Cir. 1999) (noting that though a pretrial detainee cannot be punished for underlying crime of which he stands accused, he "can be punished for misconduct that occurs while he is awaiting trial."); Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) ("[P]retrial detainees are [not] free to violate jail rules with impunity."); Collazo-Leon v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 51 F.3d 315, 318 (1st Cir. 1995) (holding that reasonable punishment may be imposed to enforce prison requirements, but not to sanction the unproven criminal allegations).

196. See Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 343 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that eight hours in restraint chair after disruptive behavior would be unconstitutional if it were found to have been imposed as punishment although defendant in this case was put in the restraint chair "to stop his disruptive and maintain prison order and security."); McFadden v. Solfaro, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5765, at *31 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (finding the disciplinary segregation of pretrial detainee for breaking prison regulations acceptable because it was not punitive and instead was "tied to the legitimate objective of maintaining order and impressing the need for discipline").

197. See Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) (ruling that disciplinary segregation of pretrial detainee for breaking prison rules does not violate the Constitution, as long as a due process hearing is provided); McFadden v. Solfaro, 1998 U.S. Dist. Lexis 5765 at *31 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (upholding constitutionality of pretrial detainee's administrative segregation for acting against prison regulations by "committing ... unhygienic acts" and threatening guards).

198. See McFadden v. Solfaro, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5765, at *32 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (upholding loss of privileges including commissary, walkman, phone).

199. See Fuentes v. Wagner, 206 F.3d 335, 343 (3rd Cir. 2000) (upholding prison authorities' right to restrain prisoner in chair for eight hours after prisoner's disruptive behavior since restraint was not used as a punishment). On the other hand, prison officials are not permitted to go too far with their disciplinary actions and when they do, you may have a valid constitutional claim under the Fourteenth Amendment. See Danley v. Allen, 540 F.3d 1298, 1309 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding that when jailers continue using "substantial force against a prisoner who has clearly stopped resisting …

Pretrial detainees, unlike convicted prisoners, are usually entitled to procedural protections when punishments or additional restraints are imposed upon them.[200] When officials decide to subject you to additional restraints ("punishment") for your violation of prison rules, therefore, they must follow certain procedures consistent with due process of law. Some courts have required that pretrial detainees be given due process before the additional restrictions are imposed,[201] while others have allowed the restrictions first, so long as they are followed up in a manner that accords with due process.[202] The due process to which you are entitled when restrained or punished for breaking prison rules is equivalent to that described in Wolff v. McDonnell,[203] which defines the due process rights of convicted prisoners at a prison disciplinary hearing.[204] You are entitled, for example, to be given written notice of the charges against you, to be given a hearing on the matter before an impartial officer, and to call witnesses and present evidence at that hearing.[205] State laws may give you even greater due process rights than are laid out in Wolff. For a more detailed discussion of what due process in prison disciplinary hearings entails, see JLM, Chapter 17, "Your Rights at Disciplinary Proceedings."

2. The Rights of Pretrial Detainees vs. The Rights of Convicted Prisoners: Medical Care, Protection from Violence, and Food and Housing

This Section discusses the state's affirmative obligation to provide for your basic needs while you are detained. It covers your rights to: (1) food and housing; (2) medical care; and (3) protection from assault. Some courts have referred to these rights as "conditions of confinement";[206] others have described them as "basic necessities"[207] or "basic human needs."[208] It remains unclear whether pretrial detainees have the right to higher standards than those provided by law to convicted prisoners.

(a) Introduction: Rights of Convicted Prisoners

Since pretrial detainees are entitled to at least the same standards of food and housing, medical care, and protection from assault as convicted prisoners, you should consult the relevant chapters of the JLM to find out more about the law in each of these areas. To learn more about your rights to medical care, see JLM, Chapter 22. See JLM, Chapter 23 for information on your right to be free from assault. This Section will not repeat the material laid out in those chapters, but will focus instead on the similarities and differences between the rights that pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners have to these basic necessities.

---

that use of force is excessive").

200. See Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 188 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that imposition of non-punitive restrictions which nonetheless were significant restraints on detainees' liberty required subsequent due process protections); Rapier v. Harris, 172 F.3d 999, 1004–05 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that pretrial detainees, unlike convicted prisoners, are entitled to procedural protection before the imposition of punishment for misconduct); Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that a due process hearing is required before imposing disciplinary segregation on a pretrial detainee). But see Wilson v. Blankenship, 163 F.3d 1284, 1295 (11th Cir. 1998) (finding temporary placement of pretrial detainee in isolation, without bedding, for causing a disturbance was permissible without a hearing). The rule that punishments must be "atypical and significant" to require due process protections applies only to convicted prisoners, not to pre-trial detainees. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995). If you are a convicted prisoner and want a more complete conversation on this topic, see JLM, Chapter 17.

201. See Rapier v. Harris, 172 F.3d 999, 1005 (7th Cir. 1999) (finding that "punishment can be imposed only after affording the detainee some sort of procedural protection"); Mitchell v. Dupnik, 75 F.3d 517, 524 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that "a pretrial detainee may not be punished without a due process hearing").

202. See Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 188 (2d Cir. 2001).

203. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1974).

204. Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 190 n.12 (2d Cir. 2001) (noting that although Wolff involved a convicted prisoner, the same standard applied to pretrial detainees); s*ee also* Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564–66, 570–71, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956, 959 (1974).

205. Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 190 (2d Cir. 2001); s*ee also* Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564–66, 570–71, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956, 959 (1974).

206. See, e.g., Wilson v. Williams, 83 F.3d 870, 875 (7th Cir. 1996).

207. See, e.g., Boswell v. Sherburne County, 849 F.2d 1117, 1121 n.4 (8th Cir. 1988) (describing circuit split on issue of whether pretrial detainees are entitled to greater rights than convicted prisoners with respect to "such basic necessities as food, living space, and medical care").

208. See, e.g., Hare v. City of Corinth, 135 F.3d 320, 324 (5th Cir. 1998).

(b) Greater Protection for Pretrial Detainees?

As noted, the Eighth Amendment does not apply to unconvicted pretrial detainees since pretrial detainees cannot be punished at all. That suggests that pretrial detainees might be entitled to better treatment than convicted prisoners. For instance, in a detainee medical care case, the Supreme Court stated that the "due process rights of a [pretrial detainee] are at least as great as the Eighth Amendment protections available to a convicted prisoner."[209] In an important case, the Supreme Court left open the possibility that even where a prison official's level of intent in treating the prisoner does not reach "deliberate indifference," the rights of a pretrial detainee may nevertheless be violated.[210]

However, Revere, like most of the cases that suggested the possibility of a higher standard for pretrial detainees than for convicted prisoners, did not explain what the difference in standard would be, and did not make a ruling on that basis. Instead it found that on the facts of the case, the state had fulfilled its obligation by taking the injured detainee to the hospital promptly after he was apprehended by the police.[211] In general, when making a claim that your constitutional rights have been violated as a pretrial detainee, you will argue that the same treatment would also violate the rights of a convicted prisoner and acknowledge that you may have even greater rights by citing to the cases in the footnotes of this paragraph.

(c) Retreat from Greater Protection

The Supreme Court has not ruled on whether pretrial detainees are entitled to a higher standard of care than convicted prisoners with respect to food and housing, medical treatment, and protection from assault.[212] Some lower courts have considered the possibility that there is a higher standard for pretrial detainees than for convicted prisoners.[213] However, most of the federal circuits have abandoned trying to describe this difference[214] and have found instead that the same standards for conditions of confinement, medical care, and protection from violence apply to convicted prisoners and pretrial detainees alike.[215]

---

209. City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244–45, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 611 (1983).

210. City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 243–44, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 610–11 (1983).

211. City of Revere v. Mass. Gen. Hosp., 463 U.S. 239, 244, 103 S. Ct. 2979, 2983, 77 L. Ed. 2d 605, 611 (1983). See also Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1188 n.9 (9th Cir. 2002) (noting without deciding that "it is quite possible … that the protections provided pretrial detainees by the Fourteenth Amendment in some instances exceed those provided convicted prisoners by the Eighth Amendment"); Davidson v. Cannon, 474 U.S. 344, 348, 106 S. Ct. 668, 670, 88 L. Ed. 2d 677, 683 (1986) ("The guarantee of due process has never been understood to mean that the State must guarantee due care on the part of its officials."); Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 333, 106 S. Ct. 662, 666, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1986) (holding that police officer's alleged negligence in leaving pillow on stairs and causing detainee to trip and injure himself does not constitute a deprivation of due process, and noting that even if the Court established that a state official's actions might constitute a claim of action under tort law, there is not necessarily a deprivation of due process). The question remaining after Davidson is whether there is some standard of care for pretrial detainees that falls between the negligence standard (which is not sufficient to establish a due process violation) and the deliberate indifference standard applicable to convicted prisoners (the minimum standard of care to which pretrial detainees entitled).

212. See Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 335, 106 S. Ct. 662, 667, 88 L. Ed. 2d 672, 670 n.3 (1986) (declining to decide whether a standard between negligence and intentional conduct violates the due process clause); see also City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 389, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 427 (1989) (declining again to decide whether something less than deliberate indifference may suffice to establish a deprivation in violation of due process of a pretrial detainee's right to medical care).

213. For a description of a split in the circuit courts on the issue of whether the Fourteenth Amendment standard applicable to pretrial detainees differs from the 8th Amendment standard applicable to convicted prisoners, see Boswell v. Sherburne County, 849 F.2d 1117, 1121 n.4 (8th Cir. 1988) (declining to resolve which standard applies to medical care claims brought by pretrial detainees in the 8th Circuit). See also Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1188 n.9 (9th Cir. 2002) (noting without deciding that "it is quite possible … that the protections provided pretrial detainees by the Fourteenth Amendment in some instances exceed those provided convicted prisoners by the Eighth Amendment"). The general consensus among courts on this point currently appears to be that, as regards medical care, pretrial detainees have no greater rights than convicted prisoners.

214. See, e.g., Davis v. Hall, 992 F.2d 151, 152–53 (8th Cir. 1993) (holding that, due to the lack of a different, established standard for reviewing pretrial detainees' claims, the court will "apply the deliberate indifference standard.").

215. See Caiozzo v. Koreman, 581 F.3d 63 , 69–72 (2d Cir. 2009), Ford v. County of Grand Traverse, 535 F.3d 483, 494–95 (6th Cir. 2008) (holding that pretrial detainees are guaranteed the "right to adequate medical treatment by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and are subject to the same deliberate-indifference standard of care" as are convicted prisoners); Liscio v. Warren, 901 F.2d 274 (2d Cir. 1990) (finding deliberate indifference standard

3. The Right Not to be Subjected to Excessive Force

An official who uses excessive physical force against you while you are a pretrial detainee violates your due process rights under the Fifth or Fourteenth Amendment. Convicted prisoners also have a right to be free from excessive physical force. That right, however, stems from the Eighth Amendment prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment.

There are two components to a claim that an official acted with excessive physical force: (1) a subjective component, which looks at the official's state of mind; and (2) an objective component, which looks at the amount of harm caused. See JLM, Chapters 24 and 25, "Your Right to be Free from Assault," and "Your Right to be Free from Illegal Searches," for a more detailed discussion of excessive force claims.

The different circuits of the federal courts disagree about how, if at all, the excessive force standard differs for pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners. Most but not all courts have held that when it comes to excessive force claims, pretrial detainees do have greater rights than convicted prisoners.[216]

Three separate constitutional provisions govern claims of excessive force. The Supreme Court discussed these provisions in Graham v. Connor[217] and held that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment protects pretrial detainees from excessive force.[218] The Court held that the Fourteenth Amendment, at a minimum, prohibits "force that amounts to punishment"[219] but left open the possibility that the Fourth Amendment protections of arrestees may extend additional protection to pretrial detainees.[220] applicable to pretrial detainee's claim of failure to provide medical care for drug and alcohol withdrawal). Often courts retain the language that pretrial detainees are at least afforded the 8th Amendment protections granted to convicted prisoners but other courts, in coming to this conclusion, have stated that when it comes to "basic necessities" or "basic human needs" the same standard applies to convicted prisoners and pretrial detainees. See, e.g., Hamm v. DeKalb County, 774 F.2d 1567, 1574 (11th Cir. 1985) (holding that with regard to providing pretrial detainees with such basic necessities as food, living space, and medical care, the minimum standard required by the due process clause is the same as that required by the 8th Amendment for convicted prisoners); s*ee also* Hare v. City of Corinth, 74 F.3d 633 (5th Cir. 1996) (applying the deliberate indifference standard to a section 1983 claim involving the failure of state officials to prevent a suicide by a pretrial detainee, and holding that when a state official's acts or omissions are at issue, the deliberate indifference standard applies to claims involving the basic human needs of pretrial detainees); Jordan v. Doe, 38 F.3d 1559, 1565 (11th Cir. 1994) (applying 8th Amendment standard to unsanitary prison conditions, and citing Hamm for the proposition that when it comes to providing pretrial detainees with "such basic necessities as food, living space, and medical care, the minimum standard allowed by the due process clause is the same as that allowed by the eight amendment for convicted persons.").

---

216. See, e.g., Lanman v. Hinson, 529 F.3d 673, 680 (6th Cir. 2008) (noting that the circuit has held that different standards apply, depending on if the plaintiff is a free citizen, a convicted prisoner, or something in between); Wilson v. Williams, 83 F.3d 870, 875 (7th Cir. 1996) ("[P]retrial detainees must arguably be afforded a higher standard than that provided by the 8th Amendment. ... This is so at least for claims that deal with things other than conditions of confinement."). But see, Bozeman v. Orum, 422 F.3d 1265, 1271 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding that in excessive force claims, "it makes no difference whether [the plaintiff] was a pretrial detainee or a convicted prisoner because the applicable standard is the same, so decisional law involving prison inmates applies equally to cases involving ... pretrial detainees") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

217. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443 (1989). The 4th Amendment protects against excessive force "in the course of an arrest, investigatory stop, or other 'seizure' of a free citizen." Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1871, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443, 454 (1989) (noting that some factors for determining whether excessive force under the 4th Amendment include "the severity of the crime at issue, whether the suspect poses an immediate threat to the safety of the officers or others, and whether he is actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight") (citing Tenn. v. Garner, 471 U.S. 1, 8–9, 105 S. Ct. 1694, 1700, 85 L. Ed. 2d 1, 8 (1985)). The 8th Amendment protects convicted prisoners from excessive force that amounts to "cruel and unusual punishment." U.S. Const. amend. VIII; Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 394, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1871, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443, 454 (1989). See also Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 320–21, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1084, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1986) (noting that the circumstances in which the force is used must be taken into account and holding that force will only be found excessive if it was inflicted "maliciously and sadistically.")

218. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1871, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443, 455 n.10 (1989).

219. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1871, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443, 455 n.10 (1989).

220. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 1871, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443, 455 n.10 (1989) (noting that the 4th Amendment standard might continue to apply beyond "the point at which arrest ends and pretrial detention begins."). The lower federal courts are not all in agreement on this issue. Compare, Phelps v. Coy, 286 F.3d 295, 300 (6th Cir. 2002) (holding that an arrestee is still entitled to 4th Amendment protection while in the custody of the arresting officers after the act of arrest) with Riley v. Dorton, 115 F.3d 1159, 1164 (4th Cir. 1997) (en banc) (holding that the 4th amendment "does not extend to the alleged mistreatment of arrestees or pretrial detainees in custody").

Once you have decided to bring an excessive force claim under the Fourteenth Amendment, it is still unclear exactly what standard of review the court will use. In the absence of a ruling by the Supreme Court, some lower courts have created an intermediate standard of review for excessive force claims of pretrial detainees. Under the intermediate standard that some courts have created, pretrial detainees who claim excessive force in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause need to show that the person who exerted the force either had "actual intent" to use excessive force or was at least "reckless" in doing so.[221] This is standard is, therefore more difficult to meet than the "unreasonableness" standard of the Fourth Amendment.

Other courts have held that the excessive force standard for pretrial detainees is the same as that for convicted prisoners under the Eighth Amendment, so that pretrial detainees must show that a person acted not only with intent, but "inflicted unnecessary and wanton pain and suffering."[222] As a general rule, if you are a pretrial detainee and you can show that you were treated with excessive force for the purpose of punishment, then you can establish that your due process rights have been violated under the Graham standard. For example, where a pretrial detainee in the process of trying to escape was assaulted by an officer who caught him in the act, the court held that if the officer's purpose was to punish, injure, or discipline the inmate, then it constituted impermissible punishment.[223]

4. Right of Access to Counsel

Under the Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, you have a right to counsel in the preparation of your defense. (See Part B of this Chapter for a broader discussion of your right to counsel.) This right includes the right to meet with and communicate with your attorney while you are detained awaiting trial. If the conditions of your detention interfere with your ability to meet with your attorney, or to communicate in private to discuss your case, then they may violate your Sixth Amendment right to counsel. [224]

Pretrial detainees may have a greater right of access to counsel than convicted prisoners. The Supreme Court recognized in Maine v. Moulton that the right to counsel is especially important during the period before trial.[225] Moulton did not involve a pretrial detainee,[226] but it has been cited by some lower courts as 221. See Wilson v. Williams, 83 F.3d 870, 875–76 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding that officials exert excessive force on a pretrial detainee if they act with "actual intent" to violate the detainee's rights or with "reckless disregard" of those rights; the court explained that the standard to be applied to excessive force claims of pretrial detainees is neither wholly subjective nor wholly objective). See also Telfair v. Gilberg, 868 F. Supp. 1396, 1410–12 (S.D. Ga. 1994) (holding unique intermediate standard applies to excessive force claims of pretrial detainees, requiring a lesser showing of intent than the 8th Amendment standard applied to convicted prisoners), aff'd, 87 F.3d 1330 (11th Cir. 1996). Under Telfair, a pretrial detainee does not need to establish malicious intent to make out a claim of excessive force, but rather, needs only to establish either that the official acted with an intent to punish the detainee (which would be impermissible under the Fourteenth Amendment) or, in the absence of such intent, that the official's actions were not reasonably related to a legitimate government objective. C.f. Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1188 n.9 (9th Cir. 2002) (stating that the court has not decided "whether there are instances in which pretrial detainees, as opposed to convicted prisoners, may establish a constitutional violation without meeting the [8th Amendment] deliberate indifference standard").

---

222. See, e.g., Bozeman v. Orum, 422 F.3d 1265, 1271 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding that in excessive force claims, "it makes no difference whether [the plaintiff] was a pretrial detainee or a convicted prisoner") (citation omitted); Taylor v. McDuffie, 155 F.3d 479, 483–84 (4th Cir. 1998) (applying the 8th Amendment subjective test to excessive force claim brought by detainee due to officers' alleged actions shortly after arrest). Remember that under the 8th Amendment test, in some circumstances (such as when maintaining order in a detention facility) courts will require that the state official have acted "maliciously and sadistically" for there to be a violation of your rights. Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 320–21, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1986).

223. Putman v. Gerloff, 639 F.2d 415, 420–21 (8th Cir. 1981). See also Collazo-Leon v. United States Bureau of Prisons, 51 F.3d 315, 318 (1st Cir. 1995) (noting that an otherwise legitimate restriction or condition may be viewed as punitive and therefore be in violation of the detainees constitutional rights if the condition is "excessive in light of the seriousness of the violation").

224. You should also look at the chapters of the JLM describing the rights of access to counsel of convicted prisoners, because these rights certainly apply to pretrial detainees as well. See JLM, Chapter 3, "Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court," on your right of access to a law library, and Chapter 18, "Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World," on your right to correspond with and visit with your attorney.

225. Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 170, 106 S. Ct. 477, 484, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985) ("[T]o deprive a person of counsel during the period prior to trial may be more damaging than denial of counsel during the trial itself.").

226. Maine v. Moulton involved a defendant who was released on bail pending trial, during which time the police arranged for his co-defendant to wiretap a conversation between the two. During that conversation, the defendant made incriminating statements. The Court deemed these statements inadmissible, on the basis that the police used the wiretap to evade the defendant's right not to be interrogated without an attorney present. Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S.

support for the proposition that courts should be especially protective of your right to counsel while you are a pretrial detainee.[227] As one court stated, when pretrial detainees are kept from effectively communicating with their attorneys, "the ultimate fairness of their eventual trial can be compromised."[228]

Prison regulations that make it difficult for your attorney to meet and communicate with you, may violate with your Sixth Amendment right to counsel. Regulations and conditions found to interfere with this right include limits on detainees' telephone conversations with attorneys,[229] inadequate privacy during such telephone discussions,[230] inadequate or inadequately private space in which to meet with your attorneys,[231] and prison regulations that create substantial and unpredictable delays when your attorneys come to meet with you.[232] A transfer from one detention facility to another may also violate your right to counsel, if the transfer is to a place so distant that your access to counsel is impaired.[233]

The Sixth Amendment right to counsel guarantees you the right to have access to your attorney, it may also provide you with a right to access a law library.[234] In particular, prisoners who wish to proceed pro-se under Faretta v. California[235] may have a right to a law library, however, not every circuit recognizes that right.[236] At least one court has held that inadequate access to a law library during pretrial detention can worsen the infringement on your Sixth Amendment right to counsel where the rules already make it hard for you to communicate with your lawyer.[237] For a more detailed discussion of this right, see Chapter 3 of the JLM, "Your Right to Learn the Law and Go To Court."

As explained in JLM, Chapter 3, under Lewis v. Casey, if you claim that your right of access to the courts has been interfered with, you must show that the denial of this right has caused "actual injury" to your case. But, in Benjamin v. Fraser, the Second Circuit distinguished the right of access to the courts from the right to counsel for pre-trial detainees. If you assert that there were barriers to your accessing counsel, in violation of the Sixth Amendment, then you do not need to show actual injury.[238]

159, 180, 106 S. Ct. 477, 489, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 498–99 (1985).

227. See, e.g., Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 185 (2d Cir. 2001).

228. Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051 (8th Cir. 1989).

229. Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051–52 (8th Cir. 1989) (noting that, if proven, restrictions on access to counsel were "inadequately justified" where detainees were effectively permitted one attempt at a 20-minute phone call with attorneys during office hours every other week).

230. Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051–53 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding inadequate privacy where phones were brought to a noisy public space and conversations could be overheard by guards and other prisoners).

231. See, e.g., Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 187–88 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that detention facility must provide attorneys with an adequate number of visitation rooms in which to meet with their clients prior to and during trial, and these rooms must provide adequate privacy).

232. Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 179 (finding a 6th Amendment violation where attorneys "routinely face[d] unpredictable, substantial delays in meeting with clients" from 45 minutes to two hours, that were caused by a combination of factors, including a limited number of counsel rooms, a rule requiring that prisoners not be moved to counsel rooms without escorts, and a rule prohibiting prisoners from being brought to counsel rooms during prisoner counts).

233. See Covino v. Vt. Dept. of Corr., 933 F.2d 128 (2d Cir. 1991) (per curiam); s*ee also* Cobb v. Aytch, 643 F.2d 946, 960 (3d Cir. 1981) (affirming injunctive relief limiting transfers of detainees to distant facilities on the basis that these substantially interfere with detainees' right to counsel).

234. Walton v. Toney, 44 Fed. Appx. 49, 51 (8th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) ("To prevail on an access-to-courts claim, an inmate must … demonstrate that the alleged shortcomings in the library or legal assistance program hindered his efforts to pursue a legal claim") (internal quotation and citation omitted). But see United States v. Wilson, 690 F.2d 1267, 1271–72 (9th Cir. 1982) (asserting that where a defendant chooses not to represent himself and where adequate legal assistance is provided, no constitutional right to access a law library exists).

235. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562 (1974)

236. Compare Taylor v. List, 880 F.2d 1040, 1047 (9th Cir. 1989) ("the Sixth Amendment right to self-representation … includes a right of access to law books, witnesses, and other tools necessary to prepare a defense." (citing Milton v. Morris, 767 F.2d 1443, 1446 (9th Cir. 1985)) with U.S. v. Cooper, 375 F.3d 1041, 1051–52 (10th Cir. 2004) ("[P]retrial detainees are not entitled to law library usage if other available means of access to court exist. … When a prisoner voluntarily, knowingly and intelligently waives his right to counsel in a criminal proceeding, he is not entitled to access to a law library.") (citations omitted).

237. Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1053 (8th Cir. 1989) (holding that in a case where jail rules already violated detainee's right to counsel by making it hard for detainees to communicate with their lawyers, the fact that detainees were only allowed to use law library for two hours a week and library was inadequate for most legal research made violation of detainees' rights worse).

238. Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 185 (2d Cir. 2001).

5. Voting Rights

Even though you are a pretrial detainee, you still have the right to vote.[239] Disenfranchisement, or denial of the right to vote, violates your rights under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. However, the case law concerning by what methods you may vote is somewhat confusing.

In McDonald v. Board of Election Commissioners the Supreme Court affirmed a district court's ruling that a law excluding unsentenced inmates who could not get out on bail from obtaining absentee ballots did not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the Constitution.[240] The Court reasoned that, although the pretrial detainees were denied the right to vote by absentee ballot, there had been no showing that the state had failed to provide other access to the polls for pretrial detainees.[241]

In reversing a dismissal of a class action lawsuit brought on behalf of pretrial detainees in Goosby v. Osser,[242] the Supreme Court noted that: (1) a state statute prohibited pretrial detainees from voting by absentee ballot, coupled with; (2) allegations that election officials had denied pretrial detainees' requests to vote in person or by proxy at public polling places, at special prison polling places, or by any other means, presented a different case than McDonald v. Board of Election Comm'rs.

Finally, in O'Brien v. Skinner, a similar fact pattern came before the Court. State officials refused to allow pretrial detainees who were being detained in their home counties to vote by absentee ballot. The New York Court of Appeals (the highest court in the State) had held that no alternative way of voting had to be provided to the plaintiffs.[243] Since the state law allowed non-incarcerated persons who were unable to be physically present on election day to vote, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the statute discriminated against pretrial detainees in an arbitrary manner in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment's Equal Protection Clause.[244]

Thus, as a pretrial detainee you have the right to vote. You do not have an absolute right to vote by absentee ballot. However, if state officials deny you the opportunity to vote by absentee ballot, they must provide you an alternative way to cast your ballot.

F. Conclusion

As a pretrial detainee, you have constitutional and statutory rights that are protected under national and state laws. It is important to remember that you have not been convicted of a crime, and you are innocent until proven guilty. You have rights concerning body searches, visitation, medical treatment, voting, speedy trial, bail, assault, and self-incrimination. Most importantly, you have the right to an attorney and should request one as soon as you are detained or taken into custody. If you are a state prisoner, read the cases and laws of your state to learn about your specific rights.

---

239. See, e.g., Murphree v. Winter, 589 F. Supp. 374, 380 (S.D. Miss. 1984) (holding that a state statute that denies pretrial detainees the right to vote must be interpreted to allow pretrial detainees to vote, or it becomes unconstitutional).

240. McDonald v. Board of Elections Comm'rs, 394 U.S. 802, 89 S. Ct. 1404, 22 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1969).

241. McDonald v. Board of Elections Comm'rs, 394 U.S. 802, 809, 89 S. Ct. 1404, 1408–09, 22 L. Ed. 2d 739, 745–46, n.6 (1969) ("[T]he record is barren of any indication that the State might not, for instance, possibly furnish the jails with special polling booths or facilities on election day, or provide guarded transportation to the polls themselves for certain inmates, or entertain motions for temporary reductions in bail to allow some inmates to get to the polls on their own."). Therefore, the Court said, "it is thus not the right to vote that is at stake here but a claimed right to receive absentee ballots." McDonald v. Board of Elections Comm'rs, 394 U.S. 802, 807, 89 S. Ct. 1404, 1408, 22 L. Ed. 2d 739, 745 (1969).

242. Goosby v. Osser, 409 U.S. 512, 521–22, 93 S. Ct. 854, 860–61, 35 L. Ed. 2d 36, 44 (1973).

243. O'Brien v. Skinner, 414 U.S. 524, 533, 94 S. Ct. 740, 745, 38 L. Ed. 2d 702, 709 n.1 (1974) (Marshall, J., concurring) ("The [New York] Court of Appeals stated: 'We reject out of hand any scheme which would commit respondents to a policy of transporting such detainees to public polling places; would assign them the responsibility of providing special voting facilities under such conditions [or] would threaten like hazards embraced by such schema.'") (internal citations omitted).

244. O'Brien v. Skinner, 414 U.S. 524, 530, 94 S. Ct. 740, 743, 38 L. Ed. 2d 702, 707 (1974).

APPENDIX A: STATE SPEEDY TRIAL STATUTES

This list covers state speedy trial provisions, either in statutes or court rules. If no statute is listed for a state that state likely has a constitutional speedy trial guarantee.

Alabama
None

Alaska
Alaska R. Crim. Proc. 45 (2006-2007).

Arizona
Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 13–114 (2001 & Supp. 2008).

Arkansas
Ark. R. Crim. Proc. §§ 27–30 (2009).

California
Cal. Penal Code §§ 1381-82 (West 2000 & Supp. 2009).

Colorado
Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 18-1-405 (West 2004 & Supp. 2009).

Connecticut
Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 54-82(m) (West 2009).

Delaware
None

District of Columbia
D.C. Code Ann. § 23-1322 (LexisNexis 2001 & Supp. 2009).

Florida
Fla. R. Crim. P. Ann. 3.191 (West 2007 & Supp. 2009).

Georgia
Ga. Code Ann. § 17-7-170 (2008 & Supp. 2009).

Hawaii
Haw. R. Penal Proc. Ann. 48(b) (Michie 2009).

Idaho
Idaho Code § 19-3501 (Michie 2004 & 2008).

Illinois
725 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/103-5 (2006 & Supp. 2009).

Indiana
Ind. R. Crim. P. 4 (2009).

Iowa
Iowa R. Crim. P. 2.33 (2002 Supp. & 2009).

Kansas
Kan. Crim. Proc. Code Ann. § 22-3402 (2007).

Kentucky
Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 500.110 (Michie 2008).

Louisiana
La. Code Crim. Proc. Ann. art. 701 (West 2004 & Supp. 2009).

Maine
Maine R. Crim. P. 48(b) (2009).

Maryland
Md. Crim. Proc. Code Ann. § 6-103 (Michie 2008).

Massachusetts
Mass. R. Crim. P. 36 (2009-2010).

Michigan
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 768.1 (West 2000 & Supp. 2009).

Minnesota
None

Mississippi
Miss. Code Ann. § 99-17-1 (2007 & Supp. 2008).

Missouri
Mo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 545.780 (Vernon 2002 & 2009).

Montana
None

Nebraska
Neb. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 29-1207 (2008).

Nevada
Nev. Rev. Stat. § 178.556 (Michie 2006 & Supp. 2007).

New Hampshire
N.H. Super. Ct. R. App. 1 (2004).

New Jersey
None

New Mexico
District Courts: N.M. Dist. Ct. R. Crim. Proc. 5-604 (2004).
Magistrate Courts: N.M. Magistrate Ct. R.Cr.P. 6-506 (2004).
Metropolitan Courts: N.M. Metro Ct. R.Cr.P. 7-506 (2004).

New York[245]
N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§ 30.10-30 (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2009).

North Carolina
N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 15-10 (LexisNexis 2007).

North Dakota
N.D. Cent. Code Ann. § 29-19-02 (LexisNexis 2006 & Supp. 2009).

Ohio
Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 2945.71 (Baldwin 2006 & Supp. 2008).

Oklahoma
Okla. Stat. tit. 22, § 812.1 (West 2003 & Supp. 2009).

Oregon
Or. Rev. Stat. § 135.747 (2007).

Pennsylvania
Pa. R. Crim. Proc. 600 (2009).

Rhode Island
R.I. Gen. Laws § 12-13-7 (2002 & Supp. 2008).

South Carolina
None

South Dakota
S.D. Codified Laws § 23A-44-5.1 (2004 & Supp. 2009).

Tennessee
Tenn. Code Ann. § 40-14-101 (Lexis 2006 & Supp. 2008).

Texas
Tex. Code Crim. Proc. art. 32A (Vernon 2006 & Supp. 2008).

Utah
Utah Code Ann. § 77-1-6 (Lexis 2008 & Supp. 2009).

Vermont
Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 13, § 7553b (1998 & Supp. 2008).

Virginia
Va. Code Ann. § 19.2-243 (Lexis 2008 & Supp. 2009).

Washington
Super. Ct. Crim. R. 3.3 (2004).

West Virginia
W. Va. Code Ann. § 62-3-21 (Michie 2005 & Supp. 2009).

Wisconsin
Wis. Stat. Ann. § 971.10 (West 2007 & Supp. 2009).

Wyoming
Wyo. R. Crim. Proc. 48 (Lexis 2009).

245. See Part D(3) of this Chapter for in-depth information about New York's statute.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Chapter 35: Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER 35

GETTING OUT EARLY: CONDITIONAL AND EARLY RELEASE*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains the different ways you can be released from prison before serving your maximum (full) sentence. Part B of this Chapter discusses New York State law, which only applies to state prisoners in New York State. If you are a state prisoner in another state, look at your state's appropriate statutes and regulations. Part C discusses federal law, which applies to federal prisoners imprisoned for federal crimes.

B. New York State

There are four main ways that you can be released from state prison in New York before serving your full or maximum sentence: parole, conditional release, early release, and presumptive release. This Part of the Chapter will provide you with information about the last three categories: Section 3 explains conditional release, Section 4 discusses early release, and Section 5 discusses presumptive release. This Chapter does not, however, discuss parole. If you are looking for information about parole, see JLM, Chapter 32.

To determine if you are eligible for these release programs, you first need to figure out which type of sentence you are serving and how much good-time credit you have earned, if any. Sections 1 and 2 will help you make this determination: Section 1 explains the different types of sentences in New York and how they relate to conditional, early, and presumptive release; Section 2 explains good-time credit.

There are other ways you can be released from state prison before serving your full sentence, including clemency and compassionate release. Clemency and compassionate release are harder to obtain than conditional, early, and presumptive release. If pursuing these options interests you, see Section 6, which explains clemency, with a focus on battered women, and Section 7, which discusses compassionate release.

C. Sentencing Structure in New York

1. Definite, Determinate, and Indeterminate Sentences

There are three kinds of sentences in New York: (1) definite sentences, (2) determinate sentences, and (3) indeterminate sentences. Knowing which kind of sentence you have is important because it will affect your eligibility for good-time credit, early release, conditional release, and presumptive release.

A definite sentence is the type of sentence given to someone who is convicted of a misdemeanor or violation.[1] A definite sentence is fixed. For example, if you were convicted of a violation and you received a sentence of ten days, then your sentence is a definite sentence.[2] A definite sentence is served in a county or regional jail, unless you also received an additional sentence that was either determinate or indeterminate.[3]

Persons convicted of most violent felonies,[4] drug felonies,[5] and felony sex offenses,[6] must reveive a determinate sentence. Like a definite sentence, a determinate sentence's term is fixed. For example, if you were convicted of a violent felony and received a two-year sentence, your sentence is determinate. But,

---

* This Chapter was revised by Holly Chen, based in part on previous versions by Natasha Korgaonkar, Joe McFadden, Margo Eakin, Emily O'Connor, and Bartram S. Brown. Special thanks to Professor Philip Genty and Steve Statsinger for their comments.

1. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.15 (McKinney 2004).

2. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.15 (McKinney 2004). For example, a Class A misdemeanor has a maximum definite sentence of one year, and a Class B misdemeanor has a maximum definite sentence of three months.

3. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.20(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

4. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.02(2)(a)–(c) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007); N.Y. Penal Law § 70.04(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007). However, starting September 1, 2009, if you are convicted of a Class B or Class C violent felony offense, your sentence must be indeterminate. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.02(2)(a), 70.04(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

5. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.70(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

6. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.80(3) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

unlike a definite sentence, the shortest determinate sentence is one and a half years,[7] while a definite sentence cannot exceed one year. You usually serve a determinate sentence in state prison.[8]

An indeterminate sentence is the type of sentence given to someone convicted of a felony not requiring a determinate sentence.[9] An indeterminate sentence is not a fixed period of time. Instead, an indeterminate sentence is a range of time that includes (1) a minimum term, and (2) a maximum term. For example, a sentence of "five to ten years" is an indeterminate sentence for which the minimum term is five years and the maximum term is ten years. The minimum term must be at least one year. The maximum term in an indeterminate sentence must be at least three years, although it can be as much as life imprisonment.[10] If you have an indeterminate sentence, and there are no reductions to your sentence and you are not paroled, then you must serve the maximum term. An indeterminate sentence is generally served in a state prison.[11]

As mentioned above, it is important to determine what type of sentence or sentences you are serving because the rules for when and how you can become eligible for release are different for each of the three types of sentences. Although the rest of this Part will discuss these release programs in more detail, here is a brief overview of good-time credit, conditional, early, and presumptive release.

2. Good-Time credit

A good-time credit is a credit that you can earn in prison for good behavior.[12] If you are serving a definite sentence, and you earn good-time credit, you can use this credit to shorten your sentence. You cannot, however, use it to obtain conditional release.

On the other hand, if you are serving a determinate or indeterminate sentence, and you earn good-time credit, you can use this credit to obtain conditional release. Note, however, that if you are serving an indeterminate sentence with a maximum term of life imprisonment or an intermittent sentence (a sentence only requiring that you be in jail on certain days of the week or at certain hours of the day), you are ineligible for good-time credit.[13] Part B(2) of this Chapter discusses good-time credit.

3. Conditional Release

Conditional release is a way that you can be released from prison before you serve your full or maximum sentence. Your rights and responsibilities while on conditional release will be very similar to those of someone on parole. If you get out on conditional release, you will sign the same agreement signed by parolees. You will have to follow rules set by the parole or probation department, or you will risk losing your conditional release. For more information, see JLM, Chapter 32, "Parole."

Although New York State law uses the same word to refer to conditional release from a definite sentence and conditional release from determinate and indeterminate sentences, they are not actually the same thing. Conditional release is discussed in Part B(3) of this Chapter.

4. Early Release and Presumptive Release

Early release and presumptive release are other ways you can be released from prison before serving a full sentence. Early release is discussed in Part B(4) of this Chapter. Presumptive release is available to non-violent prisoners who are serving one or more indeterminate sentences, have not committed any serious disciplinary violations, and have not filed or continued frivolous (not serious) legal claims. Presumptive release functions like parole and conditional release. But, unlike these programs, it allows you to leave prison without appearing before the parole board. Presumptive release is discussed in Part B(5) of this Chapter.

---

7. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.02(3)(d) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
8. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
9. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.00(1) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
10. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.00(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
11. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
12. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 804(1), 803(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2007).
13. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2007); N.Y. Penal Law § 85.00(3) (McKinney 2004); see also Ferrara v. Jackson, 99 A.D.2d 545, 546, 471 N.Y.S.2d 629, 630 (2d Dept. 1984) (holding that individuals serving intermittent sentences in accordance with Article 85 of the New York Penal Law are ineligible for good behavior allowances pursuant to § 804 of the New York Correction Law).

D. Good-Time Credit

1. How to Earn Good-Time Credit

You can earn good-time credit for "good behavior and efficient and willing performance of duties" assigned to you in prison, or for "progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program."[14] On the other hand, you can lose good time for "bad behavior, violation of institutional rules or failure to perform properly" any duties or programs assigned to you in prison.[15] Keep in mind: though the statute only refers to "assigned" programs, if you fail to complete a "recommended" program, officials may withhold good time.[16]

Prison officials do not have to give you good-time credits, and it is not something you can demand as a right.[17] But, if officials think your behavior in prison is acceptable, they will probably grant you good time.

You can earn good-time credit only while you are in prison and not while you are on parole, conditional release, or supervised release. In most jurisdictions, prisons do not have to, and will not, accept credits that you earned from a different state prison or a federal prison.[18]

Depending on the type of sentence you are serving, you can use good-time credit to shorten your sentence, earn unconditional early release, or, in the case of determinate and indeterminate sentences, earn conditional release.

(a) Good-Time Credit in Definite Sentences

If you are serving a definite sentence and earn good-time credit, prison officials will use the credit to shorten your sentence and determine if and when you are eligible for unconditional early release. The process by which prison officials decide whether to grant you credit depends on the type of facility where you are imprisoned. If you are serving your definite sentence in a county or regional jail, the sheriff, warden, or other person in charge of the facility will decide whether to give you good-time credit.[19] If you are serving your definite sentence in a state prison, the prison's Time Allowance Committee ("TAC") will recommend to the superintendent the amount of good-time credit it thinks you should receive.[20] The prison superintendent will review the TAC's recommendation and may add comments to it. He will then forward the recommendation to the Commissioner of Correctional Services, who will make the final decision.[21]

(b) Good-Time Credit in Determinate and Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving a determinate or indeterminate sentence and you earn good-time credit, prison officials will use the credit to decide if you are eligible for conditional release. Unlike definite sentences, if you are serving a determinate or indeterminate sentence, you cannot use good-time credit to shorten your sentence or earn unconditional early release.

Four months before you would be entitled to conditional release, if you were to receive the maximum good-time credit allowed, the TAC will review your entire file to determine whether you should in fact receive the maximum good-time credit.[22] In deciding whether to grant the maximum good-time credit, the committee will look for good behavior, efficient and willing performance of assigned duties, and progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program, in light of (1) your attitude, (2) your capacity, and (3) the

---

14. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 803(1), 804(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2007).
15. N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 803(1), 804(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2007).
16. See Ferry v. Goord, 268 A.D.2d 720, 721, 704 N.Y.S.2d 315, 316 (3d Dept. 2000) (finding good-time credit withheld where prisoner refused to enroll in recommended sex offender counseling); Burke v. Goord, 273 A.D.2d 575, 575, 710 N.Y.S.2d 136, 137 (3d Dept. 2000) (same); Lamberty v. Schriver, 277 A.D.2d 527, 528, 715 N.Y.S.2d 510, 511 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that the fact that treatment program was "recommended" instead of "assigned" did not prevent time allowance committee from withholding good-time credit).
17. See Bradley v. Ward, 81 Misc. 2d 713, 716, 366 N.Y.S.2d 841, 844 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1975) (finding no statutory right to good behavior time under N.Y. Correct. Law §§ 803(4), 804(3)); N.Y. Correct Law §§ 803(4), 804(3) (McKinney 2003).
18. See Thomas v. Brewer, 923 F.2d 1361, 1368 (9th Cir. 1991) (refusing to give credit toward reduction in federal sentence for time spent in state prison); Holtzinger v. Estelle, 488 F.2d 517, 518 (5th Cir. 1974) (holding that based on Texas statutes, Texas prisoner was not entitled to good-time credit earned for time spent in California).
19. N.Y. Correct. Law § 804(3) (McKinney 2003).
20. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.2 (2007).
21. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 262.1(b) (2007).
22. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.3(a) (2007).

efforts you made within your capacity.[23] Although the committee will review your entire file, it is not required to interview you at this stage.[24]

After it reviews your file, the TAC will either: (1) recommend to the superintendent that you receive the maximum good-time credit allowance, or (2) delay making a recommendation because it believes that there might be a sufficient reason not to grant you the maximum good-time credit allowance.

If the TAC decides that there is sufficient reason not to grant you the maximum good-time credit allowance, a time allowance hearing will be held.[25] You will be notified at least forty-eight hours before the hearing.[26] After you receive formal notice, you will be given the opportunity to raise any factual matter that you believe the TAC should consider in making its decision. You will also be given the opportunity to have the matter investigated. At the hearing, the TAC will reconsider your entire file and consider any factual matter you or your designated assistant brought to its attention. It can also hear witnesses at its discretion.[27] After the hearing, the TAC will make its recommendation to the superintendent.[28]

The superintendent will review the committee's recommendation, add any comments he or she has, and then forward the report to the Commissioner.[29] The Commissioner can (1) accept the recommendation, (2) change the amount of time granted, or (3) send the report back to the committee for reevaluation.[30] Once the Commissioner decides, you will receive a copy of the determination.[31]

If the Commissioner does not grant the maximum amount of good-time credit, you can file suit in state court under Article 78. For more information about bringing an action in court, you should read JLM, Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Provisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," and JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

If you decide to pursue a claim in federal court because you believe you unlawfully lost good-time credits, you must read JLM, Chapter 14, which discusses the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). If you do not follow the requirements in the PLRA, you may lose your good-time credit, become unable to receive presumptive release (see Part B(5) of this Chapter), or lose your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee at the time you file your claim.

2. How Much Good-Time Credit You Can Earn

The amount of good-time credit you can earn is based on statutes, which vary widely across state jurisdictions. In New York State, the amount of good time you can earn depends on your type of sentence.

(a) Good-Time Credit for Definite Sentences

If you are serving a definite sentence, the most good-time credit that you can earn is equal to one-third of the length of your sentence. If you are serving consecutive definite sentences (one after the other), you can earn one-third of the total of the terms.[32]

(b) Good-Time Credit for a Single Determinate or Indeterminate Sentence

If you are serving a single determinate or indeterminate sentence, you can receive good-time credit, as long as your maximum term is not life imprisonment.[33] If you are serving a determinate sentence, the most good-time credit that you can earn is one-seventh of your sentence.[34] For example, if you are serving a

23. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 260.3(b)(1)–(3) (2007).

24. TAC is required to interview you if you have had a recommended loss of good behavior time from a prior superintendent's hearing. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.3(b) (2007).

25. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.4(a) (2007). This hearing will not be held if the only good time you lost was from a superintendent's disciplinary hearing, since you already appeared before the committee to respond to this recommendation as required by § 261.3(b). See also People ex rel. Moore v. Jones, 77 A.D.2d 679, 679, 430 N.Y.S.2d 16, 18 (3d Dept. 1980) (holding a hearing is not required if the only time lost was from superintendent hearing).

26. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.4(b) (2007).

27. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.4(f) (2001).

28. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 262.1(a) (2001).

29. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 262.1(b) (2001).

30. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 262.1(c) (2001).

31. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 262.1(d) (2001).

32. N.Y. Correct. Law § 804(2) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

33. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

34. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(c) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

determinate sentence of twenty-one years, the most good-time credit that you can earn is three years (one-seventh of twenty-one).

If you are serving an indeterminate sentence, the most good-time credit you can earn is one-third of your maximum sentence.[35] For example, if you are serving an indeterminate sentence of fifteen to thirty years, the most good-time credit that you can earn is ten years (one-third of thirty years).

The calculation is more complicated if you are serving more than one sentence, as shown below.

(c) Good-Time Credit for Concurrent Determinate Sentences

If you are serving more than one determinate sentence concurrently (at the same time), the most good-time credit that you can earn is one-seventh of the determinate sentence that ends last.[36] For example, if you are serving one determinate sentence of seven years and another of fourteen years, the most good-time credit you can receive is two years—one-seventh of the longer sentence. If you received the maximum credit of two years, you would be entitled to conditional release after serving twelve years of your sentence (because, at that point, your two-year credit would be equal to the amount of time you had left to serve).

(d) Good-Time Credit for Consecutive Determinate Sentences

If you are serving more than one determinate sentence consecutively (one after the other), the maximum good-time credit that you can earn is one-seventh of the combined sentences.[37] For example, if you are serving a seven-year sentence and a fourteen-year sentence consecutively, you can earn three years of good-time credit (one-seventh of twenty-one, the total of your two sentences). If you received the maximum credit, you would be entitled to conditional release after eighteen years (the total time of your sentences minus the maximum credit).

(e) Good-Time Credit for Concurrent Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving more than one indeterminate sentence concurrently (at the same time), the most good-time credit that you can earn is one-third of the total term of the latest ending indeterminate sentence.[38] For example, if you are serving a sentence of one to three years and another sentence of three to six years, you can earn up to two years of good-time credit—one-third of the longest maximum sentence of six years. If you received the maximum credit, you would be entitled to conditional release after four years (the longest maximum sentence minus the maximum credit).

(f) Good-Time Credit for Consecutive Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving more than one indeterminate sentence consecutively (one after the other), the most good time you can earn is one-third of the combined maximum terms.[39] For example, if you are serving two consecutive indeterminate sentences, one sentence for one to three years and another for three to six years, you could earn up to three years of good-time credit—one-third of the total maximum sentence of nine years (one-third of three plus six years). If you received the maximum credit you would be entitled to release after six years (the total of the maximum sentences minus the maximum credit).

(g) Good-Time Credit for Combined Concurrent Determinate and Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving one or more determinate and one or more indeterminate sentences concurrently (at the same time), the most good-time credit that you can earn is either one-seventh of the latest ending determinate sentence, or one-third of the maximum term of the latest ending indeterminate sentence—whichever allowance is larger.[40] For example, suppose you are serving a determinate sentence of fourteen years at the same time as an indeterminate sentence of six to nine years. You could earn either one-seventh of the determinate sentence (one-seventh of fourteen years, which is two years) or one-third of the indeterminate sentence (one-third of nine years, which is three years). Since the allowance for the

35. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).
36. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(2)(c) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).
37. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(2)(d) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).
38. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(2)(a) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).
39. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(2)(b) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).
40. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(2)(e) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

indeterminate sentence (three years) is larger than the allowance for the determinate sentence (two years), you could earn a total of three years of good-time credit. If you received the maximum credit, you would receive conditional release after eleven years—three years less than your maximum sentence of fourteen years (the maximum indeterminate sentence minus the maximum credit).

(h) Good-Time Credit for Combined Consecutive Determinate and Indeterminate Sentences

If you are serving one or more determinate sentences and one or more indeterminate sentences consecutively (one after the other), the most good-time credit that you can earn is one-third of the maximum terms of the indeterminate sentences added together, plus one-seventh of the terms of the determinate sentences added together.[41] For example, suppose you are serving a determinate sentence of fourteen years consecutively with an indeterminate sentence of six to nine years. You could receive up to two years of good-time credit from the determinate sentence (one-seventh of fourteen years) and up to three years of good-time credit for the indeterminate sentence (one-third of nine years). You could receive a total of five years of good-time credit, and could be entitled to conditional release after eighteen years (the total of your maximum sentences—twenty-three years—minus the total of your good-time credit—five years).

Suppose your state legislature passes a new law to reduce the good-time credit that you could have received under an older law. If your offense occurred before the enactment of the new law, then the new law cannot apply to you because it would violate ex post facto principles. Ex post facto principles mean that you can only be punished under a law that was in effect at the time when you committed the offense, and your punishment cannot be increased if stricter laws are passed after you committed the offense.[42] If you received a harsher punishment based on a law that was passed after the commission of your offense, you may have a valid constitutional claim.[43]

3. Loss of Good-Time Credit

You can lose good-time credit in two ways. First, TAC may decide not to grant you the maximum good-time credit. TAC is not required to recommend that you receive the maximum credit allowed by the law.[44] Second, officials can file a formal charge against you and then hold a disciplinary hearing.[45] JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings," explains some of your rights in these proceedings. These proceedings are usually only held in cases of serious misconduct.

Even if you lose some good-time credit in a disciplinary hearing, you may regain it later: the loss is not permanent until it actually affects your consideration for parole, conditional release, or other release.[46] When TAC reviews your file for the last time before your earliest possible parole or conditional release date, it may decide that you should get back the time you had lost. A record of good behavior since the time you lost your good-time credit increases the chance of regaining good-time credit.

Note: if you are released early on conditional release or parole, and you later violate the terms of your release or parole and return to prison, you cannot use the good time you earned before release: if you are sent back to prison for a violation, you must start earning good-time credits all over again.[47]

4. Challenging the Loss of Good-Time Credit

In Wolff v. McDonnell, the Supreme Court ruled that because good-time credits lead to a shorter time in prison, procedures to take away good-time credit must meet the requirements of the U.S. Constitution's Due 41. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(2)(f) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

42. See Weaver v. Graham, 450 U.S. 24, 28, 101 S. Ct. 960, 964, 67 L. Ed. 2d 17, 22 (1981) (applying new requirements for good-time credit to a prisoner whose crime occurred before the date of the statute is a violation of the Ex Post Facto Clause). But see In re Ramirez, 39 Cal. 3d 931, 936, 705 P.2d 897, 901, 218 Cal. Rptr. 324, 328 (Cal. 1985) (finding that a law is not a violation of the ex post facto principle when applied to prison misconduct that occurred after the new law's enactment, even if the original crime occurred before the enactment of the law).

43. For more information, see JLM, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," and JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the NY Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence."

44. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 261.3(c) (2008).

45. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1)(vii) (2008).

46. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 260.4(b) (2008).

47. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

Process Clause.[48] This means if prison officials have not followed the appropriate procedures, then you have the right to challenge their decision under Article 78, state habeas proceedings, or federal habeas proceedings. To determine how to do this, see JLM, Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Proceedings Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," JLM, Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus," and JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus." JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings," also explains your right to good time.

As noted above, if you decide to pursue any claim in federal court, you must first read JLM, Chapter 14, which discusses the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). If you do not follow the requirements in the PLRA, you may lose your good-time credit, you may become unable to receive presumptive release (see Part B(5) of this Chapter), or you may lose your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee at the time you file your claim.

E. Conditional Release

1. Conditional Release from a Definite Sentence

For a definite sentence, you are eligible for conditional release after you have served sixty days of your sentence.[49] Conditional release is at the discretion of the Board of Parole. The Board can also impose certain conditions for your release.[50]

Conditional release from a definite sentence lasts for one year no matter how much time you had remaining in your sentence when you were released. Also, if you violate the terms of your conditional release at any time during that year, you may be returned to prison and must finish out your full sentence as if you were never released.[51]

2. Conditional Release from a Determinate or Indeterminate Sentence

Based on the type of determinate or indeterminate sentence or sentences you are serving, you may be eligible for conditional release from prison as soon as the good-time credit you have earned in prison is equal to the amount of time that you have left to serve on your maximum sentence or sentences.[52] For example, if you are serving an indeterminate sentence of three to six years and you have two years of good-time credit, you cannot be released until you have served four years of your sentence.

Note that if you are serving one or more determinate sentences, along with one or more indeterminate sentences at the same time, you cannot be granted conditional release until you have served six-sevenths of the determinate sentence with the longest time to run.[53] For example, if you are serving a determinate sentence of twenty-one years at the same time as an indeterminate sentence of ten to twenty-one years, you cannot be released until you have served eighteen years (six-sevenths of your determinate sentence), even if you have earned more than three years of good-time credit against your indeterminate sentence.

If you satisfy these conditions specific to your type of sentence, you should submit a request for release, and you must be released.[54]

If you are requesting to be released from an indeterminate sentence, you should submit your request to the New York State Division of Parole.[55] The forms necessary for making this request are available through the Division of Parole. You can also obtain these forms from a parole representative at your facility.[56] If you are requesting to be released from a determinate sentence, you will need to read Part B(3)(d) of this Chapter on Jenna's Law.

---

48. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974); see also Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 478, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2297, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 426 (1995) (holding that neither the Due Process Clause nor the Hawaii regulations created a liberty interest in avoiding disciplinary confinement for 30 days; restating the holding in Wolff v. McDonnell that good-time credits could not be revoked without adequate procedures because the statute had created a "liberty interest").

49. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

50. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

51. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(3)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

52. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

53. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

54. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

55. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-g(1) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

56. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-g(1) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

Unlike conditional release from a definite sentence, for which release is at the Board of Parole's discretion, you do not need permission to get conditional release from a determinate or indeterminate sentence. If the Department of Correctional Services (DOCS) refuses to release you, you can file an Article 78 petition in New York Supreme Court. See JLM, Chapter 22 to learn how to use Article 78 actions to force an agency or official to perform a legally required act, such as releasing you from prison.

3. The Release Agreement

Before you can leave prison on conditional release, you will have to sign a release agreement. This agreement explains the conditions of your release. The agreement will also explain the consequences of violating any of these conditions.[57] By signing the agreement, you promise to obey all of the listed rules.

If you are conditionally released from a definite sentence, the Board of Parole will determine the terms of the release agreement.[58] If you are conditionally released from an indeterminate sentence, the terms of your release will be the same as those imposed on prisoners on parole.[59] This agreement requires a parole officer to supervise you. Note: the conditions of the conditional release may change any time before your sentence has ended. Also, a parole officer may add special conditions, such as a curfew or attendance at an alcohol abuse treatment program. A possible condition may require you to find housing before release.[60] See JLM, Chapter 32, "Parole," for an explanation of parole in New York.

If you are conditionally released from a determinate sentence as a violent felony offender or a drug offender serving a sentence other than life in prison, you will be required to sign a post-release supervision agreement that will extend your supervision for three to five years.

4. Jenna's Law and Post-Release Supervision for All Determinate Sentences and Drug Offenses

In 1998, the New York State legislature passed Jenna's Law.[61] This law imposes a period of mandatory post-release supervision for all prisoners sentenced to determinate sentences. The Drug Law Reform Act of 2004 created new sentencing provisions for felony drug offenses that mandated determinate sentences, which must also include a period of post-release supervision.[62] Unlike prisoners serving definite sentences, who are conditionally released to one year's supervision, and unlike prisoners serving indeterminate sentences, who are conditionally released on terms very similar to parole, those serving determinate sentences are subject to mandatory post-release supervision.[63]

Previously, not everyone who had a conditional release from a determinate sentence was subject to post-release supervision. The law on this has changed—now, everyone serving a determinate sentence must complete post-release supervision. If you receive a determinate sentence for a crime committed on or after September 1, 1998, you will be subject to post-release supervision. For felony offenses that are not sex offenses, the period of post-release supervision for determinate sentences is five years, except for the drug offenses and first-time violent felony offenses listed below that may have shorter periods of supervision.[64] Unless the court specifies otherwise, you will most likely be subject to the maximum possible post-release supervision time available for the particular crime of which you were convicted. However, the court does have the power to set your post-release supervision period anywhere between the minimum and the maximum possible periods under the law.

---

57. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-g(2) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

58. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

59. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-g(1) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2006).

60. People ex rel. Travis v. Coombe, 219 A.D.2d 881, 881–82, 632 N.Y.S.2d 340, 340 (4th Dept. 1995) (conditions of release included requirement that parolee find housing, and when potential parolee failed to do so, he was not released); People ex rel. DeFlumer v. Strack, 212 A.D.2d 555, 555, 623 N.Y.S.2d 1, 1 (2d Dept. 1995) (conditions of release included that parolee must live in approved housing, which here was the home of parolee's sister).

61. Jenna's Law is named after Jenna Griebshaber, who was murdered by an individual who had been convicted of a violent felony and had been released early from prison after serving two-thirds of his indeterminate sentence. The purpose of Jenna's Law was to ensure that violent offenders are appropriately monitored upon their reintroduction into society. Barry Kamins, New Criminal Law and Procedure Legislation, 81-FEB N.Y. St. B.J. 28, 28 (2009).

62. See N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.70(2)(a), (3)(b), (4)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007); N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.71(2)(b), (3)(b), (4)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

63. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(5) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

64. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

(a) Length of Post-Release Supervision

Three groups of offenses have different lengths of post-release supervision: felony drug offenses, first-time violent felony offenses, and felony sex offenses committed after April 13, 2007. For more information on felony sex offenses see JLM, Chapter 36, "Special Considerations for Sex Offenders" (available online at http://www.hrlr.org/jlm/toc or by writing to the JLM). The tables below show possible post-release supervision time, depending on your sentence's type and class.

Drug Offenses

	First Time	Non-first Time
Class D or E	1 year[65]	1–2 years[66]
Class B or C	1–2 years[67]	1 ½–3 years[68]

First-Time Violent Felony Offenses

	First Time
Class D or E	1 ½–3 years[69]
Class B or C	2 ½–5 years[70]

Felony Sex Offenses

	First Time	Non-first Time
Class D or E	3–10 years[71]	5–15 years[72]
Class C	5–15 years[73]	7–20 years[74]
Class B	5–20 years[75]	10–25 years[76]
Child Sexual Assault		10–20 years[77]

(b) Results of Violating a Condition of Post-Release Supervision

If you violate any of the terms of your post-release supervision, you will receive a revocation hearing. The rules for revocation hearings for post-release supervision are the same as the rules for parole revocation.[78] See JLM, Chapter 32, "Parole," for an explanation of parole revocation hearings in New York. If your post-release supervision is revoked at the hearing, and you are not a felony sex-offender, then you may be sent back to prison for more time. This time is no longer than the amount of post-release supervision remaining to be served and can never be longer than five years.[79]

If you were convicted of a felony sex offense, the maximum amount of time that you can be sent back to prison is the remainder of time on your period of post-release supervision, even if longer than five years.[80] If you have less than three years remaining of post-release supervision, you will be released after you serve the additional three year sentence. If you have three or more years of supervised release left when you are given an additional term of imprisonment for violating the terms of your supervised release, you will not be automatically released after serving three years. Instead, after serving three years, your case will be reviewed by the board of parole. The board will determine whether you can be released to post-release

65. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2)(a) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
66. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2)(c) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
67. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
68. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2)(d) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
69. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2)(e) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
70. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2)(f) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
71. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(a), (d) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
72. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(g) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
73. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(b), (e) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
74. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(h) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
75. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(c), (f) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
76. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(i) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
77. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(2-a)(j) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
78. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).
79. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
80. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

supervision or whether you should stay in prison and have your case reviewed a second time at a date not more than twenty-four months away.[81]

If your post-release supervision is revoked, you may be sentenced for a period longer than the maximum times listed above if you were given both determinate and indeterminate sentences.[82] If you had more time left on the combined amount of your indeterminate and determinate sentences when you left prison on supervised release, you may be sentenced to serve that remaining amount of time instead of the shorter period of supervised release.

Your post-release supervision time will not count if the board of parole declares you "delinquent" for having violated a condition of your release.[83] The clock will remain stopped until you are released back to supervision or incarcerated for a new criminal conviction or for violating a release condition. The time you spend in custody while awaiting the decision of whether or not your post-release supervision is revoked will be credited towards your maximum or aggregate maximum sentence or sentences for which you were released. If that is zero, it will then be credited against your remaining period of post-release supervision.[84] If you are sentenced to a new determinate or indeterminate sentence, your remaining period of post-release supervision will be on hold until you are re-released from prison, at which time you will begin serving that period of post-release supervision again.[85]

(c) Other Ways of Challenging Post-Release Supervision

If you have received a term of post-release supervision, you should read this section carefully to ensure that your sentence is valid, as there have been a number of important changes in New York law that will affect many prisoners.

One way to challenge your term of post-release supervision is if you are serving a determinate sentence, and your sentencing judge failed to impose or state a term of post-release supervision at sentencing. In the past, in some cases DOCS (not the sentencing judge) imposed a mandatory period of post-release supervision for prisoners at the time of release. But in 2008, the New York Court of Appeals held that DOCS may not do this—only a judge can impose post-release supervision.[86] In addition, the judge must have imposed or stated the term of post-release supervision at sentencing.[87] Because the law has changed, if you were given post-release supervision, you should check to be sure that this was given to you by your sentencing judge and not by DOCS. If your post-release supervision was imposed by DOCS at the time of release and not your sentencing judge at the time of your sentencing, you may be able to challenge the post-release supervision.

This change in the law affects thousands of prisoners in New York State. In order to help deal with these cases in which the judge failed to impose or state post-release supervision at sentencing, the New York legislature passed N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85, effective as of July 9, 2008.[88] This statute applies only to cases in which a determinate sentence requiring post-release supervision was imposed between September 1, 1998 and June 30, 2008, and the court failed to impose or state the term of post-release supervision at sentencing. If this statute applies to your case, the court may (with the consent of the district attorney) resentence you and re-impose your original determinate sentence without any post-release supervision. In the resentencing process, you have certain rights. DOCS or the Division of Parole must notify you, as well as the sentencing judge, that resentencing must take place.[89] Within ten days of receiving the notice, the sentencing judge must appoint counsel for you.[90] Within forty days after the notice, the judge must make a decision and

81. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(1-a) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
82. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(1) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
83. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(5)(d)(i) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
84. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.45(5)(d) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
85. N.Y. Penal Law §§ 70.45(5)(e), (f) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).
86. People v. Sparber, 10 N.Y.3d 457, 468, 889 N.E.2d 459, 463, 859 N.Y.S.2d 582, No. 53, slip op. at 7 (Apr. 29, 2008) (finding the procedure through which post-release supervision was imposed did not comply with the statutory mandate and remanding to trial court for re-sentencing).
87. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).
88. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).
89. McKinney's Correction Law § 601-d (2009).
90. McKinney's Correction Law § 601-d (2009); McKinney's County Law § 722.

resentence you. Note that you may waive these deadlines.[91] In this instance, you would not be entitled to have your plea of guilty set aside.

In the resentencing, the judge may impose the original determinate sentence of imprisonment without requiring the term of post-release supervision.[92] However, the district attorney must approve the new sentence that no longer requires post-release supervision.[93] Even if DOCS imposed post-release supervision, a judge may re-sentence you and still impose a term of post-release supervision.[94] Additionally, if you were placed on post-release supervision, and the terms of that post-release supervision were imposed by DOCS and not a judge, and you are then charged with violating the terms of your post-release supervision, you then cannot be re-incarcerated for violating those terms.[95] If you are incarcerated for these reasons, you are entitled to immediate release.

There is another way that you can challenge your term of post-release supervision. If you pleaded guilty and received a sentence that included a mandatory term of post-release supervision, you may be able to vacate (take back) your guilty plea if you were not informed that your sentence would include post-release supervision during the plea colloquy. In New York v. Catu, the New York State Court of Appeals (the highest court in New York) held that a defendant who pleaded guilty without being informed that he would be subject to post-release supervision could vacate his guilty plea, because the plea was not a "voluntary and intelligent choice."[96] In People v. Rucker, the New York Appellate Division, Third Department held that where the defendant pleaded guilty, and the sentencing judge did not advise the defendant of the post-release supervision during the plea colloquy, but did impose post-release supervision at sentencing, N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85 does not apply, and the plea had to be vacated.[97]

Note that if you were not informed of the post-release supervision, although you can vacate your plea, you will not be able to vacate the guilty judgment against you.[98] This means that you will either be given a new trial or re-sentencing. However, if you are re-sentenced, you will likely get the same sentence, so only use Catu if you want to go to trial instead of keeping your plea. Even if you do not wish to vacate your plea or have already served your sentence, however, you may be able to use Catu to challenge your post-release supervision without setting aside your sentence.

5. Length of Your Conditional Release

If you are conditionally released from a definite sentence, you will be on conditional release for one year—no matter how little time you have left on your sentence.[99] During this time, you must continue to follow the terms of your conditional release agreement and the Board of Parole will supervise you.[100]

If you are conditionally released from an indeterminate sentence, your conditional release will last for the maximum amount of time left on your sentence.[101] For example, if you gain conditional release after serving nineteen years of a twenty-one-year determinate sentence, you will be on conditional release for two years. If you get out on conditional release after twenty years of an indeterminate sentence of fifteen to thirty years, you will be on conditional release for ten years. For the rest of your conditional release, you will be in the legal custody of the Board of Parole. You will have to obey the conditions of your release, and you

---

91. McKinney's Correction Law § 601-d (2009).

92. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).

93. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.85 (McKinney 2009).

94. People v. Sparber, 10 N.Y.3d 457, 470, 889 N.E.2d 459, 464, 859 N.Y.S.2d 590, No. 53, slip op. at 7 (Apr. 29, 2008) (finding the procedure through which post-release supervision was imposed did not comply with the statutory mandate and remanding to trial court for re-sentencing).

95. People ex rel. Lucas Foote v. Piscotti, 51 A.D.3d 1407, 1408, 857 N.Y.S.2d 515, 515, No. 925 KAH 07-00912, slip op. at 1 (4th Dept. May 23, 2008); People ex rel. Gerard v. Kralik, 51 A.D.3d 1045, 1046, 858 N.Y.S.2d 771, 772, No. 2008-02692, slip op. at 1–2 (2nd Dept. May 27, 2008); see also Prendergast v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., 51 A.D.3d 1133, 1133–34, 856 N.Y.S.2d 725, 726, No. 503884, slip op. at 1–2 (3d Dept. May 1, 2008) (holding that only a court may impose post-release supervision).

96. New York v. Catu, 4 N.Y.3d 242, 245, 825 N.E.2d 1081, 1082, 792 N.Y.S.2d 887, 888 (2005).

97. People v. Rucker, 2009 NY Slip Op 8087, *2, 67 A.D.3d 1126, 1128, 888 N.Y.S.2d 313, 316 (N.Y. App. Div. Nov. 12,2009).

98. People v. Louree, 8 N.Y.3d 541, 546, 869 N.E.2d 18, 21–22, 838 N.Y.S.2d 18 (2007).

99. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

100. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

101. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(1)(b) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

will have to report regularly to a parole officer, just like a person on parole.[102] For more information about parole, see Chapter 32 of the JLM.

If you are granted conditional release from a determinate sentence, you will be under supervision for six months to five years. For more information about Jenna's Law, see Part B(3)(d) above.

If you are granted conditional release from a determinate or indeterminate sentence, you may be able to get an early discharge from conditional release supervision. The Board of Parole has the power to grant an absolute discharge to some people on conditional release, unless the person was convicted of certain specific charges, including violent felony offenses, sex offenses,[103] some murder charges, hate crimes, terrorism, and some crimes involving youths.[104] This relief is not available for anyone required to register as a sex offender. This kind of merit termination satisfies all remaining time on your sentence, as if you had served it all in prison.

The Board of Parole has the discretion to grant or withhold merit terminations. The date that you become eligible for a merit termination is determined by the type of crime for which you were convicted. If your conviction was for a Class A felony controlled substance offense, the Board of Parole may grant you a merit termination after two years of uninterrupted conditional release. If you were convicted of any other eligible offense, the Board of Parole has discretion to grant you a merit termination from conditional release after one year of continuous release. The Board of Parole also has discretion to grant you an absolute discharge from the remainder of your conditional release after you have served three straight years of conditional release.[105] Like a merit termination, an absolute discharge satisfies the remainder of your sentence. After three straight years of conditional release, ask your parole officer about early discharge. This option is unavailable if you are on conditional release from a definite sentence, a sentence with a maximum term of life imprisonment, or a controlled substances felony.

6. Revocation of Conditional Release

Conditional release can be revoked in the same way that parole can be revoked. Both the Conditional Release Commission and the Board of Parole have broad discretion to revoke conditional release.[106] If an officer of the Conditional Release Commission (applicable if your conditional release is from a definite sentence) or a parole officer (applicable if your conditional release is from a determinate or indeterminate sentence) has reasonable cause to believe that you have violated the conditions of release in an important respect, your conditional release may be revoked.[107] Examples of such violations include failure to appear for a scheduled meeting with your parole officer or participation in criminal activities. However, before your conditional release can be revoked, your parole officer must report your actions to a member of the board, who may then issue a warrant for temporary detention.

The government must notify you within three days of the execution of the warrant issued for the alleged violation, and the written notice must state the date, place, and purpose of the hearing.[108] The notice must also inform you of which conditions you are alleged to have violated, your right to appear and speak on your own behalf, your right to present evidence, and your right to confront the witnesses who testify against you.[109] The government will hold a preliminary revocation hearing, which you are required to attend, within fifteen days of the execution of the warrant.[110] At this hearing, the government will determine whether there is probable cause to believe that you violated the conditions of your release.[111] If probable cause is not found, the case will be dismissed, and you will be released again.[112] However, if probable cause is found, the

---

102. See N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(1) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2007).

103. But see N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-j(4) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007) (allowing for a discharge of post-release supervision after three years if certain conditions are met).

104. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-j (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007). For a complete list of offenses, see N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-j(1) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

105. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-j(4) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

106. See Hyser v. Reed, 318 F.2d 225, 234, 115 U.S. App. D.C. 254, 254 (D.C. Cir. 1963) (en banc) (finding statute gives Board of Parole broad discretion to both grant and revoke parole, without requiring adversarial hearings).

107. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(a)(i) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

108. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

109. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

110. See N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

111. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(iv) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

112. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(c)(vii) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

government must hold a revocation hearing within ninety days.[113] The government must notify you in writing at least fourteen days before the revocation hearing of the date, place, and time of the hearing.[114]

The Conditional Release Commission or the Board of Parole must provide you with due process before permanently revoking your conditional release.[115] In order to satisfy the requirements of the Constitution's Due Process Clause, there must be a finding by a "preponderance of the evidence" (meaning that it must be "more likely than not") that you violated a term of your conditional release, and you must be given an opportunity to be heard.[116] You are also entitled to a lawyer at the hearing.[117] At the hearing, you will be given the opportunity to make a statement.[118] You also have the right to present evidence on your own behalf and to confront and cross-examine witnesses testifying against you.[119] If it cannot be determined by a "preponderance of the evidence" that a violation occurred, the case will be dismissed, and you will again be released on parole.[120] However, if it is determined that you violated one or more conditions of your release in an important respect (such as failing to appear for a scheduled meeting with your parole officer), your conditional release may be revoked, and you will again be detained or your release may be modified.[121] If you are released again, the time you spent in detention will be credited against the time you must serve.[122]

7. Disadvantages of Conditional Release for Prisoners Serving Definite Sentences

Although getting out of prison before the expiration of your maximum sentence seems like the best possible outcome, under some circumstances, you may want to stay in prison instead. If you are a definite-sentence prisoner, and you are conditionally released, you will have to remain under the supervision of the Conditional Release Commission for a full year, no matter how little time was left on your original sentence.[123] When you are near the end of a definite sentence (which could even be shortened by good-time credit), you might have to choose between conditional release now (followed by a year of supervision) or another month or so in prison (followed by complete freedom from supervision). The local Conditional Release Commission may grant conditional release near the end of your sentence just to keep you under supervision for a year. Prisoners will often apply for conditional release when they first become eligible for it, but will find that their requests are denied until shortly before their sentence ends. If you are serving a definite sentence and the Commission agrees to grant you conditional release, be sure you know exactly how much time you would have to serve in order to finish your sentence in prison. Think about whether you would rather serve your short additional time in prison, or spend what might be a longer time (one year) under parole supervision. There are different reasons to make either of these choices, so neither is a wrong decision. However, it is important to be aware of your options, and to realize how much of your life you are 113. N.Y. Exec. Law §§ 259-i(3)(d), (f)(i) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

114. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(iii) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

115. See Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 484, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2601–02, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 495 (1972) (holding that because a parolee faces a severe loss of liberty if his parole is revoked, due process is required before parole can be revoked). Although this ruling dealt with parole revocation, one can argue the reasoning should apply equally to the conditional release revocation. See Kroemer v. Joy, 2 Misc. 3d 265, 268, 769 N.Y.S.2d 357, 360 (Sup. Ct. Yates County 2003) (finding prisoners in temporary release status have a due process right to a hearing before their status is revoked since it would be a loss of liberty.); Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 84 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that prisoner on work release is entitled to procedural due process before his status can be denied to prevent a deprivation of his liberty); Anderson v. Recore, 446 F.3d 324, 333–34 (2d Cir. 2006) (prisoners have a protected liberty interest in continuation in a temporary release program that affords them due process rights including notice and a hearing before its revocation).

116. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §§ 410.70(1)(b), (3) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(v)–(vi) (entitlement to hearing), (viii)–(ix) (requiring preponderance of evidence) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

117. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.70(4) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

118. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.70(2) (McKinney 2005).

119. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.70(3) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(iv)-(vi) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

120. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.70(5) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(ix) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

121. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 410.70(5) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(f)(x) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2007).

122. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-i(3)(h) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

123. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(2) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008).

committing to supervision (either by being incarcerated or by being under post-release supervision). You are in the best position to decide which option makes the most sense for you.

F. Early Release From a Definite Sentence

If you are serving a definite sentence but do not get out on conditional release, you can still get out before the end of your sentence if you have earned good-time credit. Remember, good-time credit is not used to determine eligibility for conditional release from a definite sentence.

As soon as the amount of good-time credit that you have earned equals the time remaining on your definite sentence, you should request to be unconditionally released. Because you cannot earn good-time credit for more than one-third of your definite sentence, you will have to serve at least two-thirds of your definite sentence before being eligible for this automatic early release.[124] For example, if you were sentenced to nine months and earned three months of good-time credit, your sentence can be reduced by three months, making it a six month sentence.

As soon as you are eligible and request to be released, your sentence will be over—there is no post-release supervision. Accordingly, unlike prisoners released on parole or on conditional release, you will not have to sign a release agreement or worry about supervision or parole officers. Although both conditional and early release allow you to leave prison before serving your entire sentence, only early release also frees you from post-release supervision.

G. Presumptive Release

In 2003, the New York State legislature enacted a new kind of release program called presumptive release.[125] In some ways, presumptive release is a lot like parole. The one major difference, however, is that presumptive release is designed to encourage the early release of model, good-behaving prisoners. That is, presumptive release is intended to be readily available for prisoners who have followed prison rules, participated in their assigned work and participated in their treatment programs. In addition, unlike parole, you do not have to appear before the Board of Parole to be released.

Although you do not have a right to demand presumptive release,[126] you may be eligible if you meet certain requirements. First, the presumptive release program is only available to those prisoners serving one or more indeterminate sentences. Second, the presumptive release program is only available to prisoners serving sentences for non-violent crimes,[127] who have not committed any serious disciplinary infractions,[128] and who have not been deemed to have filed or continued frivolous (not serious) legal complaints.[129]

---

124. N.Y. Correct. Law § 804(a)(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

125. N.Y. Correct. Law § 806 (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until Sept. 1, 2011). This law is set to expire on September 1, 2011. After this date, check for presumptive release program updates, likely available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

126. N.Y. Correct. Law § 806(5) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until September 1, 2011). Because you cannot earn good-time credit for more than one-third of your definite sentence, you will have to serve at least two-thirds of your definite sentence before being eligible for this automatic early release. For example, if you were sentenced to nine months and earned three months of good-time credit, your sentence can be reduced by three months, making it a six-month sentence.

127. Under New York State law, a prisoner is not eligible for presumptive relief if he is presently serving a sentence for, or has been previously convicted of, the following violent crimes: (1) a Class A-I felony, (2) a violent felony offense under § 70.02 of the New York Penal Law, (3) manslaughter in the second degree, (4) vehicular manslaughter in the second or first degree, (5) criminally negligent homicide, (6) an offense in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law ("relating to sex offenses"), (7) incest, or (8) an offense defined in Article 263 of the New York Penal Law ("relating to the use of a child in a sexual performance"). N.Y. Correct. Law § 806(1)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until Sept. 1, 2011). This law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

128. N.Y. Correct. Law § 806(1)(ii) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until Sept. 1, 2011). This law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

129. N.Y. Correct. Law § 806(1)(iii) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until Sept. 1, 2011). This law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

1. Earned Eligibility Program

To be eligible for presumptive release, you must first receive a "certificate of earned eligibility." Whether you are serving an indeterminate or a determinate sentence, you should have been assigned a work and treatment program. Two months before your earliest possible parole date, or at some point after that, the commissioner will review your record to determine if you have complied with this program.[130] If the commissioner decides you have successfully participated in your program, he or she may issue you a certificate of earned eligibility. This certificate will factor into your parole hearing and also play a key role in getting presumptive release.

2. Merit Time for Presumptive Release

Merit time shortens the length of your sentence by reducing the minimum length of an indeterminate sentence, unlike good-time credits, which reduce the maximum length of an indeterminate sentence. If you are serving an indeterminate sentence for a non-violent crime,[131] you may now receive merit-time allowances of up to one-sixth of the minimum period of your sentence. For example, if you are serving a sentence of two to five years, you may receive a merit-time allowance of up to four months, which is one-sixth of the minimum period of two years. If you received this credit, you would first be eligible for presumptive release after serving five-sixths of the minimum period of your sentence. In this example, you would be eligible for presumptive release after one year and eight months.

If you are serving an indeterminate or determinate sentence for a felony drug offense under New York Penal Law §§ 70.70 and 70.71, you are eligible to earn an additional merit-time allowance of up to one-seventh of the minimum term imposed by the court.[132] This means that you can earn this one-seventh of merit time on top of the one-sixth of merit time discussed above. You gain merit-time allowances in the same way you receive good-behavior credit, which is discussed above. In addition, your merit-time credit can be withheld, forfeited, or canceled for "bad behavior, violation of institutional rules or failure to perform properly in the duties or program assigned."[133]

3. Requesting Presumptive Release

To get presumptive release, you must (1) have a certificate of earned eligibility,[134] (2) not have been convicted of a violent offense,[135] (3) not have committed any serious disciplinary violations while in prison, and (4) not have filed any frivolous lawsuits. One other requirement is that if you received merit time, you must have already served at least five-sixths of your minimum sentence (or total minimum sentences); but, if you have not received merit-time credit, you must have already served your entire minimum sentence (or total minimum sentences).

---

130. N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2007). This law is scheduled to expire on Sept. 1, 2011. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

131. Under New York State law, a prisoner is not eligible for presumptive relief if he is presently serving a sentence for, or has been previously convicted of, the following violent crimes: (1) a Class A-I felony, (2) a violent felony offense under Section 70.02 of the New York Penal Law, (3) manslaughter in the second degree, (4) vehicular manslaughter in the second or first degree, (5) criminally negligent homicide, (6) an offense in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law ("relating to sex offenses"), (7) incest, or (8) an offense defined in Article 263 of the New York Penal Law ("relating to the use of a child in a sexual performance"). N.Y. Correct. Law § 806(1)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until Sept. 1, 2011). This law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

132. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(d)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

133. N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

134. See N.Y. Correct. Law § 805 (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008).

135. Under New York State law, a prisoner is not eligible for presumptive relief if he is presently serving a sentence for, or has been previously convicted of, the following violent crimes: (1) a Class A-I felony, (2) a violent felony offense under § 70.02 of the New York Penal Law, (3) manslaughter in the second degree, (4) vehicular manslaughter in the second or first degree, (5) criminally negligent homicide, (6) an offense in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law ("relating to sex offenses"), (7) incest, or (8) an offense defined in Article 263 of the Penal Law ("relating to the use of a child in a sexual performance"). N.Y. Correct. Law § 806(1)(i) (McKinney 2003 & Supp. 2008) (scheduled repeal postponed until Sept. 1, 2011). This law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011. After this date, you should check for updates about the presumptive release program. Updates may be available online at: http://www.docs.state.ny.us/ProgramServices/guidance.html#earn.

If you meet those criteria, you can apply for presumptive release by filling out the form provided by the Division of Parole.[136] You will not have to appear before the Board of Parole. Once you have applied for presumptive release and met the criteria, you will be released unless the commissioner determines that you are a threat to the community or release would not be good for your own welfare.

The conditions of presumptive release will be very similar to the conditions of parole or conditional release.[137] You will be subject to the supervision of the Board of Parole for the rest of your unserved sentence. For example, if you were serving a sentence of two to five years, the first possible time for you to receive presumptive release would be after one year and eight months (five-sixths of your minimum sentence). You would then be subject to parole-like conditions for the rest of your five-year maximum sentence—in this case, that would be three years and four months.

H. Clemency and Commutation in New York

"Clemency" is a general term for the power of an executive officer (the Governor of New York, for example) to change the sentence of a criminal defendant to prevent injustice from occurring.[138]

There are several different types of clemency, including amnesty, a reprieve, a pardon, and a commutation. Amnesty applies to a group of people who have committed political offenses. A reprieve postpones a scheduled execution. A pardon attempts to clear a person's name of a crime and restore their reputation, while a commutation just substitutes a milder sentence for the current sentence being served.[139] Most battered women seeking clemency request a commutation of sentence.

In most cases, all these forms of clemency are difficult to obtain. If you are a non-violent offender, or a woman who is in jail for killing an abusive partner, however, you might have a stronger chance of getting clemency. Accordingly, this Section focuses on clemency for battered women. If you are not a battered woman and are still seeking clemency, the outlined procedures will still be helpful to you in preparing your petition.[140] This is because the basic procedures for filing a good petition apply to all types of clemency petitions, even those that are not based on domestic abuse.

If you are currently seeking clemency for a death sentence, you should read Harbison v. Bell,[141] a case in which the Supreme Court held that a a prisoner is entitled to a lawyer when petitioning for clemency in capital offenses. Finally, for more information on clemency in the state of New York, see "Guidelines for Review of Executive Clemency Applications," which is on file in the law library of each correctional facility in New York.[142]

1. Pardons

Pardons are different from commutations. A pardon is most commonly available if there is (1) overwhelming and convincing proof of your innocence that was not available at the time of your conviction, (2) a disability imposed on the judgment of conviction, or (3) a chance that you will be deported from the

136. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-g(1) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

137. N.Y. Penal Law § 70.40(1)(c) (McKinney 2004 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

138. Albany Law School, Post-Conviction Remedies Clinic Clemency Manual 13 (1996). In thirty-five states, including New York, the governor grants clemency. In other states either the governor and an advisory board, or an advisory board alone, makes the decision. The Mich. Women's Clemency and Justice Project, Clemency for Battered Women in Michigan: A Manual for Attorneys, Law Students and Social Workers, ch. II-A, available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_manual.html (last visited Mar. 16, 2011). For more information about the rules of clemency and commutation in other states, see Margaret Colgate Love, The Sentencing Project, Relief from the Collateral Consequences of a Criminal Conviction: A State-By-State Resource Guide (2008), available at http://www.sentencingproject.org/PublicationDetails.aspx?PublicationID=486.

139. The Mich. Women's Clemency and Justice Project, Clemency for Battered Women in Michigan: A Manual for Attorneys, Law Students and Social Workers, ch. II-A, available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_manual.html (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

140. For further information on clemency for battered women nationwide, contact the National Clearinghouse for the Defense of Battered Women, 125 S. 9th Street, Suite 302, Philadelphia, PA 19107, (215) 351-0010 or (800) 903-0111 extension 3. The Clearinghouse accepts collect calls from incarcerated battered women.

141. Harbison v. Bell, 554 U.S. 917, 128 S. Ct. 2959, 171 L. Ed. 2d 884 (2008).

142. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision 45 (2010), available at https://parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

United States.[143] Usually a pardon is not available if you have any other administrative or legal remedy available to you.[144]

2. Commutations

A commutation of your sentence allows you to appear before the Board of Parole for consideration of release on parole earlier than your sentence would otherwise allow. A commutation of sentence, when exceptional and compelling circumstances are not present, requires all of the following:

(1) your minimum sentence is more than one year;
(2) you have already served at least half of your minimum sentence;
(3) you are ineligible for release on parole within one year of the date you apply for clemency; and
(4) you are ineligible for release on parole at the discretion of the Board of Parole.[145]

In addition, you must be able to prove, by clear and convincing evidence, that one of the following three circumstances applies:

(1) You have made "exceptional strides in self-development and improvement;" you have "made responsible use of available rehabilitative programs and [have] addressed identified treatment needs" (for example, by completing a drug program); and commutation of your sentence is "in the interest of justice, consistent with public safety and [with your] rehabilitation;"
(2) You have a terminal illness or a "severe and chronic disability which would be substantially mitigated by release from prison and such release is in the interest of justice and consistent with public safety" (illnesses such as cancer and multiple sclerosis may qualify); or
(3) "[F]urther incarceration would constitute gross unfairness because of the basic inequities involved."[146]

3. How to Request a Pardon or Commutation

To be considered for clemency in New York, send a written petition requesting clemency to either of the following addresses:

The Governor of the State of New York
Executive Chamber
State Capitol
Albany, NY 12224

Director, Executive Clemency Bureau
N.Y. State Division of Parole
97 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206

After the Governor receives a petition requesting clemency, he or she then compiles the necessary information. The Governor only grants formal hearing to those seeking commutation of a death sentence. The Governor will review the information and make a decision.[147] The petitioner should send all supporting application materials within thirty days of sending the petition. Petitions are typically considered in the order in which they are received.[148]

(a) Organization of Petition

To organize your petition, you should first explain the strongest part of your petition in an introductory paragraph or section. For example, you could include special circumstances pertaining to your case or

143. N.Y. Exec. Law § 15 (McKinney 2002 & Supp. 2008).

144. N.Y. Exec. Law § 15 (McKinney 2002 & Supp. 2008). Examples of administrative remedies include a certificate of relief from disabilities or a certificate of good conduct. Information concerning these certificates may be obtained by calling the New York State Board of Parole at (518) 473-9400.

145. N.Y. Exec. Law § 15 (McKinney 2002 & Supp. 2008).

146. N.Y. Exec. Law § 15 (McKinney 2002 & Supp. 2008).

147. N.Y. Exec. Law § 15 (McKinney 2002 & Supp. 2008).

148. Criminal Justice Policy Foundation, New York: Applicable Form of Executive Clemency, available at http://www.cjpf.org/clemency/NewYork.html (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

significant things you have accomplished in prison.[149] Make the petition as brief as possible, but make sure not to leave out any important information. Use headings to separate your points. Emphasize how you have spent your time in prison. Write out in detail your post-release plans (be sure to include how you will be moving into a stable environment, how you will support yourself, and who is included in your support network).

If you were the victim of domestic violence and the domestic violence is related to your conviction, consider making a table that includes the date of each incident of abuse, the nature of the abuse, and a description of any evidence that exists to prove the incident(s).[150]

(b) Exhibits

In order to show strong character and good behavior, you can include evidence, such as letters of support from prison administrators, work supervisors, religious leaders, educators, and social workers. You should include this evidence as exhibits to your petition. If you were a victim of abuse, you should also include police and hospital records documenting the abuse.

To obtain police records, you should call or write to the records office in the county where the event happened. Different police departments have different policies and you may have to fill out a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request.[151] To obtain hospital records, call or write to the patient records office at the hospital where you went for treatment. A written request should include your name, date of birth, Social Security Number, the specific date or general time range of your hospitalization, and the specific information you are requesting.[152]

If you were a victim of domestic violence abuse, and you were evaluated by an expert regarding battered women's syndrome, you should include that evaluation or testimony, as well as evidence of any violent criminal history of your abuser. Include any orders of protection and photographs showing physical injury from the abuse. You also want to attach affidavits or letters from friends, family members, and domestic violence workers who had first-hand knowledge of the abuse.[153] You should refer to these exhibits in your petition, labeling and attaching them to the end of the petition.

(c) Obtaining Documents

Getting documents related to your case and your prison term will help you write your petition. Because you may have difficulty getting all of these documents while incarcerated, you should try to have a close friend or family member assist you in gathering this information and in developing your petition. For information on the Federal Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), the Federal Privacy Act (PA), and New York's Freedom of Information Law (FOIL), see JLM, Chapter 7, "Freedom of Information." JLM, Chapter 7 also includes a list of FOIA statutes in other states. You will want to obtain your DOCS records (records pertaining to the time you have spent in prison), your parole file, your case file, documentation of battering (if applicable), and affidavits or letters of support.

(i) Your DOCS records

Your DOCS records include:

(1) All reports of misbehavior and supplemental sheets;
(2) Physical force and unusual incident sheets;
(3) Adjustment committee reports and dispositions;
(4) Copy of legal dates;
(5) Crimes of commitment;
(6) Personal history record;
(7) Disciplinary record;
(8) Correctional supervision history;
(9) Certificates of program completion; and

149. Albany Law School, Post-Conviction Remedies Clinic Clemency Manual 16 (1996).

150. The Mich. Women's Clemency and Justice Project, Clemency for Battered Women in Michigan: A Manual for Attorneys, Law Students and Social Workers, ch. VII, available at http://www.umich.edu/~clemency/clemency_manual.html (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

151. For more information, see JLM, Chapter 7, "Freedom of Information."

152. Albany Law School, Post-Conviction Remedies Clinic Clemency Manual 7 (1996).

153. Albany Law School, Post-Conviction Remedies Clinic Clemency Manual 14 (1996).

(10)Recognition letters

You have a right to this information under FOIA and New York's Personal Privacy Protection Law (PPPL),[154] but you must authorize release of these records if they are being sent to someone other than you. In order to obtain these documents, you should write to the prisoner records coordinator of your facility with your name, DOCS number, where you would like the records sent, and a list of the documents you want to receive. If the documents are being sent to someone other than you, you must state that you authorize that person to receive the documents you are requesting.

(ii) Your parole records

You also have a right to your case record and parole file under FOIL/PPPL. The case record is the most complete set of records maintained by the Board of Parole and can be obtained by writing to the senior parole officer of your facility with your name, ID number, and release interview date, revocation hearing date, or appeal pending date, whichever applies. State that you want to review all the information in the file that will be considered by the Board of Parole to prepare for the upcoming date.

The parole file is a less complete record in the central office, and it can be obtained by writing to the following address:

Chairman of the Board of Parole
97 Central Avenue
Albany, NY 12206.

Be sure to state that you are requesting these records pursuant to FOIA and PPPL.

(iii) Your Case file

The case file includes:

(1) Police reports;
(2) Grand jury minutes;
(3) Indictment;
(4) Pretrial hearings and motions;
(5) Trial transcripts;
(6) Summation;
(7) Jury charge;
(8) Jury requests/read backs;
(9) Verdict;
(10) Sentencing;
(11) Plea allocutions of co-defendants;
(12) Direct appeal appellate and response briefs;
(13) Reply/supplemental brief;
(14) Decision on appeal; and
(15) Anything else of interest in the court file.

Ask your attorney for copies of these documents and transcripts. If your attorney does not have complete transcripts, you may need to call the criminal courthouse to obtain copies.

For your rap sheet, send a request to:

Record Review Unit
New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services Civil Identification Bureau
4 Tower Place
Albany, NY 12203.

In your request, you should include your name, date of birth, Social Security Number, and D.I.N. number. You can also ask them to rush processing of your file if you need the information quickly. Otherwise, it can take eight weeks or longer to receive your rap sheet. You should send the request in a facility envelope, if possible.

You also have a right to obtain pre-sentencing reports, though you may be asked to show a factual need for the reports.[155] To get them, send a written request addressed "To Whom It May Concern" to the Record

154. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law §§ 94–95 (McKinney 2008).
155. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 390.50 (McKinney 2005).

Review Unit (see above address), with your name, birth date, indictment number, sentencing court, the address where you would like the information to be sent, and a signed release authorizing another person to receive the information, if necessary.

(iv) Documentation of battering

Documentation of battering should include:

(1) Medical records of injuries from abuse;
(2) Mental health records showing your diminished capacity at the time of the crime and/or the stress, fear and anxiety caused by living in a violent relationship;
(3) Orders of protection;
(4) Police reports related to the abuse; and
(5) Photographs showing physical injury.

Try to obtain copies of any relevant records from hospitals, clinics, private doctors, or mental health clinicians, as well as police reports of incidents of domestic violence.

(v) Affidavits or letters of support

You should also include affidavits and letters of support in your petition. An affidavit is a written statement that the author signs and swears to be true in front of someone who is authorized to administer an oath, such as a notary public. You can ask family members, friends, co-workers, doctors, neighbors, therapists, and other people involved in your life to submit an affidavit. You can also ask them to submit letters of support. The affidavit or letter of support should explain that you were battered and/or describe the crime. When you submit the affidavits or letters in your petition, you should state whether these people testified at your criminal trial.[156]

I. Compassionate Release for Persons with Terminal Diseases

Thirty-six states have programs that allow for the release of dying or seriously ill prisoners.[157] For example, California has a compassionate release procedure that allows the court to re-sentence or recall the sentence.[158] You must have an incurable illness that will produce death within six months or be permanently medically incapacitated (as determined by a physician employed by the Department of Corrections), and you must not pose a threat to public safety. This does not apply if you are sentenced to death or to a term of life without the possibility of parole. If you are incarcerated in California and are interested in receiving a compassionate release, you or someone you designate should contact the chief medical officer of the prison or the Director of Corrections.[159]

Every state's rules are different, and many states have recently implemented new programs or are considering new legislation on this issue. For example, in 2008, Alabama, North Carolina, and Wyoming introduced new compassionate release programs.[160] If you have a serious or terminal illness or are elderly, you should check to see if your state has a compassionate release program.

New York State prisons also release some prisoners through medical parole.[161] To be eligible, you must have a terminal health condition.[162] You must also be so incapacitated or debilitated that you cannot care for yourself.[163] To prove this, you must have a physician's certification that you are "severely restricted in [your]

156. Albany Law School, Post-Conviction Remedies Clinic Clemency Manual 6–7 (1996).

157. Marty Roney, 36 States Release Ill or Dying Inmates, USA Today, Aug. 14, 2008 (listing states with a medical release program).

158. See Cal. Penal Code § 1170(e)(2) (West 2004 & Supp. 2008).

159. Cal. Penal Code § 1170(e)(3) (Deering 2009).

160. See Ala. Code § 14-8-80 (2008); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 15A-1369 (2008); Wyo. Stat. § 7-13-424 (iv) (Supp. 2008).

161. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law. See also State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf; N.Y. State Div. of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole Release and Supervision 8–9 (2010), available at https://parole.state.ny.us/intro_handbook.html (providing additional procedures and guidelines).

162. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

163. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as ability to self-ambulate [move around] and to care for [yourself]."[164] Not only must you have a doctor's certification, but the Commissioner of DOCS (or someone authorized by the Commissioner) must also certify both the doctor's diagnosis and your incapacity. Officials will consider the length of and reason for your incarceration, as well as your rap sheet. You are not eligible if you are serving a sentence for first or second degree murder, first degree manslaughter, or any sex offense (defined by Article 130 of the New York Penal Law), or an attempt to commit any of these crimes.[165] Even if you are not eligible for medical parole because your initial parole eligibility date is past, you may be eligible for a full review by the Board of Parole of your case for medical reasons.[166]

The New York medical parole process has three steps.[167] First, if you want to begin the process, you have a few options.[168] If you are currently in prison and you think you might be eligible, you need a physician's certification to start the process. To get this, you or someone acting on your behalf must make a request to the Commissioner of DOCS or the Division of Health Services that you be considered for medical parole.[169] If you are eligible, the Commissioner has discretion to order a medical evaluation and discharge plan. A physician employed by DOCS, or by a medical facility used by DOCS, can perform the evaluation. During the evaluation, the physician will make observations on the following: the disease, syndrome, or terminal condition you suffer from; the likelihood of your recovery; the extent of your debilitation or physical incapacity and its possible duration; the medications and dosages you are currently taking; and your ability to administer them to yourself.[170]

The second step begins when the medical evaluation report plan is sent to the Associate Commissioner, who will advise the Commissioner whether you meet the criteria for medical parole. The Associate Commissioner will determine whether you are "so debilitated or incapacitated as to create a reasonable probability that [you are] physically incapable of presenting any danger to society."[171] If the Commissioner decides that you meet the criteria for medical parole, the matter is referred to the Board of Parole for consideration. At that time, the Central Health Services staff and the correctional facility will begin to prepare a medical discharge plan. The medical discharge plan includes information on the level of care you will need, a description of special equipment or transportation needs, a description of your participation in the discharge plan, home-care plans if applicable, a description of any support needed by you or your care-giver, a report on the status of applications for Public Assistance or Medicaid, and a report on the status of applications for institutional placement. If it appears that you are in need of Public Assistance, an application will be sent to the Department of Social Services.[172]

If you can get both the physician's certification and the Commissioner's certification, and there is no other reason you would be ineligible, you may receive compassionate release, also called medical parole.[173] revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf.

---

164. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf.

165. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf; N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(1)(a) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that New York Executive Law § 259-r is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

166. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf.

167. For an explanation of the process and problems with compassionate release in New York, see John A. Beck, Compassionate Release from New York State Prisons: Why Are So Few Getting Out?, 27 J.L. Med. & Ethics 216 (1999).

168. Physicians in the prison system can also initiate the request for you. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf (stating that someone acting on the prisoner's behalf or a department employee may also make the request).

169. See State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf.

170. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf; N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(2)(a) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008).

171. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(2)(b) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

172. State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No.4304, Medical Parole (1997) (as revised Feb. 1, 2000), available at http://www.docs.state.ny.us/Directives/4304.pdf.

173. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, New York State Parole Handbook: Questions and Answers Concerning Parole

However, getting through the third phase of formal review by the Board of Parole can be very difficult. The process has many steps and can take a long time.[174] Before the Board of Parole releases you, there are a few other things that must happen. The judge who sentenced you, the District Attorney, and the attorney who represented you will all be notified that you might receive parole, and they can each submit comments within fifteen days.[175] Additionally, DOCS must provide "an appropriate medical discharge plan" to the Board of Parole.[176] The Board must assess whether, considering your medical condition, it is reasonably possible you will live outside of prison without breaking the law. It must also consider whether letting you out on such a release might be harmful to society, or will go against society's idea of fairness, taking into account the seriousness of your crime. Another consideration the Board will make is whether your release will "undermine respect for the law."[177] The process can take months, so it is very important to start it as soon as you become eligible.

If parole is ultimately granted, the health services staff will send copies of all appropriate medical records to the physician or facility that will care for you. Once you are released, you must get medical care as appropriate and remain under the care of a physician.[178] Every six months after your release, the Board will review your case, deciding whether to let you stay out of prison by renewing the grant of parole.[179] Each time, you will need to submit to a medical examination.[180]

J. Federal Sentences

This Part explains the different ways that you can be released early from your federal sentence. In general, there are four main ways that you can get out before your full sentence is served.

First, you can earn credit for time you served in prison prior to beginning your sentence. To learn more about what types of time previously served can be used to shorten your sentence, see Part C(1) of this Chapter, which describes this option in more detail.

Second, you may be able reduce your sentence by helping the government investigate or prosecute other people. There is no guarantee, though, that your sentence will be reduced if you provide such assistance. Even if your sentence is reduced, it is up to the court to decide by how much it will reduce your sentence. To determine if you are eligible for this type of reduction, see Part C(2) of this Chapter, which explains this option in more detail.

Third, the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) can shorten your sentence by (1) awarding you "good conduct time credits," (2) granting you early release for participation in a Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP), (3) granting you release under the Second Chance Act, or (4) granting you compassionate relief. To determine if you are eligible for these programs, learn how to apply for these programs, and understand their potential effect on your sentence, see Part C(3) of this Chapter.

Finally, in very rare cases, the President of the United States can grant you executive clemency, which releases you from your prison sentence and/or your term of supervised release. The President can also forgive your crime after you have finished serving your sentence and shown your remorse and rehabilitation. Federal executive clemency is discussed in Part C(5) of this Chapter.

This Part also explains federal supervised release. Federal supervised release is an additional sentence that a judge can impose that you must serve after you complete your prison sentence. During a period of federal supervised release your conduct will be monitored by a probation officer to make sure that you do not violate any of the conditions of your supervised release. Federal supervised release and its conditions can be

---

Release and Supervision 8 (2007), available at http://parole.state.ny.us/handbook.pdf.

174. See generally John A. Beck, Compassionate Release from New York State Prisons: Why Are So Few Getting Out?, 27 J.L. Med. & Ethics 216 (1999) (highlighting inefficiencies in New York medical parole and suggesting changes).

175. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(1)(c) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

176. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(2)(c) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

177. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(1)(b) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

178. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(4)(b) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

179. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(4)(a), (e) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

180. N.Y. Exec. Law § 259-r(4)(d) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2008). Note that this law is scheduled to expire on September 1, 2011, and after this date, you must check for the new, updated version of this law.

revoked, terminated, or modified, which could result in your being sentenced to an additional term of imprisonment. Part C(4) of this Chapter explains federal supervised release in more detail.

K. Credit for Time Served

In addition to the time you spend serving your current federal sentence you can receive credit for time that you already served in prison after the date you committed your current federal offense but before you began serving your current sentence. The amount of time that is credited towards your sentence for "time served" is determined by the Attorney General or the BOP after the district court announces your sentence.[181] District courts cannot directly order that time previously served be credited to reduce the length of your current sentence. You can challenge the amount of time credited towards your sentence only after exhausting the administrative remedies available with the BOP.[182]

You can only receive credit for time spent in official detention. The Supreme Court in Reno v. Koray found "official detention" to mean time spent under federal detention.[183] This does not include time on release, like on bail or under house arrest. The BOP interprets Reno v. Koray to mean that you are "not entitled to any time credit off the subsequent sentence, regardless of the severity or degree of restrictions, if such release was a condition of bond or release on own recognizance, or as a condition of parole, probation or supervised release."[184] However, you still can receive credit for time spent in a community treatment center or lower security placement if it is ordered as a condition of your presentence detention or because of overcrowding in federal facilities.[185]

There are three types of credit that can count against your sentence as "time served":

(1) time actually spent serving a federal sentence;
(2) time previously served; and
(3) time in non-federal pre-detention custody when you are denied bail under a federal detainer.[186]

The first category—time actually spent serving a federal sentence—refers to the time spent serving your current federal sentence. Your federal sentence does not begin until the date you are "received in custody awaiting transportation to" or until you arrive voluntarily to begin serving your sentence at the official facility where you will be serving your federal sentence.[187] The time you serve can be reduced even further if you obtain good conduct time credits[188] and/or early release under the RDAP.[189]

The second category—time previously served—allows credit to be applied for time previously served in official detention (state, foreign, or federal) before the date when your federal sentence began. In general, credit can apply from time that you spent in detention for (1) your current offense prior to sentencing, or (2) any other offense for which you were arrested after you committed the current offense, provided that the time has not been credited against another sentence.[190] For example, you can include the time you spent in federal custody after arrest on your federal charge.[191] This includes the time spent in federal custody before sentencing, including time spent in state proceedings.[192]

---

181. United States v. Wilson, 503 U.S. 329, 333, 112 S. Ct. 1351, 1353, 117 L. Ed. 2d 593, 599 (1992).

182. United States v. Whaley, 148 F.3d 205, 207 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that a district court does not have jurisdiction to hear an prisoner's appeal to a sentencing determination until the prisoner has requested review with the BOP and exhausted all of his administrative remedies).

183. Reno v. Koray, 515 U.S. 50, 61, 115 S. Ct. 2021, 2027, 132 L. Ed. 2d 46, 57 (1995) (holding that the time spent by the plaintiff in a community treatment center while on bail would not be credited against his federal sentence, as he was on release and thus not in official detention).

184. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-14G (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

185. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-14F (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

186. Stackpole v. Williamson, No. 3:CV-07-0396, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54992, at *6–7 (M.D. Penn. July 30, 2007).

187. 18 U.S.C. § 3585(a) (2006).

188. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b) (2006).

189. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e) (2006).

190. 18 U.S.C. § 3585(b) (2006).

191. In Jonah R. v. Carmona, the Ninth Circuit applied these provisions to grant juveniles credit for time spent in pre-detention custody. 446 F.3d 1000, 1010 (9th Cir. 2006).

192. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-16 to 1-16A (1997); available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

You may also be able to receive credit for the time (after your federal offense) that you spent in custody serving another sentence that was not and will not be counted towards any sentence. For example, if you were serving time in official detention for a state or foreign sentence that was later vacated and you were not re-sentenced, you can include this time. Likewise, if you were serving a federal, state, or foreign sentence that was vacated and you were re-sentenced to a period shorter than that which you already served, the extra time beyond time already served on that sentence can be applied to your federal sentence.[193]

If you were arrested for a different offense after you committed the offense for which you were sentenced, and you spent time in official detention for that different offense, you can receive credit for that time you spent in detention prior to receiving the sentence you are now serving.[194] You can also receive credit for time in a state facility when a federal court has ordered that your federal and state sentences run concurrently (at the same time). While a state court decision may recommend that your state and federal sentences run concurrently, many courts have held that federal authorities do not need to follow the state's recommendation. Therefore, any time spent serving the state sentence in a state facility while waiting for transport or transfer to the federal facility will not be credited against your sentence as time already served.[195] However, if you are first convicted in state court and later convicted in federal court, the federal court can order that your sentences run concurrently, starting on the date that the federal sentence is announced or imposed by the court.[196] If your federal sentence is decided before or after your state sentence, it must state specifically that it is to run concurrently with your state sentence or it will automatically run consecutively.[197] Only the time that you remained in state prison after the federal sentence was pronounced can be credited towards your federal sentence.

Note that you cannot "double count" credit for any previous time served in state or federal prison that has already been counted against your state sentence or a different federal sentence.[198] This rule includes time spent on detainer related to your trial and prosecution for unrelated federal charges,[199] as well as time served in federal pre-sentence custody that has been credited to your state sentence.[200] A district court cannot apply credits for time previously served to your federal sentence; only the Attorney General of the United States can do this.[201]

The third category covers time served in non-federal pre-detention custody when you were denied bail because you were being detained on separate charges by the federal government. These are called "Willis

193. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28, at 1-17 (1997); available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

194. 18 U.S.C. § 3585(b)(2) (2006) (authorizing a defendant to receive credit for any time spent in official detention prior to the date the sentence commences, when that detention time was the result of any other charge for which the defendant was arrested after the commission of the offense for which the defendant was sentenced).

195. Leal v. Tombone, 341 F.3d 427, 429 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that federal authorities are not required to follow state recommendations for state and federal sentences to run concurrently and therefore are under no obligation to credit time served in state prison that could have been served in federal prison if authorities had chosen to commence transfer earlier (citing Taylor v. Sawyer, 284 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 2002) and Bloomgren v. Belaski, 948 F.2d 688, 690–91 (10th Cir. 1991)).

196. 18 U.S.C. § 3584(a) (2006); Johnson v. Wrigley, No. CV F 07-00714 OWW SMS HC, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77145, at * 7–8 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 17, 2007) (holding that the time a plaintiff served in state prison before being given his federal sentence could not be credited against the federal sentence).

197. 18 U.S.C. § 3584(a) (2006).

198. United States v. Wilson, 503 U.S. 329, 337, 112 S. Ct. 1351, 1356, 117 L. Ed. 2d 593, 602 (1992); Johnson v. Wrigley, No. CV F 07-00714 OWW SMS HC, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77145, at *10 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 17, 2007).

199. United States v. Mills, 501 F.3d 9, 11–12 (1st Cir. 2007) (holding that the 365 days that plaintiff served in state prison that had been credited against his state sentence could not also be credited against his federal sentence where the federal detainer was completely unrelated to the reason he was in state custody).

200. United States v. Storm, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57019, at *4 (D. Utah Aug. 2, 2007) (finding plaintiff not entitled to credit for time served in official detention prior commencing his federal sentence when this same pre-custody time was already counted towards his state sentence), vacated, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 13024 (10th Cir. June 16, 2008).

201. In United States v. Wilson, the Supreme Court held that credit for time already served under 18 U.S.C. § 3585(b) cannot be granted by the court, but only by the U.S. Attorney General (or the BOP, acting pursuant to the Attorney General's orders) and only after the prisoner has begun serving his sentence. 503 U.S. 329, 334–35, 112 S. Ct. 1351, 1354–55, 117 L. Ed. 2d 593, 599–601 (1992); see also United States v. Peters, 470 F.3d 907, 909 (9th Cir. 2006) (reaffirming Wilson's holding that only the Attorney General, and not the district court, has the authority to grant prisoners credit for time served).

time credits."[202] You may be eligible for Willis time credits if you are sentenced to concurrent federal and state sentences, and your estimated federal release date is the same or later than your estimated state release date, without any reduction credits applied. Willis time credits are earned for the time you were held in non-federal pre-sentence custody from the date that the federal offense occurred to the date that your first sentence began (either the federal or the state sentence, whichever started earlier).[203] You cannot obtain any Willis time credits if you are released from your state sentence before your federal sentence begins and the presentence time was credited against your state sentence.[204] If your estimated federal release date, without any reduction credits applied, is earlier than your state estimated release date, then you may still be eligible for a reduction.[205]

L. Substantial Assistance Prosecuting Others

A second way that you may be released early from prison is by providing substantial help to the government to investigate or prosecute other people. Depending on how much help you provide, the judge can significantly reduce your sentence—the judge can even reduce your sentence below the statutory minimum.[206] Keep in mind, however, that there is no guarantee that your sentence will be reduced: the court may decide to keep your original sentence.[207]

If you think you might be able to help the government in this way and want to try to reduce your sentence, you should talk to the government about this as soon as possible after your sentencing. If you wait more than a year after sentencing before you help the government, it will be harder to get your sentence reduced and you might not be eligible anymore.

For you to be eligible for this reduction, the government must first file a motion with your sentencing judge, asking the judge to reduce your sentence.[208] If the government files this motion within a year of your sentencing,[209] the judge will just consider whether you gave "substantial assistance in investigating or prosecuting another person."[210] However, if the government files the motion more than one year after your sentencing, the judge can only reduce your sentence if you also meet one of the following three requirements:[211]

(1) You did not know about the information until a year or more after your sentencing;
(2) You told the government the information within one year of your sentencing but the information was not useful to the government until more than a year after your sentencing; or
(3) You had the information but did not realize it would be useful to the government until more than one year after your sentencing. As soon as you realized it was useful, you told the government the information.

You should be aware that even if you help the government, you are not guaranteed a reduced sentence. It is entirely up to the government whether you are eligible for this reduction. Unless the government files a motion asking the judge to reduce your sentence, the judge cannot reduce your sentence.[212] In addition, you should speak directly with a federal prosecutor about the possibility of obtaining a sentence reduction in

---

202. These credits are named after a case, Willis v. United States, 438 F.2d 923, 925 (5th Cir. 1971) (holding that defendant was entitled to credit for time served in state pre-sentence custody because this time was related to his federal offense where defendant was denied release on bail because of the federal detainer lodged against him).

203. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.23, at 1-22 (1997); available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_023.pdf.

204. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.23, at 1-22 (1997); available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

205. Kayfez v. Gazele, 993 F.2d 1288, 1290 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding unreasonable the BOP's decision to only apply credits for pre-sentence time to the longer non-federal sentence even where the amount of time in the credit was longer than the amount of time separating the federal and non-federal sentences and instead ordering the pre-sentence time be applied against the non-federal sentence and then applied to reduce the federal sentence to match the length of the newly calculated non-federal sentence); see also Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.23, at 1-22C (1997).

206. Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(b)(4).

207. Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(b).

208. Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(b)(1) & (2).

209. As used in this rule, "sentencing" means the oral announcement of the sentence. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(c).

210. Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(b)(1).

211. Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(b)(2)(A)–(C).

212. United States v. Mulero-Algarin, 535 F.3d 34, 38 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that only the government—not a judge—has the power to make a prisoner eligible for a sentencing reduction for substantial assistance).

exchange for information. Prison wardens and other BOP officials are not government officials and cannot file a motion with the court asking for a sentence reduction.[213]

M. Additional Ways the BOP Can Shorten a Federal Sentence

In addition to earning credit for time served and substantially helping the government prosecute others, you may receive early release through one of four BOP programs. First, you can earn good conduct time credits that can be used to reduce your sentence. Second, you may be eligible for early release after participation in a Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP). Third, you may be eligible for early release under the Second Chance Act. Finally, you may be eligible for compassionate relief. Keep in mind, however, that it is difficult to obtain compassionate relief, which is only awarded in the most extraordinary of circumstances. Each of the next subsections discusses these programs in more detail.

1. Good Conduct Time Credits

Federal good conduct time is similar to the state good-time credit discussed above in Part B(2) of this Chapter. If you are serving a sentence of more than one year, but less than life imprisonment, you can earn up to fifty-four days of good conduct time credits for each year served of your sentence, to be subtracted from your total sentence.[214] This means that for every year served in prison, you can shorten the total amount of time on your sentence by up to fifty-four days.[215]

(a) How to Earn Good Conduct Time Credit

Good conduct time credits are awarded for "exemplary compliance with institutional disciplinary regulations," or successfully following prison rules.[216] Credits are awarded at the BOP's discretion at the end of each year.[217] If you have not followed prison rules, you may receive fewer credits or no credits at all in any given year.[218]

(b) Amount of Good Conduct Time Credit You Can Earn

The amount of good conduct time you can earn depends on the date you committed your offense. If you committed your offense on or after November 1, 1987, but before September 13, 1994, you can earn up to fifty-four days credit towards serving your sentence for each year of your sentence served.[219] If you committed your offense on or after September 13, 1994, but before April 26, 1996, your good-conduct time will be credited towards your sentence if you have a high school diploma, a General Educational Development (GED) credential or are making satisfactory progress toward your GED.[220]

If you are serving a sentence for an offense you committed on or after April 26, 1996, and you do not have a high school diploma or a GED, the amount of days of credit you can earn in a year depends on whether you are making satisfactory progress towards receiving a GED. The education department at your prison will decide whether you are making satisfactory or unsatisfactory progress towards obtaining your GED.[221] If you have a GED or are making satisfactory progress towards obtaining one, then you can earn up to fifty-four credits for each year served.[222] If you do not have a GED and are not making satisfactory progress towards obtaining one, then you can only receive up to forty-two days of credit for each year

213. United States v. Ellis, 527 F.3d 203, 207–09 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that a warden within the BOP was unauthorized to make the motion as the "government" under Rule 35(b)).

214. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) (2006).

215. There has been debate about whether prisoners are entitled to more than 54 days of good conduct time credit per year. Recent court decisions suggest acceptance of the BOP's interpretation for computing good conduct time credits. See, e.g., Yi v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 412 F.3d 526, 534 (4th Cir. 2005) (upholding as reasonable the BOP's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) to mean credits can only be earned for years served and not years sentenced); Moreland v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 547 U.S. 1906, 1907 (2006) (denying certiorari on whether "term of imprisonment" meant sentence imposed or time served, but noting ten courts of appeals have accepted the BOP's interpretation).

216. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) (2006).

217. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) (2006).

218. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) (2006).

219. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(a) (2006).

220. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(b) (2006).

221. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5884.03(7)(a), at 3 (2006), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5884_003.pdf.

222. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(c)(1) (2006).

served.[223] You can change your progress status during the year from unsatisfactory to satisfactory in order to become eligible for the full fifty-four credits.[224]

If you are serving a sentence longer than 366 days, then after 366 days in prison the BOP will decide how many of the fifty-four possible credits you have earned for that year.[225] Any of the possible credits that you did not earn that year are lost and cannot be earned back by you in the following year(s).[226] One year later, the BOP will review your case again to determine how many credits you have earned for the 365 days you served since the last assessment for good conduct time credits. This process will repeat every year until you have less than 365 days left to serve on your sentence. When you are a year away from your estimated release date, after taking into account the amount of good conduct time credits that you have earned, the amount of credits you can earn begins to be prorated (set into proportion for the amount of days you have left to serve in that year by applying the "GTC formula"[227]).[228] Your good conduct time credits are not secure until you are actually released from prison.[229] Therefore, you can lose your good-time credits for the current year and all previous years up until your actual release from prison,[230] as described in the next Section of this Chapter. If you do, your estimated release date will be recalculated and you will lose the benefit of your good conduct time credits.[231] During the last year of your sentence, the amount of credits you can earn is prorated (set in proportion to the amount of time served for that year) and should be credited to you within the last six weeks of your sentence.[232] Because you do not actually receive your credits until you are released from custody,[233] you can lose credits that you have earned, as described in the next section of this Chapter.

(c) Loss of Good Conduct Time Credit

If you violate prison regulations or bring an unfounded (or "frivolous") lawsuit,[234] you may lose unvested good conduct time credit as punishment.[235] This Chapter does not discuss the consequences of bringing a frivolous lawsuit, so you must read JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for more information about this possibility.

Note, though, that you cannot lose your good-time credits if your credits have already vested, that is, if your offense was committed on or after November 1, 1987 but before September 13, 1994, or your offense

223. 28 C.F.R. § 523.20(c)(2) (2006).

224. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5884.03(7)(d), at 3 (2006), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5884_003.pdf.

225. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(k), at 1-78R (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

226. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(k), at 1-78R (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

227. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(g), at 1-44–1-47 (1992), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf. The GCT formula is used to ensure that the amount of time served plus the amount of GCT time granted exactly equals the number of days in your total sentence. The GCT formula is applied by multiplying the number of days in your sentence by 0.148. For example, if your sentence is one year and one day (the minimum length to be eligible for good conduct time credits), you cannot earn 54 days for that year, because after subtracting 54 GCT days from your sentence, you will not have served 365 days, and therefore could not have earned the full 54 days allowed per year of time served. Instead, the maximum amount of good conduct time days you can earn for a sentence of one year and one day using the GCT formula is 47 days. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(g), at 1-47 (1992), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf. To determine how many days of good conduct time you could earn based on how many days are left to be served on your sentence, see Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(g), at 4-1–4-6, (1992), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

228. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) (2006).

229. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(k), at 1-78S (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

230. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5880.28(3)(k), at 1-78S (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5880_028.pdf.

231. See Prison Litigation Reform Act § 809, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1932 (1996); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.07 ch. 4, app. at 1 (2003), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_007.pdf.

232. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(1) (2006).

233. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(b)(2) (2006).

234. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.07(1)(a) ch. 5, at 1 (2003), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_007.pdf.

235. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.07(1)(a) ch. 5, at 1 (2003), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_007.pdf.

was committed on or after September 13, 1994, but before April 26, 1996 and you have made satisfactory progress in obtaining your GED. If your offense occurred on or after April 26, 1996, your credits have not already vested (been credited and applied against your sentence) and will not vest until your release. Therefore, you can lose good-time credits as a result of committing a prohibited act.[236]

Before the BOP can take away your good conduct time credits for alleged misconduct, there are several steps that the staff at your institution must take. First, a staff member who believes that you have violated prison regulations must file an Incident Report with the Lieutenant at your facility.[237] A staff member will then investigate the incident.[238] At the beginning of the investigation, you should be given a copy of the Incident Report, unless there is good cause for delivery at a later date.[239] The investigator will tell you what you are being charged with, provide you with a written copy of the charges, and ask for your statement on the incident. You can choose to give or not give a statement. Your silence can be used as evidence to show that you broke the rule, but it is not enough alone to prove that you broke the rule.[240]

The third step is an initial hearing by the Unit Discipline Committee (UDC). The UDC hearing will normally occur within three business days of the BOP becoming aware of your involvement in the incident.[241] Based on "some evidence"[242] that you either did or did not break the rule, the UDC can: (1) resolve the matter informally by imposing minor dispositions or sanctions; or (2) send it on for a full hearing before the Disciplinary Hearing Officer (DHO), if the charges are severe.[243] You should receive a written copy of the UDC decision before the end of the next business day.[244]

Only a DHO can take away your good-time credits.[245] At least twenty-four hours before your hearing in front of the DHO, you will receive written notice of the charges against you.[246] If your case is referred to the DHO, you have the option of selecting a staff member to represent you at the DHO hearing.[247] The staff member can not have been involved in the incident and must not have a relationship to you that would cause a conflict of interest. If the staff member you select is unable or unwilling to represent you, you can request a different staff member. However, if several staff members cannot or will not represent you, then the Warden will appoint a staff member to be your representative if you want one or if you are not able to represent yourself (for example, if you cannot read and write).[248] You will be asked to provide a list of any witnesses you want to call and what they will talk about at the hearing.[249] You and your witnesses can present documents and make statements to prove that you did not break the rules.[250] Based on at least some facts, the DHO will then decide whether or not you committed the prohibited act.[251] If the DHO finds that you did

---

236. See 28 C.F.R. § 541.13 (2007) (listing prohibited actions). Examples of actions that can result in the loss of GTC include: assaulting another person, escape from an escort or institution, fighting with another person, possession of a weapon, use of illegal drugs, engaging in sexual acts, stealing, refusing to take a drug or alcohol test, refusing to work or obey an order, gambling, being unsanitary or unclean, and using obscene language. 28 C.F.R. § 541.13 (2007).

237. 28 C.F.R. § 541.14(a) (2007). If the charge against you is categorized as less serious and the Lieutenant thinks that he or she can informally come up with a solution to the incident with you, then the charge will be dropped and the incident will not be listed in your file. 28 C.F.R. § 541.14(a) (2006).

238. 28 C.F.R. § 541.14(b) (2007).

239. 28 C.F.R. § 541.14(b)(2) (2007).

240. 28 C.F.R. § 541.14(b)(2) (2007).

241. 28 C.F.R. § 541.15(b) (2007).

242. Luna v. Pico, 356 F.3d 481, 487–88 (2d Cir. 2004) (citing Superintendent, Mass. Correct. Inst. v. Hill, 472 U.S. 445, 454, 105 S. Ct. 2768, 2773, 86 L. Ed. 2d 356, 364 (1985) (holding that at least some evidence is required before good conduct time credits can be taken away in a prison disciplinary hearing)).

243. 28 C.F.R. § 541.15 (2007).

244. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5270.07(1)(f)(3), ch. 6, at 3 (1994), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5270_007.pdf.

245. 28 C.F.R. § 541.16(c) (2007); 28 C.F.R. § 541.13, tbl. 4(1)(b.1) (2007).

246. 28 C.F.R. § 541.17(a) (2007).

247. 28 C.F.R. § 541.17(b) (2007).

248. 28 C.F.R. § 541.17(b) (2007).

249. 28 C.F.R. § 541.15(i) (2007).

250. 28 C.F.R. § 541.17(c) (2007).

251. 28 C.F.R. § 541.17(f) (2007).

not commit the act, then the incident will be taken off your record.[252] If the DHO finds that you did commit the act, then he or she can punish you, including taking away your good conduct time credits.[253]

When the DHO makes a decision on how much good conduct time credit to take away as punishment for your act, he will look at the repetition and severity of your violation (how bad it was and how often you committed the violation within a recent period of time).[254] There are four categories of offenses based on the seriousness of the violation: (1) Greatest, (2) High, (3) Moderate, and (4) Low Moderate.[255] The amount of good conduct time credits that you can lose increases with the level of your offense. The DHO can follow these guidelines, or can take away more or less credits based on aggravating (bad) or mitigating (good) factors in your case.[256]

If you were sentenced for an offense committed on or after April 26, 1996, or you were classified as "violent" under the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 and you committed a crime of violence on or after September 13, 1994, then the amount of good conduct time credits you can lose in a disciplinary hearing is described below.[257]

For a Greatest category offense the DHO can deduct at least forty days of credit, or if there is less than fifty-four days available for the prorated period, at least 75% of available good time for each act committed. For a High category offense, you can lose at least twenty-seven days of credit or at least 50% of the available good conduct time for each act committed if less than fifty-four days are in the period. For a Moderate category offense, the DHO does not have to deduct time unless you have been found to have committed two or more offenses at this level within the current anniversary period, in which case the minimum deduction is thirteen days or 25% of the available good conduct time if less than fifty-four days are available for the period. For a Low Moderate category offense, the DHO does not have to deduct time unless you committed three or more Low Moderate category offenses during the current anniversary period, in which case the minimum deduction is six days or 12.5% of available good time for a period less than fifty-four days.

(d) Challenging the Loss of Good-Time Credits

You can challenge the loss of good-time credit. Under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause, you have a protected liberty interest in your good conduct time credits.[258] The BOP must follow certain procedures in order to take your credits without violating your due process rights.[259] You should read JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings," which explains your due process rights and how to raise defenses and challenges to your treatment at disciplinary hearings.

The proper way to bring a lawsuit to challenge the loss of good-time credits is through a petition for a writ of habeas corpus under 28 USC §2241.[260] Before filing, you must read JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," to learn how to file a federal habeas corpus petition. Before you can bring a lawsuit in court

---

252. 28 C.F.R. § 541.18(a) (2007).

253. 28 C.F.R. § 541.18(b) (2007). If you were sentenced under the Sentencing Reform Act (convicted for an offense that happened on or after November 1, 1987, but before April 26, 1996) and have non-vested credits, the amount of credits you can lose is: (1) for a Greatest category case, between 24 and 41 days of GCT for that year; (2) for a High category offense, between 14 and 27 days of good-time credit: (3) for a Moderate offense, between one and 14 days GCT; (4) for a second Low category offense in six months, between one and seven days; (5) for a third Low category offense in six months, between one and 14 days. 28 C.F.R. § 541.13, tbl. 3 (2006). To restore your credits that are taken away (disallowed), you must request an immediate review or appeal the action. 28 C.F.R. § 541.13, tbl. 4(1)(b.1) (2007).

254. 28 C.F.R. § 541.13, tbl. 4(1)(b.1) (2007).

255. 28 C.F.R. § 541.13(a) (2007). See Table 3 for a list of offenses by category.

256. 28 C.F.R. § 541.13, tbl. 4(1)(b.1), (1)(b.1)(II) (2007).

257. See 28 C.F.R. § 541.13, tbl. 4(1)(b.1)(II) (2007).

258. Henson v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 213 F.3d 897, 898 (5th Cir. 2000) (recognizing federal prisoner's due process right to a hearing before removal of good-time credits, but noting not all the rights due in a criminal trial apply).

259. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 556, 557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974). For a full discussion of this case and these issues, see JLM, Chapter 18, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings."

260. Thomas v. Marberry, No. 06-CV-13282, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25408, at *4 (E.D. Mich. April 5, 2007) (holding that a habeas corpus petition is a proper means of challenging the loss of good-time credits in a disciplinary proceeding because it affects the way in which the sentence is being executed); see also Edwards v. Clarke, No. C07-5057RJB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24271, at *3 (W.D. Wash. April 2, 2007) (dismissing a federal prisoner's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim to recover his lost good conduct time credits because such a claim is challenging the length of confinement and finding that the correct claim for relief is a habeas corpus petition (citing Edwards v. Basilok, 520 U.S. 641, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906 (1997)).

to challenge the loss of good-time credits, you must exhaust your administrative remedies[261] as required under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). To avoid these consequences, you should also read JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," to learn about PLRA requirements.

This Section includes only a brief description of the federal administrative remedy procedures you will need to follow to challenge the loss of your good-time credits. You have twenty calendar days from when you receive the DHO Report to file an appeal.[262] Your appeal should be sent directly to the Regional Director for your region[263] and should include a separate completed, signed, and dated form BP-10 for each incident that is being appealed along with a copy of the DHO report.[264] If you cannot get a copy of the DHO report, include the date of your hearing and the charges brought against you.[265] The Regional Director should respond to your appeal within thirty days of receiving it.[266]

If the Regional Director does not remove the charges against you, the final administrative appeal step is to send an appeal to the General Counsel within thirty days of receiving the Regional Director's response.[267] Your appeal to the General Counsel should include a completed, signed, and dated form BP-11, a copy of the DHO report, a copy of your appeal to the Regional Director, and a copy of the Regional Director's response, along with the reason that you are appealing.[268] The General Counsel should provide you with a response to your appeal within 40 days of receiving it.[269]

The Regional Director or the General Counsel can reject your appeal if your forms contain obscene or abusive words or if there is something that needs to be corrected.[270] If your appeal was rejected because you need to fix information on the forms or provide additional information, your rejection letter will contain instructions about how to correct it and will give you a new deadline for resubmitting the form.[271] If the Regional Director rejects your appeal for reasons that cannot be corrected, you can appeal the rejection of your appeal to the General Counsel and request that the General Counsel order the Regional Director to decide your appeal.[272] After you have used all of these administrative remedies, you can file a habeas corpus case in federal court to challenge the loss of your good conduct time credits. However, if it would be futile (pointless) to exhaust your administrative remedies, then you may be able to seek a writ of habeas corpus before you have fully exhausted your remedies.[273]

2. Early Release under the Residential Drug Abuse Program

There are conditions you must meet in order to be able to participate in the Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP). There are also several additional requirements to be eligible for early release for successful completion of RDAP. If at any stage of application, admission, removal, or denial of early release status you do not agree with the decision in your case, you can appeal by using the same procedures

---

261. "Administrative remedies" are the internal procedures used within the BOP system to resolve your complaint. A federal court will not accept your case unless you have "exhausted" (used up) all the appeals and procedures within the BOP system. See JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information.

262. 28 C.F.R. § 542.14(a) (2007).

263. 28 C.F.R. § 542.14(d)(2) (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.13(d)(2), at 7 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_013.pdf.

264. 28 C.F.R. § 541.19 (2007).

265. 28 C.F.R. § 541.19 (2007).

266. 28 C.F.R. § 542.18 (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.13(12), at 10 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_013.pdf.

267. 28 C.F.R. § 542.15(a) (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.13(9)(a) at 7 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_013.pdf.

268. 28 C.F.R. § 542.15(b)(1) (2007).

269. 28 C.F.R. § 542.18 (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.13(12), at 10 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_013.pdf.

270. 28 C.F.R. § 542.17(a) (2007).

271. 28 C.F.R. § 542.17(b) (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.13(11)(b), at 9 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_013.pdf.

272. 28 C.F.R. § 542.17(c) (2006); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.13, at 10 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_013.pdf.

273. Vargas-Crispin v. Zenk, 376 F. Supp. 2d 301, 303 (E.D.N.Y 2005) (holding that a federal prisoner was allowed to seek a writ of habeas corpus before exhausting his administrative remedies where administrative appeals would have been futile because the BOP's interpretation of "term of imprisonment" was rigid and the time for the appeal would have gone on beyond the date for his release, making his claim moot).

described in the good conduct time section above.[274] Just like good conduct time, you must exhaust your administrative remedies before you can bring a lawsuit to challenge the BOP's decision.

(a) What is RDAP?

The Residential Drug Abuse Program (RDAP) is a federal program offered in some federal facilities[275] for prisoners with substance abuse problems. In RDAP, you participate in individual and group activities to learn to overcome your substance abuse problems.[276] RDAP is a 500-hour program that takes place over six to twelve months in a separate housing facility for RDAP participants.[277]

(b) How do You Get into RDAP?

Entry into RDAP is voluntary, and is determined by the drug abuse treatment coordinator through staff referrals and/or prisoner applications. If you want admission to a RDAP, you can receive a referral from or make a request to a staff member in your housing unit or on the drug treatment team for admission to RDAP.[278] If you request admission into a RDAP, the BOP will decide if you are eligible to participate in the residential portion. The BOP will also decide if you are eligible for early release under RDAP and will notify you of its decision.[279]

(c) Who is Eligible to Participate in RDAP?

Before you can participate in RDAP, the BOP must decide that you have a substance abuse problem, and you must be willing to participate in a residential substance abuse treatment program.[280] To be eligibile, you must also sign an agreement form stating that you understand your responsibilities in joining the RDAP.[281] Some of your responsibilities include not disrupting the staff, other group members, or activities of RDAP; completing all RDAP activities, including homework and group assignments; and not sharing information about other prisoners in the program.[282] To be admitted to RDAP, your security level needs to be within the range that can be handled at the RDAP facility.[283] In general, you can only be admitted to RDAP when you are thirty-six months from your release date.[284] Prisoners with serious mental impairments that would not allow them to fully participate in the program will not be allowed into RDAP.[285]

If you have a physical or medical disability that prevents you from living in a RDAP housing unit, you may still be eligible for early release if you meet all of the eligibility requirements for RDAP and have completed all of the program components of RDAP, including community-based treatment.[286]

Even if you cannot participate in RDAP, there are other substance abuse programs you may be able to join. However, these programs do not have the same early release benefits as RDAP. These other programs include drug abuse education classes,[287] non-residential drug abuse treatment,[288] and community transitional drug treatment. [289]

---

274. 28 C.F.R. § 550.60 (2007).

275. For an online list of facilities that have RDAP, follow the link "RDAP Locations" at http://www.bop.gov/inmate_programs/substance.jsp (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

276. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(5)(a) (2000 & Supp. 2008).

277. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(5)(a) (2000 & Supp. 2008); 28 C.F.R. § 550.56 (2007).

278. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(b) (2007).

279. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(2.3.1) ch. 2, at 2 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf; Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A761.055, Residential Drug Abuse Program Notice to Inmate (2004), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/forms/Bp_a761.pdf.

280. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(5)(B)(i) and (ii) (2000).

281. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(a)(3) (2007).

282. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A749.053, Agreement to Participate in a BOP Residential Drug Abuse Treatment Program (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/forms/Bp_a749.pdf.

283. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(a)(5) (2007).

284. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(a)(4) (2007).

285. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(a)(2) (2007).

286. Fed Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(4) (2009), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5331_002.pdf.

287. 28 C.F.R. § 550.54 (2007).

288. 28 C.F.R. § 550.55 (2007).

289. See Bureau of Prisons' Substance Abuse Treatment Frequently Asked Questions, available at http://www.bop.gov/inmate_programs/substanceabuse_faqs.jsp# (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

(d) Who May be Eligible for Early Release under RDAP?

To be eligible for early release under RDAP you must meet all four of the following requirements:

(1) You were convicted and sentenced for either
   a. federal offense that occurred on or after November 1, 1987;[290] or
   b. Washington D.C. offense on or after August 5, 2000; [291]
(2) You were sentenced for committing a non-violent offense;[292]
(3) The BOP categorizes you as having a "substance use disorder";[293]
(4) You successfully completed all stages of a RDAP;[294] and
(5) You are Financial Responsibility Program compliant.[295]

The second requirement prevents you from receiving early release under RDAP if you were sentenced for committing a violent offense.[296] The BOP can look at both the actual crime for which you were sentenced as well as the circumstances surrounding that crime. You can also be ineligible if you committed other offenses identified at the Director's discretion.[297] These other offenses that can make you ineligible for early release include the following: a felony that had actual or threatened physical force against a person or someone else's property as an element or that would likely involve the use of force against a person or property; a crime involving a firearm, explosive or other dangerous weapon; a crime involving sexual abuse of children; a crime with an enhanced base offense level because of the threat of or use of force; or a crime with a specific offense enhancement for threat of or use of force.[298]

The third requirement for early release under RDAP is that you have a substance abuse problem. You can meet this requirement if a drug abuse coordinator finds that you have a "drug use disorder," which is a "substance abuse or dependence," as defined in the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM). Any written documentation in your Pre-Sentence Investigation (PSI) report or central file showing that you previously used the same substance can also be used to verify your substance abuse problem.[299] Specifically, the following three criteria are used to demonstrate a substance abuse problem:

(1) the PSI report shows that alcohol or other drug use contributed to your committing the offense for which you are currently serving a sentence;
(2) you are serving a sentence for violating your probation, parole, or supervised release, because of alcohol or drug use; or
(3) your sentencing judge recommended that you receive substance abuse treatment.[300]

---

290. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(4)(a)(2)(i) (2009).

291. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(4)(a)(2)(ii) (2009).

292. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(4)(a)(2)(i)-(ii) (2009).

293. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(4)(a)(1) (2009).

294. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(4)(a)(3) (2009). If you already completed a RDAP before October 1, 1989, you may still be eligible for early release under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e). In order to be eligible, BOP staff must determine that the program you completed met all of the current RDAP treatment criteria, you must sign an agreement that you understand your program responsibilities, complete a refresher course and transitional treatment in a community-based program, and you must not commit a prohibited 1000 level act or act involving drugs or alcohol. 28 C.F.R. § 550.58(a)(2) (2007).

295. See 28 C.F.R. §545.

296. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5162.04, at 3–18, available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5162_004.pdf (last visited Mar. 16, 2011) (listing offenses that are considered violent and will prevent you from participating in RDAP).

297. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5162.04(7), at 8–18 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5162_004.pdf. In Lopez v. Davis, the Supreme Court held reasonable the Bureau of Prisons's regulations making certain prisoners automatically ineligible for early release under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e) if there was a firearm involved in their offense, even where the underlying was categorized as a non-violent offense. Lopez v. Davis, 531 U.S. 230, 244, 121 S. Ct. 714, 724, 148 L. Ed. 2d 635, 648 (2001).

298. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5162.04(7), (7)c, at 8–16 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5162_004.pdf (listing offenses that are included in this category and offenses that may create ineligibility for RDAP at the Director's discretion).

299. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.4.1)(a)(1), at 3–4 (1996), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

300. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5310.12(5.1)(A), at 5-1 (1993), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5310_012.pdf.

You also may be classified as having a drug abuse problem during your participation in a drug abuse education course or non-residential drug abuse treatment after testing positive during a urine test.[301]

The final requirement is that you successfully complete all stages of RDAP. RDAP has three different stages, each of which you must finish before you can even be considered for early release. The first stage of RDAP is the unit-based program that takes place over a twelve month period.[302] The unit-based program has three phases: orientation, intensive treatment and skill development, and pre-release planning. To complete the unit-based program, you must attend and participate in group activities and pass a test given at the end of each subject covered in treatment.[303] If you do not pass a test for any given subject, you will typically be allowed to take the test again.[304]

The second stage of RDAP is transitional drug treatment services. Transitional drug treatment can take place either in an institution (prison) or in the community.[305] If your release date is within six months, you may be placed in a community-based program. Otherwise, you must participate in institution follow-up services for a minimum of one hour per month, for up to twelve months. You must also join a non-residential drug treatment program after your return to a general population housing unit.[306]

The final stage of RDAP is six months of community-based treatment for one to four hours each week. This treatment can take place in a Community Corrections Center or in home-confinement.[307] You will be required to sign another agreement form[308] to participate in the community transition program. The rules for participation in this program are almost identical to those in the unit-based portion of RDAP.[309] If your release date is earlier than the date you will complete the community-based portion of your treatment, your release date may be extended to allow you to finish the program.[310]

Certain people are not allowed to get early release through RDAP under any circumstances. You cannot receive early release under RDAP if you:

(1) are a pre-trial or immigration detainee;
(2) are in federal prison for committing a state or military crime;
(3) are not eligible for participation in community-treatment programs as determined by the Warden at your facility;
(4) have a past conviction for homicide, forcible rape, robbery, aggravated assault, or child sexual abuse offenses;
(5) are currently incarcerated for committing a felony that had as an element, or given the crime committed, would likely involve the use of actual or threatened physical force against a person or someone else's property, or that involved a firearm, explosive or other dangerous weapon, or that involved sexual abuse of children;[311] or
(6) were previously released on RDAP early release.[312]

---

301. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.4.1)(a)(1), at 3–4 (1996), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

302. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5310.12(5.1)(D), at 5-2 to 3 (1993), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5310_012.pdf.

303. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(c) (2007).

304. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.4.3)(c), at 5-5 (1996), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

305. See Bureau of Prisons' Substance Abuse Treatment Frequently Asked Questions, available at http://www.bop.gov/inmate_programs/substanceabuse_faqs.jsp# (last visited Sept. 19, 2008).

306. 28 C.F.R. § 550.59(a) (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5310.12(5.1)(E), at 5-3–4 (1993), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5310_012.pdf; Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.2), at 5-1 to 2 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

307. 28 C.F.R. § 550.58(a)(3)(i) (2007); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.2.1), at 5-1 (1996), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

308. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A750.053, Agreement to Participate in Community Transition Program (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/DataSource/execute/dsFormLoc.

309. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 7430.02(8)(c), at 6 (1999), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/7430_002.pdf.

310. 28 C.F.R. § 550.58(c)(3) (2007).

311. 28 CRF § 550.58 (2007).

312. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(5)(7) (2009).

(e) How Might RDAP Affect Your Sentence?

If you meet the requirements for RDAP early release, the BOP can reduce your prison sentence by up to one year, in addition to any good conduct time credit reductions you have received.[313] Your case will be reviewed several times to determine if you remain eligible for early release under RDAP.[314] While the BOP has the ability to reduce your sentence after you successfully complete RDAP, the BOP is not required to do so.[315] If at any time you commit a prohibited act, fail to complete all RDAP requirements, or the BOP discovers it made an error in determining your eligibility, BOP can remove RDAP early release status.[316] The denial of early release after you successfully complete RDAP does not violate any contractual rights guaranteeing your release or the Constitution's Ex Post Facto Clause.[317] You can appeal your denial of early release under RDAP using the same procedures explained in the loss of good conduct time credit section but you must write in the first sentence of your appeal that you are seeking review for denial of early release eligibility under 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e).[318]

(f) How Can Your Participation in RDAP End?

Your participation in RDAP can end if you choose to voluntarily end your participation in RDAP, fail to pass your subject tests, or are removed from RDAP by the BOP.[319] Once you are no longer in RDAP, you lose your early release eligibility and return to your previous housing unit or facility.[320] The drug treatment coordinator may remove you from the program for disruptive behavior and must remove you if you are disruptive four times.[321] Normally, the drug treatment coordinator will give you one warning before removing you.[322] Also, if you do not follow all of the rules and regulations of RDAP you will be expelled from the program.[323]

Your participation in RDAP may also be terminated immediately if an incident report[324] is filed and the DHO finds you (1) used or possessed alcohol or drugs; (2) were violent or threatened violence against staff or another prisoner; or (3) committed a 100 level[325] prohibited act.[326]

If the warden or the drug abuse treatment program coordinator removes you from RDAP, you may request readmission by submitting a "Request to Staff Member" Form.[327] The drug abuse treatment program

---

313. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(e)(2)(B) (2006).

314. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.02(7) (2009), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5331_002.pdf. Your early release can be delayed or reduced if the Regional Drug Abuse Treatment Coordinator determines you need more time to complete your treatment or additional treatment will make it more likely you will not return to drug use or criminal conduct. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 7430.02(15)(f), at 15 (1999), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/7430_002.pdf.

315. Richardson v. Joslin, 501 F.3d 415, 420 (5th Cir. 2007) (finding that defendant had no liberty interest in a reduction of his sentence after he successfully completed RDAP since BOP has "the authority, but not the duty" to reduce a term of imprisonment.); see Lopez v. Davis, 531 U.S. 230, 241, 121 S. Ct. 714, 722, 148 L. Ed. 2d 635, 646 (2001); see also Fed. Bureau of Prisons Form BP-A749.053, Agreement to Participate in a BOP Residential Drug Abuse Treatment Program (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/DataSource/execute/dsFormLoc.

316. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5331.10(6), at 7 (2003), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5331_010.pdf.

317. Seacrest v. Gallegos, No. 01-128930, Fed. Appx. 755, 766, 2002 U.S. App. LEXIS 1094, at 4 (10th Cir. Jan. 25, 2002) (unpublished) (finding the BOP's decision to change prisoner's status from eligible to ineligible for early release consideration did not violate the Ex Post Facto Clause, since the decision did not affect the legal definition of the crime or increase the prisoner's punishment, and no contractual relationship existed between the prisoner and the BOP).

318. 28 C.F.R. § 550.60 (2007).

319. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(d) (2006).

320. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(d)(3) (2006).

321. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10 (5.4.4) ch. 5, at 6A (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

322. 28 C.F.R. § 550.56(d)(2) (2006).

323. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A749 053, Agreement to Participate in a BOP Residential Drug Abuse Treatment Program (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/forms/Bp_a749.pdf.

324. See Part B(2) for more information on good-conduct time.

325. See 28 C.F.R. § 541.13 (2006) for a complete list of 100 level prohibited acts.

326. 28 C.F.R. §§ 550.56(d)(2)(i),(ii),(iii) (2006); Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A749 (2002), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/forms/Bp_a749.pdf.

327. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.4.4) ch. 5, at 5–6 (1997), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf; see also Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A148.055 (1998), available at coordinator will decide whether to readmit you to the program. Even if you are readmitted to RDAP, you will not receive credit for the parts of the program you completed before you were expelled.

3. Early Release Under the Second Chance Act

The Second Chance Act of 2007 is a new federal law designed to improve the system for releasing federal prisoners.[328] This Act authorizes the BOP to grant early release to prisoners who meet the following three conditions:[329]

(1) Are over the age of sixty-five;
(2) Have never been convicted of a violent crime or sex offense; and
(3) Have served ten years or 75% of their sentence.

Very few prisoners will be eligible for early release under this program. The Bureau of Prison recently estimated that only about 650 federal inmates (or 0.003% of all federal inmates) will meet the requirements.[330] However, the BOP is beginning a pilot program to test this new early release system. The program began in October 1, 2008. If you think you are eligible for early release under this program, you should ask your warden whether your prison or jail is participating in the program.

4. Federal Compassionate Release

Compassionate release is an extraordinary remedy that is given very rarely. Compassionate release allows the Director of the BOP to recommend that your sentence be reduced to remove you immediately from prison. There are four situations in which compassionate relief might be granted:

(1) upon motion by the BOP Director for "extraordinary or compelling reasons"[331] that develop after the time of sentencing;
(2) upon motion by the BOP Director for people who are seventy years of age or older who have served at least thirty years of their sentence and are determined not to be threats to society;[332]
(3) to modify a sentence under Rule 35 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (to correct a clear error within seven days of the sentence or for providing substantial assistance to the government to investigate or prosecute someone else);[333] or
(4) if a sentence was given based on a sentencing range that has since been lowered.[334]

This Section deals only with the first category: extraordinary or compelling reasons.

(a) What are "Extraordinary and Compelling" Reasons?

There are no formal definitions for "extraordinary and compelling" reasons. However, the U.S. Sentencing Commission provides four examples of what could be considered extraordinary and compelling reasons that might justify compassionate relief:[335]

(1) You have a terminal illness;[336]
(2) Your only family member who can care for your minor child(ren) is no longer able to do so due to death or incapacitation;[337]
(3) You have a permanent physical or medical condition, or worsening physical or mental health from getting older, and your medical condition does not allow you to properly care for yourself in prison and your condition is unlikely to improve through treatment;[338] or http://www.bop.gov/policy/forms/Bp_a148.pdf.

---

328. Second Chance Act of 2007, Pub. L. No. 110-199, 122 Stat. 657 (2008).

329. Second Chance Act of 2007, Pub. L. No. 110-199, § 231(g)(5), 122 Stat. 657, 688 (2008).

330. Douglas A. Berman, Another Report from the USSC Alternatives Symposium, July 24, 2008, available at http://sentencing.typepad.com/sentencing_law_and_policy/2008/07/another-report.html (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

331. See 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A) (2006), for offenses that happened on or after November 1, 1987. This section does not discuss the rules for offenses that occurred before November 1, 1987, which are governed by 18 U.S.C. § 4205(g).

332. 18 U.S.C § 3582(c)(1)(A)(ii) (2006).

333. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(B) (2006).

334. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) (2006).

335. 28 U.S.C. § 994(t) (2006).

336. 18 U.S.C. App'x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(A)(i) (2007).

337. 18 U.S.C. App'x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(A)(iii) (2007).

338. 18 U.S.C. App'x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(A)(ii) (2007).

(4) The BOP Director has found another reason you should be granted compassionate release.[339]

If you are petitioning for compassionate release because of an illness, your illness must either be terminal or prevent you from caring for yourself, as described in the first two examples. In addition to having a terminal or incapacitating illness, you also must not be a danger to society or be able to commit a further crime.[340] Normally, the BOP will only consider applications from prisoners who are "suffering from terminal medical conditions, or who are severely and permanently mentally or physically debilitated."[341]

(b) How Can You Apply for Compassionate Release?

It is important to know that you cannot make a motion directly to a court to reduce your sentence for compassionate release. If you file a motion yourself, the court will not reduce your sentence. The only way to obtain compassionate release from the court is through a motion made by the Director of the BOP.[342]

To receive this, you must first submit a motion (request) to your warden, asking for compassionate release. The request should be in writing. In the motion you must describe the extraordinary or compelling circumstances that did not exist when you were sentenced.[343] You must also describe your plan for release, including where you will live, how you will support yourself, and, if your reason is based on your health, where you will get medical care and how you will pay for it.[344]

If your reason for compassionate release is based on a medical condition, make sure to state that information at the beginning of your motion so that your request can be reviewed more quickly.

If the warden thinks your motion should be granted, he will send it to the Regional Director of the BOP.[345] The Regional Director will then review your motion, and if he thinks your motion should be granted, he will send it to the BOP's Office of General Counsel.[346] The General Counsel will then review your motion, and if he decides that you should be given compassionate release, he will ask for an opinion from the Medical Director (if your reason is health-related), or the Assistant Director of the Correctional Programs Division (for all other reasons).[347] Finally, the recommendation of the General Counsel, along with the opinion from the Medical or Assistant Director, will be sent to the Director of the BOP to make a final decision on your motion.[348]

If the Director approves your request, he will contact the U.S. Attorney. The U.S. Attorney will then make a motion to the court to have your sentence reduced.[349] The sentencing court will review the Director's motion and decide if there are extraordinary and compelling reasons to justify your release. If the sentencing court grants the motion, it will order your release. The warden at your facility will then release you.[350]

---

339. 18 U.S.C. App'x § 1B1.13, Application Note 1(A)(iv) (2007).

340. Leja v. Sabol, 487 F. Supp. 2d 1, 3 (D. Mass. 2007) (holding that the BOP's decision to deny release was not arbitrary or capricious because defendant's illness was not terminal and defendant was still able to commit crimes).

341. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Legal Resource Guide to the Federal Bureau of Prisons 40 (2008), available at http://www.bop.gov/news/PDFs/legal_guide.pdf.

342. See United States v. Smartt, 129 F.3d 539, 541 (10th Cir. 1997) (finding that even though the defendant had a medical condition that could be considered an extraordinary and compelling circumstance, the court could not approve his motion because the request was not made by the BOP Director); see also United States v. Tyler, 417 F. Supp.2d 80, 84 (D. Me. 2006) (denying relief pursuant to § 3582(c)(1)(A) because no motion was made by the BOP Director).

343. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(5)(a)(1), at 3 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.61 (2006).

344. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(5)(a)(2), at 3 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.61 (2006).

345. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(6)(a)(1), at 3–5 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(1) (2006).

346. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(6)(a)(2), at 5 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(2) (2006).

347. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(6)(a)(3), at 5 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(3) (2006).

348. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(6)(a)(3), at 5 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(3) (2006).

349. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(6)(a)(4), at 5 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(a)(4) (2006).

350. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(6)(b), at 5 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.62(b) (2006).

(c) Denial

It is possible that any of the officials described above may deny your motion. The official who denies your motion will send you written notice stating that your request has been denied and explaining why it was denied. If your request for compassionate relief is denied by the warden or the Regional Director, you can appeal the decision.[351] However, if you are denied by the General Counsel or the BOP Director, that decision is a final administrative decision and cannot be appealed.[352]

In order to challenge the BOP's decision, you must first go through all of the administrative remedies, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act.[353] Even if you are sick or believe that the BOP will not approve your motion on appeal, you must still exhaust all levels of the administrative remedy process. Only after you do this can you file a petition for writ of habeas corpus, which asks the court to reverse the warden's decision.[354] However, some district courts have ruled that they do not have jurisdiction to hear a habeas corpus petition challenging the denial of compassionate release by the warden or the BOP.[355] And some courts of appeals have reached similar decisions by denying review of the BOP's refusal to bring a motion on behalf of prisoners under 18 U.S.C. § 4205(g) (the other statute covered by the BOP policy statements on early release).[356] Other courts that have reviewed the BOP's decisions have been unwilling to find these decisions arbitrary and capricious, which is the standard for overturning these decisions.[357] In other words, it is very unlikely that the court will grant your appeal.

N. Federal Supervised Release

Federal supervised release is different from parole. Federal supervised release is not a way to get out of your sentence early. Instead, it is a period of supervision that you must serve after you are released from

---

351. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(7)(a), at 6 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. § 571.63(a) (2006).

352. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5050.46(7), at 6 (1998), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5050_046.pdf; 28 C.F.R. §§ 571.63(b)–(d) (2006).

353. See JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."

354. Leja v. Sabol, 487 F. Supp. 2d 1, 2–3 (D. Mass. 2007) (holding that perceived futility of request and/or medical condition do not relieve a prisoner of the requirement of exhaustion of administrative remedies).

355. United States v. Morales, 353 F. Supp. 2d 204, 205 (D. Mass. 2005) (dismissing habeas corpus petition by terminally ill prisoner who requested compassionate relief and release from prison so he could return to Colombia, live with his family, and obtain a heart transplant, and holding the court lacked statutory authority to reduce his sentence without a motion by the Director of the BOP); United States v. Etters, No. 04-20115-13-JWL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75731, at *1 (D. Kan. Sept. 28, 2007) (denying plaintiff's motion to modify her sentence to home imprisonment because the court lacked jurisdiction under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1) when no motion was made by the Director of the BOP). A few district courts have gone a step further, holding that even if you have exhausted your administrative appeals, the court will still not review the final decision made by the BOP under the Administrative Procedures Act because it is barred by the terms of 18 U.S.C. § 3582. See, e.g., Pham v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, No. 1:07-cv-0025-SEB-JMS, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38184, at *1–2 (S.D. In. May 23, 2007) (dismissing on summary judgment a request made by a defendant with a chronic heart condition to overrule the BOP's denial of compassionate release, and holding that the decision was assigned by law to the discretion of the BOP and was therefore unreviewable under the Administrative Procedures Act); Gutierrez v. Anderson, No. 06-1714 (JRT/JSM), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79580, at *2, 5–6 (D. Minn. Oct. 30, 2006) (finding that 18 U.S.C. § 3582 barred the court "from reviewing the Warden's decision not to recommend compassionate release" and therefore denying the terminally-ill plaintiff's motion to compel compassionate release).

356. Turner v. U.S. Parole Comm'n, 810 F.2d 612, 618 (7th Cir. 1987) (finding the Parole and Reorganization Act barred the court from reviewing the warden's rejection of the Parole Commissioner's recommendation to reduce plaintiff's sentence); Simmons v. Christensen, 894 F.2d 1041, 1043 (9th Cir. 1990) (same); Fernandez v. United States, 941 F.2d 1488, 1492–93 (11th Cir. 1991) (holding that, because the BOP had the exclusive authority to make motions under 18 U.S.C. § 4205(g), a court could not review the BOP's refusal to compel compassionate release).

357. United States v. Maldonado, 138 F. Supp. 2d 328, 333 (E.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding BOP's interpretation of "extraordinary and compelling circumstances," which covered only prisoners with a generally terminal medical condition that limited life expectancy by a predictable amount, was reasonable because it provided an objective way to limit eligibility while still allowing for truly exceptional circumstances to be taken into account); Hubbs v. Dewalt, NO. 05-CV-512-JBC, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27950, at *5, 11–12 (D. Ky. May 8, 2006) (unpublished) (holding BOP's interpretation of 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A), as applied to a prisoner who was a double-leg amputee, was reasonable and not arbitrary and capricious when the BOP staff based its decision on the fact that the sentencing court knew of the prisoner's condition at the time of sentencing and its interpretation of "extraordinary and compelling" was limited to terminally-ill prisoners who could not complete their sentence). In Dewalt, the court did not consider the other group of prisoners covered by the BOP's interpretation—those "who suffer from a severely debilitating and irreversible mental or physical medical condition and are unable to provide self-care." 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27950, at *5, 11–12 (D. Ky. May 8, 2006).

prison. Federal parole is not available for anyone who is convicted of committing a crime that took place on or after November 1, 1987. However, anyone who was convicted of a crime that took place on or after November 1, 1987, may have a term of federal supervised release included in his sentence. Under federal law, a judge may include a term of supervised release in a sentence of imprisonment for a felony or misdemeanor conviction. There are also certain situations in which a judge must include a period of supervised release in your sentence. For example, a judge must include a period of supervised release if you received a first-time conviction for a domestic violence offense or for other offenses that require that supervised release be a part of the sentence by statute.[358]

1. How long is supervised release?

Your sentencing judge will decide how long the supervised release will last. The judge will make this decision based on several factors. Some of these factors are the same factors that the judge considered when deciding your sentence of imprisonment.[359] Among other things, your sentencing judge will look at: the nature of your offense; the circumstances surrounding your offense; your personal character; the level of deterrence you require; the need to protect the public from you committing crimes in the future; the need to provide you with training and programs; the sentencing range for your offense; the similarity of your sentence to others convicted of similar offenses; and the need for you to repay the victims of your offense.[360]

The maximum amount of time that you can be sentenced to supervised release depends on the class of the crime for which you were convicted. For a Class A or Class B felony, the maximum amount of time is five years. For a Class C or Class D felony, your period of supervised release cannot be more than three years. For a Class E felony, or for a misdemeanor (other than a petty offense), the maximum length of your supervised release is one year.[361]

Your period of supervised release starts on the day that you are released from prison.[362] The time will run concurrently to (at the same time as) any other Federal, State, or local period of supervised release, probation, or parole for another offense.[363] Any time spent in prison will not be counted towards your period of supervised release unless it is less than thirty days in a row.[364]

2. What are the conditions of supervised release?

At the time of your sentencing, the judge will include several conditions that you must follow during your period of supervised release. There are some conditions that the judge must include and some conditions that the judge can choose to include, depending on the circumstances of your case. Your probation officer must give you a written copy of the terms of your supervised release, explaining the terms in clear, understandable language.[365]

The following conditions must be included as part of your supervised release:[366]

(1) You cannot commit another crime under federal, state or local law;
(2) You cannot unlawfully possess a controlled substance;
(3) If you were convicted for the first time of a domestic violence offense, you must complete an approved rehabilitation program;
(4) If you are a sex offender, you must
    a. comply with the requirements of the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act;
    b. cooperate in the collection of your DNA sample under the DNA Analysis Backlog Elimination Act;
    c. submit to a drug test within fifteen days of release and at least two other times after that.[367]

The following conditions can be included as part of your supervised release:[368]

358. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(a) (2006).
359. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(c) (2006).
360. 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(1), (2)(B)–(D), (4)–(7) (2006).
361. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(b) (2006).
362. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(e) (2006).
363. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(e) (2006).
364. 18 U.S.C. § 3624(e) (2006).
365. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(f) (2006).
366. 18 U.S.C. §3583(d) (2006).
367. This condition can be removed under 18 U.S.C. § 3563(a)(4).

(1) If you are a sex offender, availability to search of person, property, and possessions without a search warrant upon reasonable suspicion;
(2) Deportation;
(3) Any other condition that is related to the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553 that does not involve a greater limit on your liberty than is necessary;
(4) Any condition that could be included as a term of probation; or
(5) Any other condition allowed by a statute.[369]

3. What happens if you violate a condition of supervised release?

Your supervised release can be revoked if you violate any of the conditions set out in your sentence. Your supervised release must be revoked if you are found to be in possession of a controlled substance or a firearm, in violation of federal law or in violation of a term of your supervised release, or if you refuse to comply with the drug testing requirements.[370] If your supervised release is revoked, you may be sentenced to serve either a part of or all of the time you were sentenced to supervised release in prison, without any credit for the time you spent on supervised release before its revocation.[371] The court may also order that you serve an additional term of supervised release in addition to your new term of imprisonment.[372] The length of the additional term of supervised release can be no longer than the maximum amount of supervised release allowed for in your original sentence, minus the length of imprisonment for violating your supervised release. Instead of sentencing you to more time in prison, the judge can order that you remain in your home during non-working hours and be monitored by telephone or electronic surveillance devices.[373]

You may participate in up to two stages of hearings before your supervised release can be revoked. After you are brought in for an alleged violation of the terms of your supervised release, you will be brought before a magistrate judge. The magistrate judge must tell you which violation of supervised release you are being charged with, must inform you of your right to obtain an attorney or to request that an attorney be appointed to you, and must inform you of your right to a preliminary hearing to determine whether or not there is sufficient evidence for the judge to decide that you may have violated a term of your supervised release.[374] If you decide not to waive the preliminary hearing, the magistrate judge will provide you with notice of the hearing, its purpose, the violation you are alleged to have committed, and your right to retain a lawyer or have a lawyer appointed. You have a right to be present at your hearing, to present evidence, and to request the right to question witnesses testifying against you.[375] The magistrate judge will either dismiss

---

368. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d) (2006).

369. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3583(d)(1)–(3) (2006). See 18 U.S.C. §§ 3563(b)(1)–(10) and (b)(12)–(20) for a list of all discretionary probation conditions that can be included as conditions of your supervised release.

370. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(g) (2006).

371. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(3) (2006).

372. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(h) (2006); see also Johnson v. United States, 529 U.S. 694, 713, 120 S. Ct. 1795, 1807, 146 L. Ed. 2d 727, 743–44 (2000) (holding that 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(3) authorizes the district court to order a term of imprisonment, followed by a term of supervised release, in response to the revocation of plaintiff's term of supervised release for commission of a new criminal offense).

373. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(4) (2006).

374. Fed. Rules Crim. Proc. R. 32.1(a)(3).

375. Fed. Rules Crim. Proc. R. 32.1(b)(1)(B). The 6th Amendment right to confront witnesses whose testimony will be used against you does not exist in supervised release revocation hearings. United States v. Hall, 419 F.3d 980, 985–86 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that the right to confront a testimonial witness does not apply to hearsay evidence used in supervised release revocation hearings because these hearings are not criminal prosecutions (citing United States v. Aspinall, 389 F.3d 332, 342 (2d Cir. 2004) and United States v. Martin, 382 F.3d 840, 844 n.4 (8th Cir. 2004))). To determine whether you may confront an adverse witness, the judge will balance your due process right against the government's good cause for denying you this right. United States v. Taveras, 380 F.3d 532, 536 (1st Cir. 2004) (applying the recommendation in the 2002 Committee Advisory Note to Rule 32.1 that a balancing test be applied to protect the due process right of parolees recognized in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972)). The government's good cause in not producing the witness will be judged by the reliability of the hearsay evidence and its reason for not presenting the witness. United States v. Rondeau, 430 F.3d 44, 48–49 (1st Cir. 2005) (providing a full discussion of the factors considered in judging reliability and the government's reasons for not providing the witness). For a case describing reliability standards, see United States v. Redd, 318 F.3d 778, 785 (8th Cir. 2003) (finding that the interest of the releasee in confronting the lab technician who ran his sweat patch reports that showed cocaine use at his supervised release revocation hearing was minimal due to long-established recognition of the reliability of documentary evidence). For a case describing the government's reason for not providing the witness, see United States v. Williams, 443 F.3d 35, 45–46 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that the releasee waived his right to confront the witness where the witness the case if he finds there is no probable cause to believe that you committed a violation, or he or she will order a revocation hearing.

To revoke your supervised release, the court must find at the revocation hearing that it is more likely than not that you violated a term of your supervised release.[376] You have the same rights in a revocation hearing that you had in the preliminary hearing, as well as a right to know what evidence will be used against you, the right to question adverse witnesses without first making a request, the right to present information of mitigating factors in your case, and the right to the witnesses' prior statements.[377] If you waived these rights, you must have done so knowingly and voluntarily, otherwise, that waiver will not be upheld.[378] At a revocation hearing, any evidence may be used against you, even evidence taken without probable cause.[379] You cannot defend yourself by saying that the other side gathered evidence improperly.

4. Can you change the length or conditions of your supervised release?

In addition to being revoked, your period of supervised release can also be ended or modified at your request or the court's. Usually there will be a hearing before the court terminates or modifies a condition of your supervised release. At the hearing, you will have the right to counsel and to make a statement on your own behalf and present evidence showing circumstances why the court should decide in your favor.[380] No hearing is required if you waive the right to a hearing, if the change will benefit you and will not extend the length of your supervised release, or if the government attorney does not object to the change you requested after having received notice and had reasonable time to do so.[381] You can also apply to the court to clarify the terms of your supervised release if you are unsure what a particular condition means or whether or not you have met the requirements for that condition.[382]

5. How can you terminate your supervised release?

You can apply to terminate your period of supervised release by either appealing to the court or to the President of the United States through a commutation petition (see Part C(4) below). After you have served one year and one day of your supervised release, you can appeal to the court to have the remaining amount of time on your supervised release sentence discharged under 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1). If you apply before you have served at least one year and one day of supervised release, the court will dismiss your petition.[383] In deciding on your request, the court will first look at "many of the same factors" used to determine your original sentence.[384] It will then decide whether terminating your supervised release is in the interest of justice and warranted by your post-release conduct.[385] The court is not required to hold a hearing to decide your request for termination because its decision does not extend the time you will have to spend in supervised released—it can only lower it.[386] would not come forward to present evidence against him out of fear and intimidation caused by threats made by the releasee's acquaintances). Your interest in confrontation is determined by the circumstances of your individual case including the importance of the evidence to the court's finding, your ability to show the evidence was false, and the consequences of the court's decision on factors other the revocation of your supervised release. United States v. Walker, 117 F.3d 417, 420 (9th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 961 (1997).

---

376. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(3) (2006).

377. Fed. R. Crim. Proc. R. 32.1(b)(2); Fed. R. Crim. Proc. R. 26.2(g)(3).

378. United States v. Correa-Torres, 326 F.3d 18, 22 (1st Cir. 2003) (ordering a new hearing for plaintiff whose supervised release was revoked after waiver of his rights at his first revocation hearing when he did not know what his rights were or what the charges were against him).

379. United States v. Hebert, 201 F.3d 1103, 1104, 00 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 917, 2000 Daily Journal D.A.R. 1347 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that the exclusionary rule does not apply at supervised release revocation hearings).

380. Fed R. Crim. Proc. R. 32.1(c)(1).

381. Fed R. Crim. Proc. R. 32.1(c)(2).

382. United States v. Lilly, 206 F.3d 756, 762 (7th Cir. 2000) (recognizing plaintiff's right to have the district court clarify whether or not he had met the repayment ordered as a part of his supervised release).

383. United States v. Werber, No. 90 Cr. 364 (LLM), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12307, at *1–2 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 25, 1995) (unpublished).

384. United States v. Lussier, 104 F.3d 32, 34–35 (2d Cir. 1997).

385. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1) (2006).

386. United States v. Lai, 458 F. Supp. 2d 177, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that releasee was not entitled to a hearing under Fed. R. Crim. Proc. R. 32.1(c) on his request for termination of the remaining fourteen months of his period of supervised release and denying that request).

6. How can you change the terms of your supervised release?

You can petition the district court to modify a condition of your supervised release if your circumstances have changed since the time of your sentencing or you believe the condition places a heavy limit on your liberty without meeting any goals of your supervised release. If a condition of supervised release places too great of a burden on a protected liberty interest, without furthering your rehabilitation or protecting the public, a court can order the condition be changed to include no greater limit on your liberty than necessary to meet your supervised release goals.[387] The court will first determine if you have a recognized liberty interest[388] affected by the challenged condition and then determine the sentencing goal of that condition and its reasonableness.[389] The sentencing goal can relate to the offense for which you are currently incarcerated or to a past offense and still be upheld by the court.[390] The court will not approve your requested change if your reason for the change is outweighed by the government's interest in the condition being maintained.[391]

The court can also modify the conditions of your supervised release on its own motion or in response to a request by your probation officer any time before the end of your term of supervised release.[392] The court can add additional conditions of supervised release to your sentence and/or correct your sentence to include the conditions of supervised release as long as the court provides you with a hearing as described in the introduction to this section[393] and the conditions relate to a rehabilitation goal and do not unduly limit your liberty interests.[394] If you participated in RDAP, when you are transferred to the community-based program the BOP will check to see if participation in substance abuse treatment is a condition of your supervised release. If it is not, the BOP will ask you to sign a waiver to modify the conditions of your supervised release; you are not required to sign this waiver.[395]

O. Federal Executive Clemency

The President of the United States has the constitutional power to pardon, commute, or reprieve a sentence, and to remit fines for conviction of a federal offense.[396] The main forms of relief explained in this

387. United States v. Monteiro, 270 F.3d 465, 472–73 (7th Cir. 2001) (ordering a condition of supervised release allowing law enforcement to conduct warrantless seizures of plaintiff, his car, or his home be rewritten by the court to limit the seizure power "to ensure that it relates reasonably to the ends of rehabilitation and protection of the public").

388. See United States v. Myers, 426 F.3d 117, 125 (2nd Cir. 2005) (describing recognized liberty interests as those that are constitutionally protected); see also United States v. Holman, 532 F.3d 284, 290 (4th Cir. 2008) (discussing fundamental rights and supervised release, in the context of involuntary medication orders).

389. United States v. Meyers, 426 F.3d 117, 125–30 (2d Cir. 2005) (removing as a condition of supervised release that the plaintiff receive approval from his probation office before he could have contact with his minor son where his original sentence for child pornography involved only females and where there was no record demonstrating that his son would be harmed by contact with him or that any sentencing goal that protected other children would be served by this condition, which interfered with his liberty interest in maintaining his parental relationship with his son).

390. United States v. Dupes, 513 F.3d 338, 344 (2d Cir. 2008) (upholding conditions of supervised release for defendant, who was convicted of securities fraud, including: registration as a sex offender; attending sex offender treatment; staying away from places where children are often located; and not using the internet for child pornography, because—given his past conviction for and history of sexual offenses—such conditions were not overly broad or vague and were appropriate to the sentencing goals of providing defendant with needed treatment and protecting the public from defendant), cert. denied, 128 S. Ct. 1686, 2008 U.S. LEXIS 2599 (Jan. 9, 2008).

391. United States v. Nonahal, 338 F.3d 668, 670–71 (7th Cir. 2003) (denying request by releasee that the condition of his supervised release that he report monthly, in person, to his probation officer be changed to reporting by mail so that he could attend dentistry school in Pakistan because the government's interest in maintaining close supervision over the releasee outweighed his interest in attending school at that time).

392. 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(2) (2006).

393. United States v. Navarro-Espinosa, 30 F.3d 1169, 1171 (9th Cir. 1994) (upholding district court's sentence against releasee, which was amended under 35 U.S.C. §3583(e)(2) to include the four years of supervised release that the court had inadvertently neglected to mention when first pronouncing sentence).

394. United States v. Davies, 380 F.3d 329, 333 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding court's adding a condition of supervised release requiring releasee to participate in an alcohol abuse program did not abuse discretion because it met releasee's rehabilitation goals, given alcoholism and depression history, and was less intrusive than a ban on drinking alcohol).

395. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 5330.10(5.4.5), ch. 5, at 8 (1996), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/5330_010.pdf.

396. U.S. Const. art. II, §2; see also 28 C.F.R. § 1.1 (2006).

section—pardon and commutation—only apply to convictions for federal crimes.[397] See Part B(6) of this Chapter for information on how to seek clemency for New York State convictions.

For federal sentences, pardons and commutations are very different remedies. A pardon restores civil rights that were taken away when you were sentenced. A commutation can shorten the amount of time that you must serve in prison or in supervised release. Because a pardon does not reduce your sentence, it will be discussed only briefly. This section does not deal with federal executive clemency for military offenses or for people who are sentenced to death, both of which involve separate petition procedures and considerations.

1. Pardons

A federal pardon does not allow you to get out of your sentence early. Instead, a federal pardon allows you to have your federal conviction officially forgiven and your civil rights restored. It does not mean you are innocent. Because pardons are a showing of forgiveness for your crime and not innocence, you must show remorse and rehabilitation, and good behavior after release from prison. It is important to remember a pardon will not erase your conviction. So, any time you are asked to list your convictions you must still include the pardoned offense.[398] But, you can also note that you received a federal pardon for the offense.[399]

You must wait five years after the date of your release from prison before you can seek a presidential pardon.[400] You cannot request a pardon while you are on supervised release, parole, or probation.[401] If there are exceptional reasons why you need the pardon now and cannot wait until the five year period is over, then you can request a waiver. To get a waiver, write a separate letter, stating why you think the waiting period should be waived and submit it with your pardon application. However, waivers are very rarely granted.[402]

Even after the five-year waiting period, you need to give a reason you are seeking a pardon. Examples of reasons include gaining entry into a professional association; obtaining licenses from government authorities; restoration of your civil rights; and accessing benefits provided by administrative agencies. It is important to note than many of your civil rights (like your voting rights, for example) are governed by the state where you were convicted and not by the federal government. So, you might want to pursue state clemency procedures instead of or in addition to federal procedures to increase your chance of success.[403]

To request a federal pardon you must submit a completed, signed, and dated pardon form to the United States Pardon Attorney at:

Office of the Pardon Attorney
1425 New York Avenue, N.W., Suite 11000
Washington, DC 20530.

Pardon forms are available online at: http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/pardon_petition.htm.

2. Commutations

A commutation of your sentence is a reduction of your sentence's length. A commutation can change your sentence to time served, shorten your imprisonment period so you can be released early, move up the date of your parole hearing,[404] or shorten or terminate your sentence of supervised release.[405] Commutations are

397. 28 C.F.R. § 1.4 (2006).

398. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/pardon_instructions.htm (last visited Sept. 19, 2008).

399. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/pardon_instructions.htm (last visited Sept.19, 2008).

400. 28 C.F.R. § 1.2 (2006).

401. 28 C.F.R. § 1.2 (2006).

402. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Petition for Pardon, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/pardon_petition.htm (last visited Sept. 19, 2008).

403. U.S. Dept. of Justice, Pardon Information and Instructions, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/pardon_instructions.htm (last visited Sept. 19, 2008).

404. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm; see also Nicholson-El v. Conley, No. 5:01-0798, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24168, at *3 (S.D. W.Va. Nov. 27, 2001) (unpublished) (noting that petitioner's commutation from President Carter made him immediately eligible for a parole hearing for his two sentences, but did not change the sentences to make them run concurrently).

405. If you are requesting that your period of supervised release be terminated, you must state specifically on your petition that this is the type of relief you are seeking and why serving it would be an undue hardship on you as well as why you cannot obtain the same benefit through a petition under 18 U.S.C. § 3583(e)(1). U.S. Dept. of Justice, rarely granted and only happen in exceptional circumstances. Commutation is purely discretionary, which means that it is up to the President to decide, and he does not have to issue a commutation if he does not think it is appropriate. The President does not have to state his or her reasons for granting or denying your petition for commutation. You have no right to appeal the denial of your request for commutation.

(a) Eligibility

In general, your petition for commutation will not be reviewed unless you have started serving your sentence and you are not currently appealing or challenging your sentence in court.[406] You cannot apply for a commutation of sentence, except in exceptional circumstances, if you have any other forms of judicial or administrative relief available, including:[407]

(1) A motion by the government under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 35 (for providing substantial assistance to the government);[408] or

(2) A petition for compassionate release under 18 U.S.C § 3582(c)(1).[409]

Examples of exceptional or unusual circumstances are: terminal illness or old age,[410] the severity (harshness) of the sentence,[411] ineligibility for parole,[412] and providing beneficial assistance at the request of the government in the investigation or prosecution of another case.[413] These are also the reasons commutations are usually granted.[414] If any of these exceptional or unusual circumstances are present in your case, the Pardon Attorney, who assists the President, will consider your application. But, the Pardon Attorney will still consider the availability of other means of relief and the amount of time you have already served when reviewing your application.[415] For example, President George W. Bush granted a commutation of Lewis Libby's sentence of imprisonment, which was at the low end of the Sentencing Guidelines' range, because it was too harsh. The President announced in his Statement on the Executive Clemency for Libby that he considered critics' "arguments and the circumstances surrounding this case," as well as the fact that "the district court rejected the advice of the probation office, which recommended a lesser sentence and the consideration of factors that could have led to a sentence of home confinement or probation."[416]

Commutation Instructions, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/commutation_instructions.htm (last visited September 19, 2008). See Part C(4)(e) of this Chapter for more information on termination of supervised release.

406. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm.

407. 28 C.F.R. § 1.3 (2006).

408. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm.

409. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions, § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm. See Part B(6) of this Chapter for information about compassionate release in New York State.

410. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm; see also Nicholson-El v. Conley, No. 5:01-0798, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24168, at *3 (S.D. W.Va. Nov. 27, 2001) (unpublished) (noting that petitioner's commutation from President Carter made him immediately eligible for a parole hearing for his two sentences, but did not change the sentences to make them run concurrently).

411. For example, in 2007, President Bush commuted the sentence of Lewis Libby, the Vice President's former chief of staff, because it was "excessive." Though his 30-month sentence was at the low-end of the sentencing guidelines range for perjury, obstruction of justice, and false sentences to investigators, Bush found two years of supervised release and a $250,000 fine "harsh punishment" for these convictions. See Statement by the President on Executive Clemency for Lewis Libby (July 7, 2007), available at http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2007/07/20070702-3.html#.

412. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm.

413. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm.

414. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm.

415. U.S. Attorney's Office, Dept. of Justice, United States Attorney's Manual: Standards for Consideration of Clemency Petitions § 1–2.113 (1997), available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/petitions.htm.

416. Statement by the President on Executive Clemency for Lewis Libby (July 2, 2007), available at http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2007/07/20070702-3.html#.

(b) How to Request a Commutation

To be considered for federal commutation, send a written petition requesting a commutation of your sentence, addressed to the President of the United States, to the following address:

Office of the Pardon Attorney
1425 New York Avenue, N.W.
Suite 11000
Washington, DC 20530

If you would like your petition to be sent faster, you must submit it through your facility's warden.[417] There are several benefits to sending your petition through the warden, including assistance in obtaining documents. Therefore, this is the method described in this Section.

(i) Obtain and Complete the Petition for Commutation Form (Form OPA – 6)

You can obtain the petition for commutation form by requesting it from the Pardon Attorney or the warden in your facility.[418] When you complete the form, you must state the truth or you could be fined and/or imprisoned.[419] The form should be easy to read and completed in pen or typewritten.

On the form you will need to include the following information:

(1) The date(s) when you have previously applied for commutation (if any) and the result(s);
(2) The offense(s) that you are seeking to have commuted (including district of conviction, citation of offense if known, and sentence);
(3) The date(s) of any criminal appeals you have filed on your case (if any), the result(s), and the citation to the opinion(s);
(4) The date(s) of any habeas corpus petition(s) you have filed to challenge your conviction (if any), the result(s), and the citation to the opinion(s);
(5) Your story of the events that took place during the offense you were convicted of and what your involvement was in those events;
(6) A list of all of your other arrests and convictions, including any juvenile records (the date, the charge, the arresting agency, and the outcome); and
(7) The reasons you are seeking commutation.

(ii) Submit the form to the warden to be sent to the Pardon Attorney

When you send the petition through the warden at your facility, it will be assigned to a case manager who has thirty days to get the required documents together and submit them to the warden for signature.[420] Your case manager must include with your petition a pre-sentence Investigation Report (if available), Judgment in a Criminal Case, and your most recent Progress Report, if one already exists.[421] Any requests for additional information will be sent directly to the warden.

(iii) Review of Your Petition

Once the Pardon Attorney receives your petition, the Pardon Attorney will conduct an investigation of your case. The Pardon Attorney or the Attorney General may contact other government officials (including your sentencing judge, the Director of the BOP, and the U.S. Attorney in the district where you were convicted) to get their opinions about whether or not your request for commutation should be granted by the President.[422] If you are requesting commutation for a felony offense that involved a victim, the Attorney General may send a notice to the victim (or their spouse, adult child, or parent, if the victim is deceased) to ask if he would like to submit an opinion regarding your request. A victim is someone who has "suffered

417. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.15 § 571.41(7)(a), at 3 (2001), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf.

418. 28 C.F.R. § 1.1 (2007). The form is also available at http://www.usdoj.gov/pardon/commutation_instructions.htm (last visited Mar. 16, 2011).

419. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1001 and 3571 (2006).

420. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.15 § 571.41(7)(a), at 3 (2001), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf.

421. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.15 § 571.41(7)(a), at 3 (2001), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf.

422. See 28 C.F.R. § 1.6 (2007).

direct or threatened physical, emotional, or pecuniary harm as a result of the commission of the crime for which clemency is sought" and has filed a request with the BOP to be notified upon your release.[423]

After the Pardon Attorney has received and reviewed the reports on your case, he or she will make a recommendation to the President to deny or approve your petition.[424] If the Pardon Attorney recommends that the President deny your application and the President does not take any other action within thirty days of receiving the recommendation, your petition will be denied and your case closed.[425] Your case can also be closed if the President denies your application directly after reviewing it.[426] You will receive notice about the denial from the warden at your facility.[427] You are not entitled to any appeal if your application is denied.

If the President approves your petition for commutation, a warrant of commutation is sent to the warden, who will deliver it to you to sign.[428] If you are already on parole or supervised release when your petition is granted, the warrant will go to you directly.[429] Your sentence will then be recalculated and, if you are now eligible for a parole hearing, you will be added to the docket.[430] It is important to note in this case that even though you have a right to a parole hearing, you are not guaranteed to be granted parole.

P. Conclusion

If you are in New York State prison and would like to try get out before serving your maximum sentence, three types of release programs (and parole) exist: (1) conditional, (2) early, and (3) presumptive release. The type of sentence you are serving affects your program eligibility. In general, you can decrease the amount of time in prison by showing good behavior, because good behavior can earn you good-time credit. If you have applied unsuccessfully for a release program, have not acquired the required amount of good time, or have not served enough of your underlying sentence to qualify, you can also petition for a pardon or commutation, which allows you to leave prison immediately. Note: you can pursue several options at the same time.

If you are in a federal prison and would like to try to get out before serving your full sentence, you may be able to be released through (1) good conduct time, (2) the Residential Drug Abuse Program, (3) the Second Chance Act, and (4) compassionate relief. In addition, you can receive credit for time already served and this credit can be used to decrease your sentence. Finally, keep in mind that you can also apply to have your sentence of imprisonment or supervised release reduced by the U.S. President through a commutation petition.

Some of these methods can be used together to reduce your sentence (for example, good-conduct time and early release under RDAP can be combined) while others may be pursued as alternate ways to reduce your sentence (for example, compassionate relief or executive clemency). You can pursue several of these options at the same time to try to reduce your federal sentence.

423. 28 C.F.R. § 1.6(b)(3) (2007).

424. 28 C.F.R. § 1.6(c) (2007).

425. 28 C.F.R. § 1.8(b) (2007).

426. 28 C.F.R. § 1.8(a) (2007).

427. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.15 § 571.41(7)(d), at 5 (2001), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf.

428. 28 C.F.R. § 1.7 (2007).

429. 28 C.F.R. § 1.7 (2007).

430. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Program Statement 1330.15 § 571.41(7)(c), at 5 (2001), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1330_015.pdf.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Appendix I: Addresses of Federal Courts and New York State Prisons and Their Respective Federal Judicial Districts

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

APPENDIX I

ADDRESSES OF FEDERAL COURTS
&
NEW YORK STATE PRISONS AND THEIR RESPECTIVE FEDERAL JUDICIAL DISTRICTS

A. Addresses of Federal Courts

1. Federal Courts in the First Circuit

Court of Appeals

John Joseph Moakley
U.S. Courthouse
1 Courthouse Way
Boston, MA 02210
Phone: (617) 748-9057

District Courts

Maine District Court

156 Federal Street
Portland, ME, 04101
Phone: (207) 780-3356

Massachusetts District Court

U.S. District Court
1 Courthouse Way
Boston, MA 02210
Phone: (617) 748-9152

New Hampshire District Court

U.S. District Court
55 Pleasant Street, Room 110
Concord, NH 03301-3941
Phone: (603) 225-1423

Puerto Rico District Court

Clemente Ruiz-Nazario U.S. Courthouse &
Federico Degetau Federal Building
150 Carlos Chardon Street
Hato Rey, P.R. 00918
Phone: (787) 772-3000

Rhode Island District Court

One Exchange Terrace
Federal Building and Courthouse
Providence, RI 02903
Phone: (401) 752-7200

2. Federal Courts in the Second Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit
Daniel Patrick Moynihan United States Courthouse
500 Pearl Street
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 857-8500

District Courts

Connecticut District Court

Abraham Ribicoff Federal Building
450 Main Street
Hartford, CT 06103
Phone: (860) 240-3200

Richard C. Lee United States Court House
141 Church Street
New Haven, CT 06510
Phone: (203) 773-2140

Brien McMahon Federal Building
915 Lafayette Boulevard
Bridgeport, CT 06604
Phone: (203) 579-5707

New York Eastern District Court

Theodore Roosevelt United States Courthouse
225 Cadman Plaza East
Brooklyn, New York 11201-1818
Phone: (718) 613-2600

Alfonse M. D'Amato United States Courthouse
100 Federal Plaza
Central Islip, NY 11722-4438
Phone: (631) 712-6000

New York Northern District Court

James T. Foley United States Courthouse
445 Broadway, Room 509
Albany, NY 12207-2936
Phone: (518) 257-1800

U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
15 Henry Street, 2nd Floor
Binghamton, NY 13901
Phone: (607) 773-2893

U.S. District Court
James M. Hanley Federal Building, 7th Floor
100 South Clinton Street
Syracuse, NY 13261-7367
Phone: (315) 234-8500

Mailing address:
P.O. Box 7367
Syracuse, NY 13261

Alexander Pirnie Federal Building
10 Broad Street, 3rd Floor
Utica, NY 13501
Phone: (315) 266-1189

New York Southern District Court

Daniel Patrick Moynihan U.S. Courthouse
500 Pearl Street
New York, NY 10007
Phone: (212) 805-0136

Charles L. Brieant, Jr. United States Courthouse
300 Quarropas Street
White Plains, NY 10601-4150
Phone: (914) 390-4100

New York Western District Court

United States Courthouse
68 Court Street
Buffalo, NY 14202
Phone: (716) 551-4211

Kenneth B. Keating Federal Building
100 State Street
Rochester, NY, 14614
Phone: (585) 613-4000

Vermont District Court

United States Post Office and Courthouse
204 Main Street
Brattleboro, VT 05301
Phone: (802) 254-0250

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 998
Brattleboro, VT 05302

Federal Building, 5th Floor
11 Elmwood Avenue
Burlington, VT 05401
Phone: (802) 951-6301

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 945
Burlington, VT 05402

3. Federal Courts in the Third Circuit

Court of Appeals

James A. Byrne Courthouse
601 Market Street
Philadelphia PA 19106
Phone: (215) 597-2995

District Courts

Delaware District Court

J. Caleb Boggs Federal Building
844 N. King Street
Lockbox 18
Wilmington, DE 19801
Phone: (302)-573-6170

New Jersey District Court

Mitchell H. Cohen Bldg & U.S. Courthouse
Fourth & Cooper Streets Rm 1050
Camden, NJ 08101
Phone: (856) 757-5021

Martin Luther King Bldg & U.S. Courthouse
50 Walnut Street Rm 4015
Newark, NJ 07101
Phone: (973) 645-3730

Clarkson S. Fisher Bldg & U.S. Courthouse
402 East State Street Rm 2020
Trenton, NJ 08608
Phone: (609) 989-2065

Pennsylvania Eastern District Court

James A. Byrne United States Courthouse
601 Market Street
Philadelphia, PA 19106
Phone: (215) 598-7704

Edward N. Cahn Federal Courthouse
504 West Hamilton Street
Room 1601
Allentown, PA 18101-1514
Phone: (610) 434-3800

The Holmes Building, 4th Floor
101 Larry Holmes Drive
Easton, PA 18042-7722
Phone: (610) 252-6522

The Madison Building, 4th Floor
400 Washington Street
Reading, PA 19601-3956

Pennsylvania Middle District Court

William J. Nealon Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
235 N. Washington Ave.
P.O. Box 1148
Scranton, PA 18501
Phone: (570) 207-5680

Federal Building &
U.S. Courthouse
228 Walnut Street
P.O. Box 983
Harrisburg, PA 17108
Phone: (717) 221-3920

U.S. Courthouse
& Federal Office Building
240 West Third Street, Suite 218
Williamsport, PA 17701
Phone: (570) 323-6380

Max Rosenn U.S. Courthouse
197 South Main Street, Suite 161
Wilkes-Barre, PA 18701

Pennsylvania Western District Court

United States Courthouse
700 Grant Street
Pittsburgh, PA 15219
Phone: (412) 208-7500

United States Courthouse
17 South Park Row
Erie, PA 16501
Phone: (814) 464-9600

Mailing Address:
Erie Division
P.O. Box 1820
Erie, PA 16507
Penn Traffic Building
319 Washington Street
Johnstown, PA 15901
Phone: (814) 533-4504

Virgin Islands District Court

St. Thomas/St. John Division
5500 Veterans Drive, Rm 310
St. Thomas, VI 00802
Phone: (340) 774-0640

St. Croix Division
3013 Estate Golden Rock, Suite 219
St. Croix, VI 00820
Phone: (340) 773-1130

4. Federal Courts in the Fourth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Lewis F. Powell, Jr. United States Courthouse
1000 East Main Street
Richmond, VA 23219
Phone: (804) 916-2700

District Courts

Maryland District Court

Edward A. Garmatz Federal Building and United States Courthouse
101 W. Lombard Street
Baltimore, MD 21201
Phone: (410) 962-2600

United States Courthouse
6500 Cherrywood Lane, Suite 200
Greenbelt, MD 20770
(301) 344-0660

North Carolina Eastern District Court

Terry Sanford Federal Building and Courthouse
310 New Bern Avenue
Raleigh, North Carolina 27601
Phone: (919) 645-1700

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 25670
Raleigh, NC 27611

United States Courthouse
201 South Evans St.
Greenville, NC 27858-1137
Phone: (252) 830-6009

Alton Lennon Federal Building
Two Princess Street
Wilmington, North Carolina 28401
Phone: (910) 815-4663

United States Post Office and Courthouse
413 Middle Street
New Bern, NC 28560
Phone: (252) 638-8534

North Carolina Middle District Court

L. Richardson Preyer Federal Building
324 West Market Street, Suite 1
Greensboro, NC 27401
Phone: (336) 332-6000

Hiram H. Ward Fedearl Building and United States Courthouse, Suite 2
251 North Main St
Winston-Salem, NC 27101
Phone; (336) 332-6000

United States Post Office and Courthouse
323 East Chapel Hill Street
Durham, NC 27701
Phone: (919) 541-5413

North Carolina Western District Court

United States Courthouse
100 Otis St.
Asheville, NC 28801
Phone: (828) 771-7200

Federal Building
306 Main St., Room 306
Bryson City, NC 28713
Phone: (828) 488-3783

Charles R. Jonas Federal Building
401 West Trade Street, Room 212
Charlotte, NC 28202
Phone: (704) 350-7400

United States Courthouse
200 W. Broad St.
Statesville, NC 28677
Phone: (704) 883-1000

South Carolina District Court

Charles E. Simons, Jr. Federal Court House
223 Park Avenue, S.W.
Aiken, SC 29801
Phone: (803) 648-6896

G. Ross Anderson Jr. Federal Building and United States Court House
315 South McDuffie Street, 2nd Floor
Anderson, SC 29624
Phone: (864) 241-2700

Beaufort Federal Court House
1501 Bay Street
Beaufort, SC 29902
Phone: (843) 521-2088

Charleston Federal Court House
85 Broad Street
Charleston, SC 29401
Phone: (843) 579-1401

Matthew J. Perry, Jr. Courthouse
901 Richland Street
Columbia, SC 29201
Phone: (803) 765-5816

McMillan Federal Building
401 West Evans Street
Florence, SC 29501
Phone: (843) 676-3820

Clement F. Haynsworth Federal Building
300 East Washington Street
Greenville, SC 29601
Phone: (864) 241-2700

Donald S. Russell Federal Courthouse
201 Magnolia Street
Spartanburg, SC 29306
Phone: (864) 241-2700

Virginia Eastern District Court

Albert V. Bryan U.S. Courthouse
401 Courthouse Square
Alexandria, VA 22314
Phone: (703)-299-2100

Walter E. Hoffman United States Courthouse
600 Granby Street
Norfolk, VA 23501
Phone: (757) 222-7201

United States Courthouse
2400 West Avenue
Newport News, VA 23607
Phone: (757) 247-0784

Spottswood W. Robinson III and Robert R. Merhige, Jr., Federal Courthouse
701 East Broad Street
Richmond, VA 23219
Phone: (804) 916-2200

Virginia Western District Court

Richard H. Poff Federal Building
210 Franklin Road, Room 308
Roanoke, VA 24011
Phone: (540) 857-5100

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1234
Roanoke, VA 24006

Virginia Western District Court
180 W. Main Street, Room 104
Abingdon, VA 24210
Phone: (276) 628-5116

C. Bascom Slemp Federal Building
322 East Wood Ave., Room 204
P.O. Box 490
Big Stone Gap, VA 24219
Phone: (276) 523-3557

Virginia Western District Court
255 W. Main Street, Room 304
Charlottesville, VA 22902
Phone: (434) 296-9284

Dan Daniel United States Post Office
700 Main Street, Room 202
Danville, VA 24541
Phone: (434) 793-7147

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1400
Danville, VA 24543

United States Courthouse
116 N. Main Street, Room 314
Harrisonburg, VA 22802
Phone: (540) 434-3181

United States Courthouse
1101 Court Street, Room A66
Lynchburg, VA 24504
Phone: (434) 847-5722

West Virginia Northern District Court

Clerk U.S. District Court
500 West Pike Street, Room 301
Clarksburg, WV 26301
Phone: (304) 622-8513

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 2808
Clarksburg, WV 26302

Clerk, U. S. District Court
P.O. Box 1518
300 Third Street, Suite 227
Elkins, WV 26241
Phone: (304) 636-1445

Clerk, U.S. District Court
217 W. King Street
Martinsburg, WV 25401
Phone: (304) 267-8225

Clerk, U.S. District Court
1125 Chapline Street, Suite 247
P.O. Box 471
Wheeling, WV 26003
Phone: (304) 232-0011

West Virginia Southern District Court

District Clerk's Office, Room 2400
300 Virginia Street East
Charleston, WV 25301
Phone: (304) 347-3000

U.S. District Court
601 Federal Street, Room 2303
P.O. Box 4128
Bluefield, WV 24701
Phone: (304) 327-9798

Sidney L. Christie Federal Building
845 Fifth Avenue, Room 101
Huntington, WV 25701
Phone: (304) 529-5588

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1570
Huntington, WV 25716

Robert C. Byrd United States Courthouse
110 North Heber Street, Room 119
P.O. Box 5009
Beckley, WV 25801
Phone: (304) 253-7481

U.S. District Court
425 Juliana Street, Room 5102
Parkersburg, WV 26101
Phone: (304) 420-6490

5. Federal Courts in the Fifth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit
600 S. Maestri Place
New Orleans, LA 70130-3408
Phone: (504) 310-7700

District Courts

Louisiana Eastern District Court

United States Courthouse
500 Poydras Street, Room C-151
New Orleans, LA 70130
Phone: (504) 589-7600

United States Courthouse
8046 Main St.
Houma, LA 70360
Phone: (985) 879-2584

Louisiana Middle District Court

U.S. District Court
777 Florida Street, Suite 139
Baton Rouge, LA 70801
Phone: (225) 389-3500

Louisiana Western District Court

United States Courthouse
515 Murray Street
Alexandria, Louisiana 71301
Phone: (318) 473-7415

United States Courthouse
800 Lafayette Street, Suite 2100
Lafayette Louisiana 70501
Phone: (337) 593-5000

Edwin F. Hunter, Jr.
U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
611 Broad Street, Suite 188
Lake Charles, Louisiana 70601
Phone: (337) 437-3870

United States Courthouse
300 Fannin Street, Suite 1167
Shreveport, Louisiana 71101
Phone: (318) 676-4273

Federal Building
201 Jackson Street, Suite 215
Louisiana 71210
Phone: (318) 322-6740

Mississippi Northern District Court

Thomas G. Abernathy Federal Building
301 W. Commerce St.
Aberdeen, MS 39730
Phone: (662) 369-4952

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 704
Aberdeen, MS 39730

U.S. District Court
305 Main Street, Room 329
Greenville, MS 38701
Phone: (662) 234-1971

Federal Building
911 Jackson Avenue, Room 369
Oxford, MS 38655
Phone: (662) 234-1971

Mississippi Southern District Court

U.S. District Court
245 East Capitol Street
Suite 316
Jackson, MS 39201

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 23552
Jackson, MS 39225-3552
Phone: (601) 965-4439

U.S. District Court
701 Main Street, Suite 200
Hattiesburg, MS 39401
Phone: (601) 583-2433

U.S. District Court
2012 15th Street, Suite 403
Gulfport, MS 39501
Phone: (228) 563-1700

Texas Eastern District Court

U.S. District Court
300 Willow Street, Suite 104
Beaumont, Texas 77701
Phone: (409) 654-7000

U.S. District Court
104 N. Third Street
Lufkin, Texas 75901
Phone: (936) 632-2739

U.S. District Court
100 E. Houston, Room 125
Marshall, Texas 75670
Phone: (903) 935-2912

U.S. District Court
101 E. Pecan, Room 216
Sherman TX 75090
Phone: (903) 892-2921

U.S. Courthouse
500 N. State Line Ave.
Texarkana, Texas 75501
Phone: (903) 794-8561

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 2090
Texarkana, TX 75504

U.S. District Court
211 W. Ferguson, Room 106
Tyler, Texas, 75702
Phone: (903) 590-1000

Texas Northern District Court

U.S. District Court
1100 Commerce, Room 1452
Dallas, TX 75242
Phone: (214) 753-2200

Abilene Divisional Office
341 Pine St., Room 2008
Abilene, TX 79601
Phone: (325) 677-6311

Amarillo Divisional Office
205 E. Fifth St., Room 133
Amarillo, TX 79101-1559
Phone: (806) 468-3800

Ft. Worth Divisional Office
501 W. 10th St., Room 310
Ft. Worth, TX 76102-3673
Phone: (817) 850-6600

Lubbock Divisional Office
1205 Texas Ave., Room 209
Lubbock, TX 79401-4091
Phone: (806) 472-1900

San Angelo Divisional Office
33 E. Twohig St., Room 202
San Angelo, TX 76903-6451
Phone: (325) 655-4506

Wichita Falls Divisional Office
1000 Lamar St., 203
Wichita Falls, TX 76301
Phone: (940) 767-1902

Texas Southern District

United States Courthouse
600 E. Harrison, #101
Brownsville, TX 78520
Phone: (956) 548-2500

United States Courthouse
1133 N Shoreline Blvd
Corpus Christi, TX 78401
Phone: (361) 888-3142

United States Courthouse
515 Rusk Ave
Houston, TX 77002
Phone: (713) 250-5500

Mailing Address:
Clerk of the Court
P. O. Box 61010
Houston, TX 77208

United States Courthouse
1300 Victoria St., Suite 1131
Laredo, TX 78040
Phone: (956) 723-3542

U.S. District Court
1701 W. Bus. Hwy. 83, Suite 1011
McAllen, TX 78501
Phone: (956) 618-8065

Mailing Address:
Clerk of the Court
P. O. Box 5059
McAllen, TX 78501

U.S. District Court
312 S. Main Street, Room 406
Victoria, TX 77901
Phone: (361) 788-5009

Mailing Address:
Clerk of the Court
P. O. Box 1638
Victoria, TX 77902

Texas Western District Court

U.S. District Court
200 West 8th St., Room 130
Austin, Texas 78701
Phone: (512) 916-5896

U.S. District Court
111 East Broadway, Room L100
Del Rio, Texas 78840
Phone: (830)-703-2054

U.S. District Court
511 East San Antonio Ave., Room 219
El Paso, Texas 79901
Phone: (915) 534-6725

U.S. District Court
200 East Wall, Room 107
Midland, Texas 79701
Phone: (432) 686-4001

U.S. District Court
410 South Cedar
Pecos, Texas 79772
Phone: (432) 445-4228

U.S. District Court
2450 State Hwy. 118
Alpine, Texas 79830
Phone: (432) 837-7323

U.S. District Court
655 East Durango Blvd., Room G65
San Antonio, Texas 78206
Phone: (210) 472-6550

U.S. District Court
800 Franklin Ave., Room 380
Waco, Texas 76701
Phone: (254) 750-1501

MG Williams Judicial Center
Bldg. 5794, Tank Destroyer Blvd.
P. O. Box 5507
Fort Hood, Texas 76544-0507
Phone: (254) 287-3487

6. Federal Courts in the Sixth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit
540 Potter Stewart U.S. Courthouse
100 East Fifth Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
Phone: (513) 564-7000

District Courts

Kentucky Eastern District Court

Leslie G. Whitmer, Clerk
101 Barr St., Room 206
P.O. Drawer 3074
Lexington, KY 40588-3074
Phone: (859) 233-2503

Christina Riley, Deputy-in-Charge
336 Carl Perkins Fed Bldg.
1405 Greenup Ave.
Ashland, KY 41101
Phone: (606) 329-8652

Lynn Battaglia, Deputy-in-Charge
35 West 5th Street
P.O. Box 1073
Covington, KY 41012-1073
Phone: (859) 392-7925

Kay Ratliff, Deputy-in-Charge
313 John C. Watts Fed Bldg.
330 West Broadway
Frankfort, KY 40601
Phone: (502) 223-5225

Shirley Allen, Deputy-in-Charge
310 South Main Street
P.O. Box 5121
London, KY 40745-5121
Phone: (606) 877-7910

Malinda Bevins, Deputy-in-Charge
110 Main Street, Suite 203
Pikeville, KY 41501-1100
Phone: (606) 437-6160

Kentucky Western District Court

Clerk's Office
241 East Main Street, Suite 120
Bowling Green, KY 42101-2175
Phone: (270) 393-2500

Clerk's Office
601 W. Broadway, Rm 106
Gene Snyder United States Courthouse
Louisville, KY 40202
Phone: (502) 625-3500

Clerk's Office
423 Frederica Street, Suite 126
Owensboro, KY 42301-3013
Phone: (270) 689-4400

Clerk's Office
501 Broadway, Suite 127
Paducah, KY 42001-6801
Phone: (270) 415-6400

Michigan Eastern District

Theodore Levin United States Courthouse
231 W. Lafayette Blvd, Room 564
Detroit, MI 48226
Phone: (313) 234-5005

U.S. District Courthouse
Federal Building
200 E. Liberty Street, Room 120
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48104
Phone: (734) 741-2380

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 8199
Ann Arbor, MI 48107

U.S. District Court
U.S. Post Office Building
1000 Washington Avenue, Room 304
Bay City, MI 48708
Phone: (989) 894-8800

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 913
Bay City, MI 48707

Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
600 Church St., Room 140
Flint, MI 48502
Phone: (810) 341-7840

Michigan Western District Court

U.S. District Court
399 Federal Building
110 Michigan St NW
Grand Rapids, MI 49503
Phone: (616) 456-2381

U.S. District Court
B-35 Federal Bldg
410 W Michigan Ave
Kalamazoo, MI 49007
Phone: (269) 337-5706

U.S. District Court
113 Federal Bldg
315 W Allegan St
Lansing, MI 48933
Phone: (517) 377-1559

U.S. District Court
PO Box 698
229 Federal Bldg
202 W Washington St
Marquette, MI 49855
Phone: (906) 226-2021

Ohio Northern District Court

568 United States Courthouse
Federal Building
Two South Main Street
Akron, Ohio 44308-1813
Phone: (330) 252-6000

Carl B. Stokes United States Court House
801 West Superior Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio 44113-1830
Phone: (216) 357-7000

114 United States Courthouse
1716 Spielbusch Avenue
Toledo, Ohio 43604-5383
Phone: (419) 213-5500

337 U.S. Federal Building & Courthouse
125 Market Street
Youngstown, Ohio 44503-1780
Phone: (330) 884-7400

Ohio Southern District Court

Office of the Clerk
Potter Stewart U.S. Courthouse
Room 103
100 East Fifth Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
Phone: (513) 564-7500

Office of the Clerk
Joseph Kinneary U.S. Courthouse
Room 260
85 Marconi Boulevard
Columbus, Ohio 43215
Phone: (614) 719-3000

Office of the Clerk
Federal Building, Room 712
200 West Second Street
Dayton, Ohio 45402
Telephone: (937) 512-1400

Tennessee Eastern District Court

U.S. District Court, Greeneville
220 West Depot Street, Suite 200
Greeneville, TN 37743
Phone: (423) 639-3105

U.S. District Court, Knoxville
800 Market Street, Suite 130
Knoxville, TN 37902
Phone: (865)-545-4228

U.S. District Court, Chattanooga
900 Georgia Avenue
Chattanooga, TN 37402
Phone: (423) 752-5200

U.S. District Court, Winchester
200 South Jefferson Street
Winchester, TN 37398
Phone: (931) 967-1444

Tennessee Middle District Court

U.S. District Court
801 Broadway
Nashville, TN 37203
Phone: (615) 736-5498

Tennessee Western District Court

U.S. District Court
167 N. Main Street
Memphis, TN 38103
Phone: (901) 495-1200

U.S. Courthouse
111 South Highland Avenue
Jackson, TN 38301
Phone: (731) 421-9200

7. Federal Courts in the Seventh Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit
219 South Dearborn Street
Chicago, IL 60604
Phone: (312) 435-5850

District Courts

Illinois Central District Court

Peoria Division
309 Federal Bldg
100 North East Monroe Street
Peoria, IL 61602
Phone: (309) 671-7117

Rock Island Division
40 U.S. Courthouse
211 19th Street
Rock Island, IL 61201
Phone: (309) 793-5778

Springfield Division
151 Paul Findley Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
600 East Monroe Street
Springfield, IL 62701
Phone: (217) 492-4020

Urbana Division
218 U.S. Courthouse
201 South Vine Street
Urbana, IL 61801
Phone: (217) 373-5830

Illinois Northern District Court

Main Office
Everett McKinley Dirksen Building
U.S. Courthouse, 20th Floor
219 South Dearborn Street
Chicago, IL 60604
Phone: (312) 435-5670

Rockford Division
Federal Bldg
211 South Court Street
Rockford, IL 61101
Phone: (815) 987-4355

Illinois Southern District Court

Benton Division
U.S. Courthouse, 1st Floor
301 West Main Street
Benton, IL 62812
(618) 439-7767

Main Office
104 Melvin Price Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
750 Missouri Avenue
East St. Louis, IL 62201
(618) 482-9371

Indiana Northern District Court

Fort Wayne Division
1108 E. Ross Adair Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
1300 South Harrison Street
Fort Wayne, IN 46802
Phone: (260) 423-3000

Hammond Division
United States Courthouse, Ste, 2300
5400 Federal Plaza
Hammond, IN 46320
Phone: (219) 852-6500

Lafayette Division
214 Charles A. Halleck Federal Bldg
230 North Fourth Street
Lafayette, IN 47901
Phone: (765) 420-6250

South Bend Division
102 Robert A. Grant Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
204 South Main Street
South Bend, IN 46601
Phone: (574) 246-8000

Indiana Southern District Court

Evansville Division
304 Federal Building
101 NW Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd.
Evansville, IN 47708
Phone: (812) 434-6410

Indianapolis Division
105 Birch Bayh Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
46 East Ohio Street
Indianapolis, IN 46204
Phone: (317) 229-3700

New Albany Division
210 Lee H. Hamilton Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
121 West Spring Street
New Albany, IN 47150
Phone: (812) 948-5238

Terre Haute Division
207 United States Post Office Bldg
30 North Seventh Street
Terre Haute, IN 47801
Phone: (812) 234-9484

Wisconsin Eastern District Court

Milwaukee Division
362 U.S. Courthouse and Federal Bldg
517 East Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee, WI 53202
Phone: (414) 297-3372

Green Bay Division
Jefferson Ct Bldg, 1st Fl
125 South Jefferson Street
Green Bay, WI 54305
Phone: (920) 884-3720

Wisconsin Western District Court

Main Office
Robert W. Kastenmeier U.S. Courthouse
120 North Henry Street, Room 320
Madison, WI 53703
Phone: (608) 264-5156

8. Federal Courts in the Eighth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit
Main Office
Thomas F. Eagleton Courthouse
111 South 10th Street
St. Louis, MO 63102
Phone: (314) 244-2400

Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit
St. Paul Office
Room 500
180 East Fifth Street
St. Paul, MN 55101
Phone: (651) 848-1300

District Courts

Arkansas Eastern District Court

Main Office
A149 Richard Sheppard Arnold
U.S. Courthouse
600 West Capitol Avenue
Little Rock, AR 72201
Phone: (501) 604-5351

Jonesboro Division
312 Federal Bldg
615 South Main Street
Jonesboro, AR 72401
Phone: (870) 972-4610

Pine Bluff Division
3103 George Howard, Jr. Federal
Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
100 East Eighth Avenue
Pine Bluff, AR 71601
Phone: (870) 536-1190

Batesville Divisional Office
490 College Street
Batesville, AR 72501
(This office is not staffed.)

Helena Divisional Office
617 Walnut
Helena, AR 72342
(This office is not staffed.)

Arkansas Western District Court

El Dorado Division
U,S, Post Office and Courthouse
101 South Jackson Avenue
El Dorado, AR 71730
Phone: (870) 862-1202

Fayetteville Division
510 John Paul Hammerschmidt Federal Bldg
35 East Mountain St, Suite 510
Fayetteville, AR 72701
Phone: (479) 521-6980

Main Office
1038 Judge Isaac C. Parker Federal Bldg
South 6th Street & Rogers Avenue
Fort Smith, AR 72901
Phone: (479) 783-6833
J. Smith Henley Federal Building
402 N. Walnut, Room 238
Harrison, AR 72601
Phone: (479) 521-6980
(This office is not staffed; inquiries should be sent to the Fayetteville office.)

Hot Springs Division
347 U.S. Post Office and Courthouse
100 Reserve Street, Room 347
Hot Springs, AR 71901
Phone: (501) 623-6411

Texarkana Division
U.S. Courthouse and Post Office Bldg
500 North State Line Blvd.
Texarkana, AR 75501
Phone: (870) 773-3381

Iowa Northern District Court

Main Office
4200 C Street SW
Cedar Rapids, IA 52404
Phone: (319) 286-2300

Sioux City Division
301 U.S. Courthouse
320 Sixth Street
Sioux City, IA 51101
Phone: (712) 233-3900

Iowa Southern District Court

Main Office
123 E. Walnut St., Room 300
Des Moines, IA 50309-
Phone: (515) 284-6421

Davenport Division
U. S. Courthouse
211 19th Street
Davenport, IL 52801
Phone: (563) 884-7607

Council Bluffs Division
313 U. S. Post Office and Courthouse
8 South 6th Street
Council Bluffs, IA 51501
Phone: (712) 320-0283

Minnesota District Court

Main Office
202 U.S. Courthouse
300 South 4th Street
Minneapolis, MN 55415
Phone: (612) 664-5000

St. Paul Division
Warren E. Burger Federal Bldg
316 North Robert Street
St. Paul, MN 55101
Phone: (651) 848-1100

Duluth Division
417 Gerald W. Heaney Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
515 West 1st Street
Duluth, MN 55802-1397
Phone: (218) 529-3500

Fergus Falls Division
205 U.S. Courthouse
118 South Mill Street
Fergus Falls, MN 56537
Phone: (218) 739-5758

Missouri Eastern District Court

Main Office
3.300 Thomas F. Eagleton U.S. Courthouse
111 South 10th Street
St. Louis, MO 63102
Phone: (314) 244-7900

Cape Girardeau Division
Rush Hudson Limbaugh, Sr. U.S. Courthouse, 2nd Fl
555 Independence Street
Cape Girardeau, MO 63701
Phone: (573) 331-8800

Hannibal Division
801 Broadway
Hannibal, MO 63401
Phone: (573) 221-8303
(This office is not staffed except when court is in session.)

Missouri Western District

Central Division at Jefferson City
310 U.S. Courthouse
131 West High Street
Jefferson City, MO 65101
Phone: (573) 636-4015

Springfield Division
1400 U.S. Courthouse
222 N. John Q. Hammons Parkway
Springfield, MO 65806
Phone: (417) 865-3869

Main Office
1510 Charles Evans Whittaker U.S. Courthouse
400 East 9th Street
Kansas City, MO 64106
Phone: (816) 512-5000

Nebraska District Court

Main Office
Roman L. Hruska U.S. Courthouse, Ste. 1152
111 South 18th Plaza
Omaha, NE 68102
Phone: (402) 661-7350

Lincoln Division
593 Robert V. Denney U.S. Courthouse
593 Federal Bldg
100 Centennial Mall North
Lincoln, NE 68508
Phone: (402) 437-5225

North Dakota District Court

Main Office
159 Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
220 East Rosser Ave.
Bismarck, ND 58501
Phone: (701) 530-2400

Fargo Division
130 Quentin N. Burdick U.S. Courthouse
655 1st Avenue North
Fargo, ND 58102
Phone: (701) 297-7000

Grand Forks Division
Ronald N. Davies Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse, Ste. 308
102 North 4th Street
Grand Forks, ND 58201
Phone: (701) 746-0259

Minot Division
Federal Bldg, Ste. 307
100 1st Street, SW
Minot, ND 58701
Phone: (701) 839-7960

South Dakota District Court

Main Office
128 U.S. Courthouse
400 South Phillips Avenue
Sioux Falls, SD 57104
Phone: (605) 330-6600

405 U.S. Post Office and Courthouse
225 South Pierre Street
Pierre, SD 57501
Phone: (605) 945-4600

302 Federal Bldg and U.S. Courthouse
515 Ninth Street
Rapid City, SD 57701
Phone: (605) 399-6000

9. Federal Courts in the Ninth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
95 Seventh Street
San Francisco, CA 94103
Phone: (415) 355-8000

The Richard H. Chambers
125 South Grand Avenue
Pasadena, CA 91105
Phone: (626) 229-7250

Mailing Address:
PO Box 91510
Pasadena CA 91109-1510

Pioneer Courthouse
700 S.W. 6th Avenue, Suite 110
Portland, Oregon 97204-1434
Phone: (503) 833-5311

Park Place Building
1200 6th Avenue
Seattle, WA 98101
Phone: (206) 553-2937

District Courts

Alaska District Court

U.S. District Court
222 W. 7th Avenue, #4
Anchorage, AK 99513
Phone: (866) 243-3814 toll free

U.S. District Court
101 12th Avenue
Room 332
Fairbanks, AK 99701
Phone: (866) 243-3813 toll free

U.S. District Court
PO Box 020349
Juneau, AK 99802
Phone: (866) 243-3812 toll free

U.S. District Court
648 Mission Street
Room 507
Ketchikan, AK 99901
Phone: (907) 247-7576

U.S. District Court
PO Box 130
Nome, AK 99762
Phone: (907) 443-5216

Arizona District Court

123 N. San Francisco Street, Suite 200
Flagstaff, AZ 86001
Phone: (928) 774-2566

Sandra Day O'Connor U.S. Courthouse
401 W. Washington Street, Suite 130, SPC 1
Phoenix, AZ 85003-2118
Phone: (602) 322-7200

U.S. Post Office Building
101 W. Goodwin Street
Prescott, AZ 86303
Phone: (928) 445-6598

Evo A. DeConcini U.S. Courthouse
405 W. Congress Street, Suite 1500
Tucson, AZ 85701-5010
Phone: (520) 205-4200

325 W. 19th Street
Yuma, AZ 85364
Phone: (928) 329-4766

California Central District Court

Riverside Courthouse
3470 Twelfth Street
Riverside, CA 92501
Phone: (951) 328-4450

Santa Ana Courthouse
411 West Fourth Street
Room 1053
Santa Ana, CA 92701
Phone: (714) 338-4750

Roybal Federal Building
255 East Temple Street
Los Angeles, CA 90012
Phone: (213) 894-1565 or
(213) 894-2215

Spring Street Courthouse
312 N. Spring Street
Los Angeles, CA 90012
Phone: (213) 894-1565 or
(213) 894-2215

California Eastern District Court

501 I Street, Suite 4-200
Sacramento, CA 95814
Phone: (916) 930-4000

U.S. District Court
2500 Tulare Street
Fresno, CA 93721
Phone: (559) 499-5600

P. O. Box 575
9004 Castle Cliffs Court
Yosemite National Park, CA 95389.
Phone: (209) 372-0320

2986 Bechelli Lane
Redding, CA 96002
Phone: (530) 246-5416

California Northern District Court

514 H Street
Eureka, CA 95501-1038
Phone: (707) 445-3612

1301 Clay Street,
Suite 400 S
Oakland, CA 94612-5212
Phone: (510) 637-3530

450 Golden Gate Ave., 16th Floor
San Francisco, CA 94102
Phone: (415) 522-2000

280 South 1st Street
San Jose, CA 95113
Phone: (408) 535-5363

California Southern District Court

Edward J. Schwartz U.S. Courthouse
940 Front Street
San Diego, CA 92101-8900
Phone: (619) 557-5600

U.S. District Court
Office of the Clerk
880 Front Street, Suite 4290
San Diego, CA 92101-8900
Phone: (619) 557-5600

U.S. District Court
2003 W. Adams Ave, Ste 220
El Centro, CA 92243
Phone: (760) 353-1271

Guam District Court

4th Floor, U.S. Courthouse
520 West Soledad Avenue
Hagatna, Guam 96910
Phone: (671) 473-9100

Hawaii District Court

300 Ala Moana Boulevard Rm C338
Honolulu, HI 96850
Phone: (808) 541-1300

Idaho District Court

Clerk of the Courts
451 West State Street
Boise, ID 83702
Phone: (208) 334-2210

Mailing Address:
PO Box 83720
Boise, ID 83720-0101

Ada County Courthouse
Room 4171
200 W. Front Street
Boise, Idaho 83702
Phone: (208) 287-7500

Nez Perce County Courthouse
PO Box 896
Lewiston, ID 83501
Phone: (208) 799-3050

PO Box 9000
Coeur d'Alene, ID 83816-9000
Phone: (208) 446-1170

Montana District Court

James F. Battin Courthouse
316 North 26th Street
Billings, MT 59101
Phone: (406) 247-7000

U.S. District Court
400 North Main
Butte, MT 59701
Phone: (406) 782-0432

U. S. District Court
125 Central Avenue West
Great Falls, MT 59401
Phone: (406) 727-1922

Paul G. Hatfield Courthouse
901 Front Street
Helena, MT 59626
Phone: (406) 441-1355

Russell Smith Courthouse
201 East Broadway
Missoula, MT 59801
Phone: (406) 542-7260

Nevada District Court

333 S. Las Vegas Blvd.
Las Vegas, NV 89101
Phone: (702) 464-5400

400 S. Virginia St.
Reno, NV 89501
Phone: (775) 686-5800

Northern Mariana Islands District Court

2nd Floor, Horiguchi Building, Garapan
P.O. Box 500687
Saipan, MP 96950
Phone: (670) 236-2902

Oregon District Court

Mark O. Hatfield U.S. Courthouse
1000 S.W. Third Avenue
Office of the Clerk, Suite 740
Portland, OR 97204-2902
Civil Cases: (503) 326-8008
Criminal Cases (503) 326-8003

Wayne L. Morse U.S. Courthouse
405 East Eighth Avenue, Room 2100
Eugene, OR 97401
Phone: (541) 431-4100

James A. Redden U.S. Courthouse
310 West Sixth, Room 201
Medford, OR 97501
Phone: 541-608-8777

Washington Eastern District Court

Thomas S. Foley U.S. Courthouse
920 West Riverside Avenue
Spokane, WA 99201
Phone: (509) 458-3400

Mailing Address:
PO Box 1493
Spokane, WA 99210

U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
825 Jadwin Avenue, Room 174
Richland, WA 99352
Phone: (509) 376-7262

William O. Douglas Courthouse
25 South Third Street
Yakima, WA 98907
Phone: (509) 573-6600

Mailing Address:
US District Court
P.O. Box 2706
Yakima, WA 98907

Washington Western District Court

U.S. Courthouse
700 Stewart Street
Seattle, WA 98101
Phone: (206) 370-8400

Union Station Courthouse
1717 Pacific Avenue
Tacoma, WA 98402
Phone: (253) 882-3800

10. Federal Courts in the Tenth Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit
The Byron White U.S. Courthouse
1823 Stout Street
Denver, CO 80257
Phone: (303) 844-3157

District Courts

Colorado District Court

Alfred A. Arraj U.S. Courthouse
901 19th Street, Room A105
Denver, Colorado 80294-3589
Civil Division: (303) 844-3433
Criminal Division: (303) 844-2115

Kansas District Court

500 State Ave.
259 U.S. Courthouse
Kansas City, Kansas 66101
Phone: (913) 551-6719

444 S.E. Quincy
490 U.S. Courthouse
Topeka, Kansas 66683
Phone: (785) 295-2610

401 N. Market
204 U.S. Courthouse
Wichita, Kansas 67202
Phone: (316) 269-6491

New Mexico District Court

Clerk's Office
U.S. District Court
333 Lomas N.W.
Albuquerque, NM 87102
Phone: (505) 348-2000

Clerk's Office
U.S. District Court
200 E. Griggs Ave.
Las Cruces, NM 88001
Phone: (575) 528-1400

Santiago E. Campos United States Courthouse
106 S. Federal Place
Santa Fe, NM 87501
Phone: (505) 988-6481

U.S. Circuit Court
500 N. Richardson
Roswell, NM 88201
Phone: (575) 625-2388

Oklahoma Eastern District Court

101 N. 5th Street, P.O. Box 607
Muskogee, OK 74402-0607
Phone: (918) 684-7920

Oklahoma Northern District Court

333 W. 4th St., Room 411
Tulsa, OK 74103
Phone: (918) 699-4700

Oklahoma Western District Court

200 NW 4th Street, Room 1210
Oklahoma City, OK 73102
Phone: (405) 609-5000

Utah District Court

350 S Main St, Room 150
Salt Lake City, UT, 84101-2106
Phone: (801) 524-6100

Wyoming District Court

2120 Capitol Avenue, Second Floor
Cheyenne, WY 82001-3658
Phone: (307) 433-2120

111 South Wolcott St.
Casper, WY 82601-2534
Phone: (307) 232-2620

11. Federal Courts in the Eleventh Circuit

Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit
56 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, GA 30303
Phone: (404) 335-6100

District Courts

Alabama Middle District Court

Frank M. Johnson Federal Courthouse
One Church Street
Montgomery, AL 36104
Phone: (334) 954-3600

Mailing Address:
Clerk of the Court
P.O. Box 711
Montgomery, AL 36101

Alabama Northern District Court

Hugo L. Black U. S. Courthouse
1729 Fifth Avenue North
Birmingham, AL 35203
Phone: (205) 278-1700

Alabama Southern District Court

United States District Courthouse
113 St. Joseph Street
Mobile, AL 36602
Phone: (251) 690-2371

Florida Middle District Court

Bryan Simpson United States Courthouse
300 North Hogan Street
Jacksonville, FL 32202
Phone: (904) 549-1900

Golden-Collum Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
207 Northwest Second Street
Ocala, FL 34475
Phone: (352) 369-4860

U.S. Courthouse
401 West Central Boulevard, Suite 1200
Orlando, FL 32801-0120
Phone: (407) 835-4200

Sam M. Gibbons U.S. Courthouse
801 North Florida Ave.
Tampa, FL 33602
Phone: (813) 301-5400

U.S. Courthouse & Federal Building
2110 First Street
Fort Myers, FL 33901
Phone: (239) 461-2000

Florida Northern District Court

United States Courthouse
401 SE First Ave. Rm 243
Gainesville, FL 32601
Phone: (352) 380-2400

United States Courthouse
30 W. Government St.
Panama City, FL 32401
Phone: (850) 769-4556

United States Courthouse
1 North Palafox St.
Pensacola, FL 32502
Phone: (850) 435-8440

United States Courthouse
111 N. Adams St.
Tallahassee, FL 32301-7730
Phone: (850) 521-3501

Florida Southern District Court

United States Courthouse
Room 108
299 East Broward Boulevard
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33301
Phone: (954) 769-5400

300 South Sixth Street
Fort Pierce, FL 34950
Phone: (772) 467-2300

Wilkie D. Ferguson, Jr. U.S. Courthouse
400 North Miami Avenue, 8th floor
Miami, FL 33128
Phone: (305) 523-5100

301 Simonton Street
Key West, FL 33040
Phone: (305) 295-8100

Paul G. Rogers Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
701 Clematis Street
West Palm Beach, FL 33401
Phone: (561) 803-3400

Georgia Middle District Court

C. B. King U.S. Courthouse
201 West Broad Avenue
Albany, Georgia 31701
Phone: (229) 430-8432

U.S. Post Office & Courthouse
115 E. Hancock Avenue
Athens, GA 30601
Phone: (706) 227-1094

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 1106
Athens, GA 30601
Phone: (706) 227-1094

U.S. Post Office & Court House
Suite 216
120 12th Street
Columbus, GA 31902
Phone: (706) 649-7816

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 124
Columbus, GA 31902

William A. Bootle Federal Building and U.S. Courthouse
475 Mulberry Street, Suite 216
Macon, GA 31202
Phone: (478) 752-3497

Mailing Address
P.O. Box 128
Macon, GA 31202

U.S. Courthouse & Post Office
401 N. Patterson Street, Suite 212
Valdosta, GA 31601
Phone: (229) 242-3616

Mailing Address:
P.O. Box 68
Valdosta, GA 31601

Georgia Northern District Court

Richard B. Russell Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
75 Spring Street, SW
Atlanta, GA 30303-3361
Phone: (404) 215-1600

Federal Building
121 Spring Street, S.E., Room 201
Gainesville, Georgia 30501
Phone: (678) 450-2760

Lewis R. Morgan Federal Building & U.S. Courthouse
18 Greenville Street
Newnan, Georgia 30263
Phone: (678) 423-3060

United States Courthouse
600 East First Street
Rome, Georgia 30161
Phone: (706) 378-4060

Georgia Southern District Court

U.S. Courthouse
125 Bull Street
Savannah, GA 31401
Phone: (912) 650-4020

Federal Justice Center
600 James Brown Blvd
Augusta, GA 30901
Phone: (706) 849-4400

Frank M. Scarlett Federal Building
801 Gloucester Street
Brunswick, GA 31520
Phone: (912) 280-1330

12. Federal Courts in the D.C. Circuit and Federal Circuit

DC Circuit Court of Appeals

Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20001
Phone: (202) 216-7300

DC District Court

United States District Court for the District of Columbia
5423 E. Barrett Prettyman U.S. Courthouse
333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20001
Phone: (202) 354-3000

Federal Circuit

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit
717 Madison Place, N.W.
Washington, DC 20439
Phone: (202) 633-6550

B. New York State Prisons and Their Respective Federal Judicial Districts

Prison	Federal District
Adirondack	Northern
Albion	Western
Altona	Northern
Arthur Kill	Eastern
Attica	Western
Auburn	Northern
Bare Hill	Northern
Bayview	Southern
Beacon	Southern
Bedford Hills	Southern
Buffalo	Western
Butler	Western
Camp Gabriels	Northern
Camp Georgetown	Northern
Camp Pharsalia	Northern
Camp Vincent	Northern
Cayuga	Northern
Chateaugay	Northern
Clinton	Northern
Collins	Western
Coxsackie	Northern
Downstate	Southern
Eastern	Northern
Edgecombe	Southern
Elmira	Western
Fishkill	Southern
Franklin	Northern
Fulton	Southern
Gouverneur	Northern
Gowanda	Western
Great Meadows	Northern
Green Haven	Southern
Greene	Northern
Groveland	Western
Hale Creek	Northern
Hudson	Northern
Lakeview	Western
Lincoln	Southern
Livingston	Western
Lyon Mountain	Northern
Marcy	Northern
Mid-Orange	Southern
Mid-State	Northern
Mohawk	Northern
Monterey	Western
Moriah	Northern
Mt. McGregor	Northern
Ogdensburg	Northern
Oneida	Northern
Orleans	Western
Otisville	Southern
Queensboro	Eastern
Riverview	Northern
Rochester	Western
Shawangunk	Northern
Sing Sing	Southern
Southport	Western
Sullivan	Southern
Summit Shock	Northern
Taconic	Southern
Ulster	Northern
Upstate	Northern
Wallkill	Northern
Washington	Northern
Watertown	Northern
Wende	Western
Willard	Western
Woodbourne	Southern
Wyoming	Western

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Appendix II:
New York State: Filing Instructions & Addresses of New York State Courts

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

APPENDIX II

NEW YORK STATE: FILING INSTRUCTIONS & ADDRESSES OF NEW YORK STATE COURTS

This Appendix contains information on how to file legal papers in New York State as well as contact information for New York State Courts, including clerks' offices.

A. General Filing Instructions

The Chapter explaining the legal action you are filing should tell you with whom you need to file your papers. This Appendix provides the addresses for the Supreme Courts and County Clerks of New York. Part B explains how to file your poor person's papers with a County Attorney. Part C lists the addresses of the New York Supreme Courts. Part D lists the addresses of the New York County Clerks. Part E lists the addresses of the New York Court of Appeals and Appellate Division Courts.

The County Clerk generally forwards all mail to the judge in his or her county. But, the addresses of Supreme Court Clerks are also included for your convenience. If you are unsure of the Supreme Court address, always send your mail to the County Clerk, who will forward it to the appropriate party.

If you already have an index number,[1] you should send your documentation to the Supreme Court Clerk and should include the index number with all correspondence. If you do not have an index number and you are filing a new petition (like an Article 78 petition), you need to file a Request for Judicial Intervention ("RJI") with the County Clerk to obtain an index number. When mailing documentation, you should make specific reference to the person you are trying to contact by addressing the envelope: "[name or title of the person you are trying to contact] c/o County Clerk [or Supreme Court Clerk], _____ County," followed by the correct town, state, and ZIP code.

For Article 440 and other proceedings related to your criminal sentence, you should mail documents and letters to the "Clerk of the Criminal Court, Supreme Court, _____ County." For Article 78 and all civil proceedings, you should mail documents and letters to the "Clerk of the Civil Court, Supreme Court, _____ County."

If the Chapter about the type of lawsuit you are filing instructs you to file any of your papers (for example, poor person's papers, notice of your suit, or any other motion or filing) with the District Attorney, see Appendix III for a list of their addresses.

B. How to File Poor Person's Papers with the County Attorney

If you are applying for poor person's status to not have to pay full court costs, send a copy of your poor person's papers either to the county clerk or to the county attorney for the county where the court is located.[2] The county attorney is not the same as the district attorney. The County Attorney can be reached at the county office building, listed in this Appendix's County Clerk part. Send your papers to the "County Attorney" at that address. If you address the envelope "County Attorney, _____ County Office Building, [name of county], New York," your papers should arrive at the right place.

If you are filing suit in New York City, you should send a copy of your poor person's papers to the Corporation Counsel instead of the county attorney. The address is Corporation Counsel, 100 Church Street, 4th Floor, New York, New York 10007. The phone number is (212) 788-0303.

---

1. The index number appears on the top right-hand corner of all papers submitted to the court in your case.

2. § 1101 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules requires poor person's status applicants to notify the county attorney only if they are applying for poor person's status after the start of a legal action. But, several of the legal actions discussed in the JLM are merely continuations of prior actions. To be safe, notify the county attorney or Corporation Counsel every time you request poor person's status. When you notify the county attorney or Corporation Counsel, include a letter stating the county in which you were convicted and sentenced and the indictment number (or docket number) from your trial. This may speed the processing of your papers, since they customarily check to see if you had a private attorney at your trial. If you did, they may decide to oppose your petition for poor person's status.

C. New York Supreme Court Addresses

1. Supreme Court Clerk Addresses Within New York City

BRONX COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
Bronx County Courthouse
851 Grand Concourse
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 618-1200

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
265 East 161st Street
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 618-3000

KINGS COUNTY (BROOKLYN)
Supreme Court Clerk
Kings County Courthouse
360 Adams Street, Room 189
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(347) 404-9772 (Main Clerks Office)
(347) 404-9123 (Civil Term)
(347) 296-1122 (Criminal Term)

NEW YORK COUNTY (MANHATTAN)
Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
60 Centre Street, Room 161
New York, NY 10007
(646) 386-5955

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
New York County Courthouse
111 Centre Street, Room 927
New York, NY 10013
(646) 386-4000

QUEENS COUNTY

* Queens County has three different Supreme Courts. If you don't know which of these three parts you are in, call (718) 520-3933 to find out.

Supreme Court Clerk, Civil Term
88-11 Sutphin Boulevard
Jamaica, NY 11435
(718) 298-1140

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
125-01 Queens Boulevard
Kew Gardens, NY 11415

Supreme Court Clerk, Criminal Term
25-10 Court Square
Long Island City, NY 11101
(718) 298-1408)

RICHMOND COUNTY (STATEN ISLAND)
Supreme Court Clerk
Richmond County Courthouse
130 Stuyvesant Place
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 390-5386

2. Supreme Court Clerk Addresses Outside of New York City

ALBANY COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Albany County Courthouse
16 Eagle Street, Room 102
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 285-8989

ALLEGANY COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Allegany County Courthouse
7 Court Street
Belmont, NY 14813
(585) 268-5813

BROOME COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Broome County Courthouse
P.O. Box 1766
Binghamton, NY 13902
(607) 778-2448

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Cattaraugus County Courthouse
303 Court Street
Little Valley, NY 14755
(716) 938-9111

CAYUGA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Cayuga County Courthouse
152 Genesee Street
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 255-4320

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Chautauqua County Courthouse
1 North Erie Street
P.O. Box 292
Mayville, NY 14757
(716) 753-4266

CHEMUNG COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Hazlett Building
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902
(607) 737-2084

CHENANGO COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Chenango County Office Building
5 Court Street
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 337-1457

CLINTON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Clinton County Government Center
137 Margaret Street, 1st Floor
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 565-4700

COLUMBIA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Columbia County Courthouse
401 Union Street
Hudson, NY 12534
(518) 828-7858

CORTLAND COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Cortland County Courthouse
46 Greenbush Street, Suite 301
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 753-5013

DELAWARE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Delaware County Courthouse
3 Court Street
Delhi, NY 13753
(607) 746-2131

DUTCHESS COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Dutchess County Courthouse
10 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
(845) 486-2260

ERIE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Erie County Court Building
25 Delaware Avenue, Ground Floor
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 845-9301

ESSEX COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Essex County Courthouse
7559 Court Street
P.O. Box 247
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
(518) 873-3601

FRANKLIN COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Franklin County Courthouse
355 West Main Street
P.O. Box 70
Malone, NY 12953
(518) 481-1681

FULTON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Fulton County Office Building
223 West Main Street
P.O. Box 485
Johnstown, NY 12095
(518) 736-5555

GENESEE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Courts Facility Building
CO Bldg. #1, Box 379
Batavia, NY 14021
(585) 344-2550

GREENE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Greene County Courthouse
411 Main Street
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 719-3255

HAMILTON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Hamilton County Court Chambers
Route 8, Box 204
Lake Pleasant, NY 12108
(518) 548-7111

HERKIMER COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Herkimer County Office & Court Facility
109 Mary Street, Suite 1111
Herkimer, NY 13350
(315) 867-1129

JEFFERSON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
State Office Building
175 Arsenal Street
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 785-3081

LEWIS COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Lewis County Courthouse
7660 State Street
P.O. Box 232
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-5333

LIVINGSTON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Government Center
6 Court Street, Room 201
Geneseo, NY 14454
(585) 243-7000

MADISON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
P.O. Box 668
Wampsville, NY 13163
(315) 366-2261

MONROE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Building
39 West Main Street, Room 101
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 753-1624

MONTGOMERY COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
P.O. Box 1500
Fonda, NY 12068
(518) 853-8111

NASSAU COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Supreme Court Building
240 Old Country Road
Mineola, NY 11501
(516) 571-2664

NIAGARA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
175 Hawley Street
P.O. Box 461
Lockport, NY 14094
(716) 439-7025

ONEIDA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
800 Park Avenue
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 798-5773

ONONDAGA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Clerk's Office
401 Montgomery Street, Room 200
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 435-2226

ONTARIO COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Municipal Building
20 Ontario Street
Canandaigua, NY 14424
(585) 396-4200

ORANGE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Orange County Government Center
255 Main Street
Goshen, NY 10924
(845) 291-2690

ORLEANS COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
3 South Main Street
Albion, NY 14411
(585) 589-5334

OSWEGO COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
46 East Bridge Street
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 349-8621

OTSEGO COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Otsego County Office Building
197 Main Street
P.O. Box 710
Cooperstown, NY 13326
(607) 547-4276

PUTNAM COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
40 Gleneida Avenue
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 225-3641, ext. 300

RENSSELAER COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Rensselaer County Courthouse
105 Third Street
Troy, NY 12180
(518) 270-4080

ROCKLAND COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Rockland County Courthouse
1 South Main Street, Suite 100
New City, NY 10956
(845) 638-5221

SARATOGA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
40 McMaster Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
(518) 885-2213

SCHENECTADY COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
620 State Street, 3rd Floor
Schenectady, NY 12305
(518) 388-4225

SCHOHARIE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
284 Main Street
P.O. Box 549
Schoharie, NY 12157
(518) 295-8316

SCHUYLER COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
105 9th Street, Unit 8
Watkins Glen, NY 14891
(607) 535-8133

SENECA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
1 DiPronio Drive
Waterloo, NY 13165
(315) 539-1771

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
48 Court Street
Canton, NY 13617
(315) 379-2237

STEUBEN COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-9631

SUFFOLK COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
310 Center Drive
Riverhead, NY 11901
(631) 852-2048

SULLIVAN COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Office Building
100 North Street
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 794-3000, ext. 5012

TIOGA COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
County Clerk's Office
P.O. Box 307
16 Court Street
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-8660

TOMPKINS COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Tompkins County Courthouse
320 North Tioga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 274-5431

ULSTER COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
244 Fair Street
P.O. Box 1800
Kingston, NY 12402
(845) 340-3000

WARREN COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
Warren County Municipal Center
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845
(518) 761-6429

WASHINGTON COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
383 Broadway, Building A
Fort Edward, NY 12828
(518) 746-2170

WAYNE COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
9 Pearl Street
P.O. Box 608
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 946-7470

WESTCHESTER COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
110 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd.
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 995-3071

WYOMING COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
143 North Main Street, Suite 104
Warsaw, NY 14569
(585) 786-8810

YATES COUNTY
Supreme Court Clerk
417 Liberty Street, Suite 1107
Penn Yan, NY 14527
(315) 536-5120

D. County Clerk Addresses for Counties Outside New York City

ALBANY COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
32 North Russell Road
Albany, NY 12206
(518) 487-5100

ALLEGANY COUNTY
County Clerk
Count Office Building
7 Court Street, Room 18
Belmont, NY 14813
(585) 268-9270

BROOME COUNTY
County Clerk
Broome County Courthouse
Room 204
P.O. Box 1776
Binghamton, NY 13902
(607) 778-2451

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY
Cattaraugus County Center
303 Court Street
Little Valley, NY 14755
(716) 938-9111

CAYUGA COUNTY
County Clerk
Cayuga County Office Building
160 Genesee Street, 1st Floor
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 253-1653

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY
County Clerk
1 North Erie Street
P.O. Box 170
Mayville, NY 14757
(716) 753-4331

CHEMUNG COUNTY
County Clerk
210 Lake Street
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902
(607) 737-2920

CHENANGO COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
5 Court Street
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 337-1450

CLINTON COUNTY
County Clerk
County Government Center
137 Margaret Street, Suite 301
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 565-4700

COLUMBIA COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
560 Warren Street
Hudson, NY 12534
(518) 828- 3339

CORTLAND COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
46 Greenbush Street, Suite 301
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 753-5021

DELAWARE COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
P.O. Box 426
Delhi, NY 13753
(607) 746-2123

DUTCHESS COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
10 Market Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
(845) 486-2260

ERIE COUNTY
Erie County Clerk's Office
25 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 845-9301

ESSEX COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
7559 Court Street
P.O. Box 247
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
(518) 873-3601

FRANKLIN COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
355 West Main Street
P.O. Box 70
Malone, NY 12953
(518) 481-1681

FULTON COUNTY
County Clerk
County Building
223 West Main Street
P.O. Box 485
Johnstown, NY 12095
(518) 736-5555

GENESEE COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
P.O. Box 379
Batavia, NY 14021
(585) 344-2550

GREENE COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
P.O. Box 446
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 943-2050

HAMILTON COUNTY
County Clerk
P.O. Box 204
Route 8
Lake Pleasant, NY 12108
(518) 548-7111

HERKIMER COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
109 Mary Street, Suite 1111
Herkimer, NY 13350
(315) 867-1135

JEFFERSON COUNTY
County Clerk
175 Arsenal Street
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 785-3081

LEWIS COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
7660 State Street, 1st Floor
P.O. Box 232
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-5333

LIVINGSTON COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
6 Court Street
Geneseo, NY 14454
(585) 243-7000

MADISON COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
P.O. Box 668
Wampsville, NY 13163
(315) 366-2261

MONROE COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
39 West Main Street, Room 101
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 428-5151

MONTGOMERY COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
P.O. Box 1500
Fonda, NY 12068
(518) 853-8111

NASSAU COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
240 Old Country Road
Mineola, NY 11501
(516) 571-2661

NIAGARA COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
175 Hawley Street
P.O. Box 461
Lockport, NY 14094
(716) 439-7022

ONEIDA COUNTY
County Clerk
Oneida County Office Building
800 Park Avenue
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 798-5773

ONONDAGA COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
County Office Building
401 Montgomery Street, Room 200
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 435-2226

ONTARIO COUNTY
County Clerk
20 Ontario Street
Canandaigua, NY 14424
(585) 396-4200

ORANGE COUNTY
County Clerk
Orange County Government Center
255 Main Street
Goshen, NY 10924
(845) 291-2690

ORLEANS COUNTY
County Clerk
3 South Main Street
Albion, NY 14411
(585) 589-5334

OSWEGO COUNTY
County Clerk
46 East Bridge Street
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 349-8621

OTSEGO COUNTY
County Clerk
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326
(607) 547-4276

PUTNAM COUNTY
County Clerk
Putnam County Office Building
40 Gleneida Avenue, Room 100
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 225-3641

RENSSELAER COUNTY
County Clerk
105 Third Street
Troy, NY 12180
(518) 270-4080

ROCKLAND COUNTY
County Clerk
Rockland County Courthouse
1 South Main Street, Suite 100
New City, NY 10956
(845) 638-5070

SARATOGA COUNTY
County Clerk
40 McMaster Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
(518) 885-2213

SCHENECTADY COUNTY
County Clerk
620 State Street
Schenectady, NY 12305
(518) 388-4220

SCHOHARIE COUNTY
County Clerk
300 Main Street
P.O. Box 549
Schoharie, NY 12157
(518) 295-8316

SCHUYLER COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
105 Ninth Street
Watkins Glen, NY 14891
(607) 535-8133

SENECA COUNTY
County Clerk
Seneca County Office Building
1 DiPronio Drive
Waterloo, NY 13165
(315) 539-1771

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY
County Clerk
48 Court Street
Canton, NY 13617
(315) 379-2237

STEUBEN COUNTY
County Clerk
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-9631, ext. 3203

SUFFOLK COUNTY
County Clerk
310 Center Drive
Riverhead, NY 11901
(631) 852-2000

SULLIVAN COUNTY
County Clerk
Sullivan County Government Center
100 North Street
P.O. Box 5012
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 794-3000, ext. 5012

TIOGA COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
16 Court Street
P.O. Box 307
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-8660

TOMPKINS COUNTY
County Clerk
Courthouse
320 North Tioga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 274-5431

ULSTER COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
244 Fair Street
P.O. Box 1800
Kingston, NY 12401
(845) 340-3000

WARREN COUNTY
County Clerk
Warren County Municipal Center
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845
(518) 761-6429

WASHINGTON COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
383 Broadway, Building A
Ft. Edward, NY 12828
(518) 746-2170

WAYNE COUNTY
County Clerk
County Office Building
9 Pearl Street
P.O. Box 608
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 946-7470

WESTCHESTER COUNTY
County Clerk
110 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd.
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 995-3071

WYOMING COUNTY
County Clerk
143 North Main Street, Suite 104
Warsaw, NY 14569
(585) 786-8810

YATES COUNTY
County Clerk
County Building
417 Liberty Street, Suite 1107
Penn Yan, NY 14527
(315) 536-5120

E. New York Court of Appeals and Appellate Division Addresses

COURT OF APPEALS

20 Eagle Street
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 455-7700

FIRST DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
First Department
27 Madison Avenue
New York, NY 10010
(212) 340-0400

District includes: Bronx and New York (Manhattan) counties

SECOND DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
Second Department
Supreme Court Building
45 Monroe Place
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 875-1300

District includes: Dutchess, Kings (Brooklyn), Nassau, Orange, Putnam, Queens, Richmond (Staten Island), Rockland, Suffolk, and Westchester counties

THIRD DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
Third Department
Justice Building
P.O. Box 7288
Capitol Station
Albany, NY 12224
(518) 471-4777

District includes: Albany, Broome, Chemung, Chenango, Clinton, Columbia, Cortland, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Hamilton, Madison, Montgomery, Otsego, Rensselaer, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Schuyler, Sullivan, Tioga, Tompkins, Ulster, Warren, and Washington counties

FOURTH DEPARTMENT

Appellate Division
Fourth Department
M. Dolores Denman Courthouse
50 East Avenue
Rochester, New York 14604
(585) 530-3100

District includes: Allegany, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orleans, Oswego, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, and Yates counties

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual

Appendix III: Addresses of New York District Attorneys

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

APPENDIX III

ADDRESSES OF NEW YORK DISTRICT ATTORNEYS

You should send copies of your papers to the District Attorney when you are filing a criminal appeal or Article 440 motion.

ALBANY COUNTY
District Attorney
Albany County
Albany Judicial Center
6 Lodge Street, 4th Floor
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 487-5460

ALLEGANY COUNTY
District Attorney
Allegany County
7 Court Street, Room 212A
Belmont, NY 14813
(585) 268-9225

BRONX
District Attorney
Bronx County
198 East 161st Street, 9th Floor
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 590-2000

BROOKLYN
See KINGS COUNTY

BROOME COUNTY
District Attorney
Broome County
Press Building
19 Chenango Street, 7th Floor
Binghamton, NY 13901
(607) 778-2423

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY
District Attorney
Cattaraugus County Center
303 Court Street
Little Valley, NY 14755
(716) 938-9111, ext. 2220

CAYUGA COUNTY
District Attorney
Cayuga County
95 Genesee Street
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 253-1391

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY
District Attorney
Chautauqua County
County Courthouse
1 North Erie Street
Mayville, NY 14757
(716) 753-4241

CHEMUNG COUNTY
District Attorney
Chemung County
226 Lake Street
P.O. Box 588
Elmira, NY 14902
(607) 737-2944

CHENANGO COUNTY
District Attorney
Chenango County
Courthouse Office Building
5 Court Street, Suite 205
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 337-1745

CLINTON COUNTY
District Attorney
Clinton County
County Government Center
137 Margaret Street, Suite 201
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 565-4770

COLUMBIA COUNTY
District Attorney
Columbia County
Courthouse Annex
Hudson, NY 12534
(518) 828-3414

CORTLAND COUNTY
District Attorney
Cortland County Courthouse
46 Greenbush Street, Room 101
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 753-5008

DELAWARE COUNTY
District Attorney
Delaware County
1 Courthouse Square, Suite 5
Delhi, NY 13753
(607) 746-3557

DUTCHESS COUNTY
District Attorney
Dutchess County Courthouse
236 Main Street
Poughkeepsie, NY 12601
(845) 486-2300

ERIE COUNTY
District Attorney
Erie County
25 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 858-2467

ESSEX COUNTY
District Attorney
Essex County
P.O. Box 217
Elizabethtown, NY 12932
(518) 873-3335

FRANKLIN COUNTY
District Attorney
Franklin County Courthouse
355 West Main Street, Suite 466
Malone, NY 12953
(518) 481-1544

FULTON COUNTY
District Attorney
Fulton County Office Building
Johnstown, NY 12095
(518) 736-5511

GENESEE COUNTY
District Attorney
Genesee County Courts Facility
1 West Main Street
Batavia, NY 14020
(558) 344-2550, ext. 2250

GREENE COUNTY
District Attorney
Greene County Courthouse
411 Main Street
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 719-3590

HAMILTON COUNTY
District Attorney
Hamilton County
277 White Birch Lane
P.O. Box 277
Indian Lake, NY 12842
(518) 648-5113

HERKIMER COUNTY
District Attorney
Herkimer County Courthouse
301 N. Washington Street, Suite 2401
Herkimer, NY 13350
(315) 867-1155

JEFFERSON COUNTY
District Attorney
Jefferson County
175 Arsenal Street
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 785-3053

KINGS COUNTY
District Attorney
Kings County
350 Jay Street, 19th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 250-2202

LEWIS COUNTY
District Attorney
Lewis County
7659 South State Street
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-5390

LIVINGSTON COUNTY
District Attorney
Livingston County Courthouse
2 Court Street
Geneseo, NY 14454
(716) 243-7020

MADISON COUNTY
District Attorney
Veterans Memorial Building
North Court Street
P.O. Box 578
Wampsville, NY 13163
(315) 366-2236

MONROE COUNTY
District Attorney
Monroe County
832 Watts Building
47 South Fitzhugh Street
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 753-4334

MONTGOMERY COUNTY
District Attorney
58 Broadway Court Street
P.O. Box 1500
Fonda, NY 12068
(518) 853-8250

NASSAU COUNTY
District Attorney
Nassau County Courthouse
262 Old Country Road
Mineola, NY 11501
(516) 571-3800

NEW YORK COUNTY
District Attorney
New York County
1 Hogan Place, Room 854
New York, NY 10013
(212) 335-9000

NIAGARA COUNTY
District Attorney
Niagara County Courthouse
175 Hawley Street
Lockport, NY 14094
(716) 439-7085

ONEIDA COUNTY
District Attorney
Oneida County Courthouse
800 Park Avenue
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 798-5766

ONONDAGA COUNTY
District Attorney
Onondaga County
505 South State Street, 4th Floor
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 435-2470

ONTARIO COUNTY
District Attorney
Ontario County Courthouse
27 North Main Street
Canandaigua, NY 14424
(716) 396-4010

ORANGE COUNTY
District Attorney
Orange County Government Center
255-275 Main Street
Goshen, NY 10924
(845) 291-2050

ORLEANS COUNTY
District Attorney
13925 State Route 31, Suite 300
Albion, NY 14411
(585) 590-4130

OSWEGO COUNTY
District Attorney
Oswego County
Courthouse
39 Churchhill Road
Oswego, NY 13326
(315) 349-3200

OTSEGO COUNTY
District Attorney
Otsego County
197 Main Street
Cooperstown, NY 13326
(607) 547-4249

PUTNAM COUNTY
District Attorney
Putnam County Office Building
40 Gleneida Avenue
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 225-3641, ext. 277

QUEENS COUNTY
District Attorney
Queens County
125-01 Queens Boulevard
Kew Gardens, NY 11415
(718) 286-6000

RENSSELAER COUNTY
District Attorney
Rensselaer County Courthouse
Congress and 2nd Streets
Troy, NY 12180
(518) 270-4040

RICHMOND COUNTY
District Attorney
Richmond County
130 Stuyvesant Place, 7th Floor
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 876-6300

ROCKLAND COUNTY
District Attorney
Rockland County
County Office Building
1 South Maine Street, 5th Floor
New City, NY 10956
(845) 638-5001

SARATOGA COUNTY
District Attorney
Saratoga County Municipal Center
25 West High Street
Ballston Spa, NY 12020
(518) 885-2263

SCHENECTADY COUNTY
District Attorney
Schenectady County Courthouse
612 State Street
Schenectady, NY 12305
(518) 388-4364

SCHOHARIE COUNTY
District Attorney
Schoharie County
Public Safety Building
P.O. Box 888
Schoharie, NY 12157
(518) 295-2272

SCHUYLER COUNTY
District Attorney
Schuyler County
105 9th Street, Unit 26
Watkins Glen, NY 14891
(607) 535-8383

SENECA COUNTY
District Attorney
Seneca County
48 West Williams Street
Waterloo, NY 13165
(315) 539-1300

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY
District Attorney
St. Lawrence County
48 Court Street
Canton, NY 13617
(315) 379-2225

STATEN ISLAND
See RICHMOND COUNTY

STEUBEN COUNTY
District Attorney
Steuben County Office Building
3 East Pulteney Square
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-2270

SUFFOLK COUNTY
District Attorney
Suffolk County
North County Complex, Building 77
Veterans Memorial Highway
Hauppauge, NY 11788
(631) 853-4169

SULLIVAN COUNTY
District Attorney
Sullivan County Courthouse
414 Broadway
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 794-3344

TIOGA COUNTY
District Attorney
Tioga County
20 Court Street
P.O Box 300
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-8650

TOMPKINS COUNTY
District Attorney
Tompkins County Courthouse
320 North Tioga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 274-5461

ULSTER COUNTY
District Attorney
Ulster County Courthouse
275 Wall Street
Kingston, NY 12401
(845) 340-3280

WARREN COUNTY
District Attorney
Warren County
1340 State Route 9
Lake George, NY 12845
(518) 761-6405

WASHINGTON COUNTY
District Attorney
Washington County Courthouse
383 Upper Broadway
Ft. Edward, NY 12828
(518) 746-2525

WAYNE COUNTY
District Attorney
Wayne County Courthouse
Hall of Justice
54 Broad Street, Suite 202
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 946-5905

WESTCHESTER COUNTY
District Attorney
Westchester County
Richard J. Daronco Courthouse
111 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Blvd.
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 995-3414

WYOMING COUNTY
District Attorney
Wyoming County
147 North Main Street
Warsaw, NY 14569
(716) 786-8822

YATES COUNTY
District Attorney
Yates County
415 Liberty Street
Penn Yan, NY 14527
(315) 536-5550

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Appendix IV: Directory of Legal and Social Services for Prisoners

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

APPENDIX IV

DIRECTORY OF LEGAL AND SOCIAL SERVICES FOR PRISONERS

This Appendix contains a directory of legal and social services that will be useful for prisoners, those leaving prison, and their families. Please be aware that this type of information changes rapidly.

A. Legal Services

(1) Organizations that Specifically Serve Prisoners
(2) Organizations that Serve Specific Regional and Cultural Interest Groups
(3) Organizations that Do Not Specifically Serve Prisoners
(4) Other Legal Services Organizations
    a. New York City
    b. Other Counties
(5) Organizations that Specialize in Death Penalty Cases

B. Social Services

(1) New York City
(2) Other Counties

C. Official Corrections Agencies

(1) Watchdog Agencies
(2) Administrative Agencies

A. Legal Services

1. Organizations That Specifically Serve Prisoners

(a) Prisoners' Legal Services of New York ("PLS")

If you are a prisoner at a New York State correctional facility in need of legal assistance, you should first contact PLS. PLS provides legal services, free of charge, to prisoners of New York State prisons who cannot afford legal representation. PLS will only handle cases that other attorneys and legal services are unlikely to handle. For example, PLS does not handle criminal trials or direct criminal appeals because these are normally handled by private attorneys or legal service organizations. However, PLS will provide assistance to prisoners for other matters.

If you qualify for PLS legal assistance, you should contact the PLS office serving your institution (see below). Because of budget cuts, PLS has in the past been forced to stop services temporarily. Check with the PLS serving your institution for more information. Application forms for PLS assistance should be available in the prison law library. The offices are listed below:

301 South Allen Street
Albany, NY 12208
(518) 438-8046

Prisons served: Arthur Kill, Bayview, Bedford Hills, Camp Beacon, Central New York Psychiatric Center, Coxsackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecomb, Fishkill, Fulton, Great Meadow, Green Haven, Greene, Hail Creek ASATC, Hudson, Lincoln, Lincoln Annex, Marcy, Mid-Orange, Mohawk, Mount McGregor, Oneida, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Summit Shock, Taconic, Ulster, Walkill, Walsh Medical Center, Washington, and Woodbourne.

121 Bridge Street
Suite 202
Plattsburgh, NY 12901
(518) 561-3088
FAX: (518) 561-3262

Prisons served: Adirondack, Altona, Barehill, Camp Gabriels, Chateaugay, Clinton, Franklin, Gouverneur, Lyon Mountain, Moriah Shock, Ogdensberg, Riverview, and Upstate.

Statler Towers
Suite 1360
107 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 854-1007

Prisons served: Attica, Albion, Buffalo, Collins, Groveland, Camp Groveland, Lakeview, Lakeview ASATCA, Livingston, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, and Wyoming.

102 Prospect Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-2283

Prisons served: Auburn, Butler, Camp Georgetown, Camp Pharsalia, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Monteray Shock, Southport, Camp Pharsalia, Watertown, and Willard.

(b) Other Organizations Serving Prisoners in New York

Prisoners' Rights Project
The Legal Aid Society
Criminal Appeals Bureau
199 Water Street, 6th Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3530
http://www.legal-aid.org/en/ineedhelp/civilproblem/prisonersrightsproject.aspx

This organization specializes in cases involving jail and confinement conditions. It represents New York City residents incarcerated in city jails or New York State prisons. It handles only those cases that might expand prisoners' rights or improve prison conditions for large numbers of prisoners; thus, it rarely accepts cases involving only individual prisoners.

Parole Revocation Unit
The Legal Aid Society
Criminal Defense Division
111 Livingston Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(212) 577-3500

This organization represents prisoners who either violate or are accused of violating parole. It represents only New York City residents in city jails or New York State prisons.

National Lawyers Guild, Buffalo Chapter
Prison Task Force
John Lord O'Brian Hall
State University of New York Law School
Buffalo, NY 14260
E-mail: buffaloptf@yahoo.com

The Prison Task Force goes to prisons to provide eight-week courses for prisoners in legal research and writing.

American Civil Liberties Union
National Prison Project
915 15th Street NW, 7th Floor
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 393-4930
www.aclu.org/prison

The National Prison Project is the only organization to litigate on behalf of prisoners at a national level. Since its founding in 1972, the National Prison Project has worked in more than twenty-five states to improve conditions of confinement.

2. Organizations That Serve Specific Regional and Cultural Interest Groups

These groups are in no way affiliated with consulates and receive no rights or privileges under the Vienna Convention. They also tend not to represent individual criminal defendants. They may be interested in your case if you have a claim that you are being discriminated against because of your ethnic or cultural background. In addition, most of these organizations will probably provide you with a referral.

If you are experiencing difficulties of a religious nature (for example, if you cannot find a clergyperson of your faith or are not being allowed to practice your religion), you should also consult the resources listed in Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison."

AFRICAN
African Services Committee, Inc.
429 West 127th Street
New York, NY 10016
(212) 222-3882
African Services Committee, Inc. provides social services and conducts outreach programs for immigrants from Africa, the Caribbean, and the Middle East, without regard to ethnicity. They also provide referrals.

NAACP National Headquarters
4805 Mt. Hope Drive
Baltimore, MD 21215
(877) 622-2798
The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People ("NAACP") helps all minority people in the United States. It can only take a few legal cases every year, but it may be able to provide referrals. It also has a wide variety of non-legal programs.

ARAB

American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee
1732 Wisconsin Avenue NW
Washington, D.C. 20007
(202) 244-2990
E-mail: legal@adc.org
www.adc.org
The American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee is a national grassroots non-profit civil rights organization that defends the civil rights of Arab-Americans.

ASIAN

Asian-American Legal Defense and Education Fund
99 Hudson Street, 12th Floor
New York, NY 10013
(212) 966-5932
www.aaldef.org
Asian-American Legal Defense and Education Fund may be particularly interested in your case if it involves police brutality. They do not represent criminal defendants; instead, they usually conduct large-scale impact litigation (lawsuits that are designed to get a result for a broad class of people) on civil issues, much like the American Civil Liberties Union.

Asian Counseling & Referral Service
3639 Martin Luther King Jr. Way South
Seattle, WA 98144
(206) 695-7600
www.acrs.org
Asian Counseling and Referral Service is a community-based, multi-cultural, multilingual, private nonprofit organization that provides and advocates for social services to empower Asian and Pacific Islanders.

Asian Law Caucus, Inc.
55 Columbus Avenue
San Francisco, CA 94111
(415) 896-1701
www.asianlawcaucus.org
Asian Law Caucus, Inc. serves the needs of predominantly monolingual, low-income Asian Pacific Americans living in the San Francisco Bay Area. It provides legal services and educational programs, in English and seven Asian languages, in the areas of civil rights, housing, employment, immigration, and the rights of the elderly.

Organization of Chinese Americans (OCA)
1322 18th Street NW
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 223-5500
www.ocanational.org
OCA is a civil rights organization that lobbies on behalf of Chinese-Americans and other Asian-Americans.

World Relief
316 Maynard Avenue South #103
Seattle, WA 98104
(206) 587-0234
World Relief is a Christian organization that provides free legal representation for refugees and assists with employment and citizenship.

CARIBBEAN

Caribbean Bar Association
200 South Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 2680
Miami, FL 33131
(305) 548-3800
www.caribbeanbar.org
The Caribbean Bar Association ("CBA") is a voluntary bar organization that has over 150 attorneys from the Caribbean-American community in Florida. CBA attorneys work in the public and private sector and practice in several areas of the law, including criminal and commercial litigation.

National Association of Jamaican and Supportive Organizations ("NAJASO")
4440 Hill Avenue
Bronx, NY 10466
718-994-5496
http://www.najaso.org/
E-mail: president@najaso.org
NAJASO addresses general problems affecting Caribbean communities in the United States. See also AFRICAN.

HMONG

Hmong National Development, Inc. ("HND")
1628 Sixteenth St. N.W., Suite 203
Washington, DC 20009
(202) 797-9105
http://www.hndinc.org/
E-mail: info@hndinc.org
HND advocates on behalf of Hmong-American communities through legal advocacy, civic engagement, and policy advocacy.

JEWISH (ALL NATIONALITIES)

Jewish Family and Children's Services
2150 Post Street
San Francisco, CA 94115
(415) 449-1200
www.jfcs.org
Jewish Family and Children's Services helps refugees, immigrants, and other newcomers to the San Francisco Bay area and provides services in Russian.

Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia
2100 Arch Street
Philadelphia, PA 19103
(215) 832-0500
http://www.jewishphilly.org/index.html
Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia tends to assist Israeli and Ethiopian Jews who have recently immigrated to the United States.

Jewish Prisoner Services International
P.O. Box 85840
Seattle, WA 98145
(206) 985-0577 (206) 528-0363
E-mail: jewishprisonerservices@msn.com
http://www.jewishprisonerservices.org/
Provides pen pals, advocacy, and outreach programs for Jewish offenders. See also the Appendix to JLM Chapter 27, "Religious Freedom in Prison" for religious outreach programs.

KURDISH

American Kurdish Information Network ("AKIN")
2722 Connecticut Avenue NW, #42
Washington, D.C. 20008
(202) 483-6444
E-mail: akin@kurdish.org

LATIN AMERICAN

Alianza Dominicana
2410 Amsterdam Ave., 4th Floor
New York, NY 10033
212-740-1960
Alianza Dominicana maintains several offices in northern Manhattan in New York City. They do not provide legal assistance but can help you with a wide variety of related matters, including drug addiction, health problems, and gay and lesbian concerns.

Hispanic National Bar Association
Benjamin Franklin Station
P.O. Box 14347
Washington, D.C. 20044
(202) 223-4777
Hispanic National Bar Association maintains a directory of over 4,000 Hispanic attorneys nationwide and may be able to assist consulates.

Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund ("MALDEF")
634 South Spring Street
Los Angeles, CA 90014
(213) 629-2512
Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund promotes equality and protects the civil rights of Hispanics nationwide through litigation, leadership training, and law school scholarships.

National Association of Cuban-American Women
308 38th Street
Union City, NJ 07087
Attn: Ms. Siomara Sanchez
National Association of Cuban-American Women will normally try to help anyone from a Latin American country, especially with their immigration paperwork. They do not represent criminal defendants but may be able to provide referrals.

LatinoJustice PRLDEF (Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Fund)
99 Hudson Street, 14th Floor
New York, NY 10013-2815
(212) 219-3360; Toll Free: (800) 328-2322
www.prldef.org
LatinoJustice PRLDEF conducts primarily large-scale, civil impact litigation. They do not represent criminal defendants, but you can contact them if your rights are being violated, and they will at least provide you with a referral. They help all Hispanic people, not just Puerto Ricans.

NATIVE AMERICAN

International Indian Treaty Council ("IITC")
2390 Mission Street
Suite 301
San Francisco, CA 94110
(415) 641-4482
www.treatycouncil.org
International Indian Treaty Council is an organization of indigenous peoples from North, Central, and South America, the Caribbean and the Pacific, which seeks to protect indigenous human rights, culture, and sacred lands. Services are also available in Spanish.

Native American Rights Fund ("NARF")
1506 Broadway
Boulder, CO 80302
(303) 447-8760
www.narf.org
NARF provides legal representation and assistance to Indian tribes. They probably will not take your case if it will affect only you as an individual, but they can provide referrals.

United American Indians of New Engand
284 Amory Street
Jamaica Plain, MA 02130
(617) 522-6626
www.uaine.org

3. Organizations That Do Not Specifically Serve Prisoners

The following is a list of legal organizations that have previously represented prisoners or groups of prisoners in cases involving prison conditions, parole, sentencing, etc. Note that the primary function of these organizations is not to provide legal services to prisoners.

American Civil Liberties Union ("ACLU")
125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004
(212) 549-2500
www.aclu.org
The ACLU's mission is to preserve all of the protections and guarantees of the United States Constitution.

Center for Constitutional Rights ("CCR")
666 Broadway, 7th Floor
New York, NY 10012
(212) 614-6464
www.ccrjustice.org
CCR is a non-profit legal and educational organization committed to the creative use of law as a positive force for social change.

Children's Defense Fund
Juvenile Justice Division
25 East Street NW
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 628-8787
www.childrensdefense.org
The Children's Defense Fund provides assistance to women prisoners with legal problems involving custody of their children.

Community Law Offices ("CLO") of
The Legal Aid Society
Volunteer Division
230 E. 106th Street
New York, NY 10029
(212) 426-3000
www.legal-aid.org
Provides free legal services to residents of Central and East Harlem who meet its low income requirements. CLO handles civil matters; however, it has not had extensive dealings with the Parole Board, Corrections Department, disciplinary hearings, or prisoners' rights litigation.

Jewish Board of Family and Children's Services ("JBFCS")
120 W. 57th Street
New York, NY 10019
(212) 582-9100; Toll Free: (888) 523-2769
E-mail: admin@jbfcs.org
www.jbfcs.org
This organization is a nonprofit mental health and social services agency providing a range of community-based programs, residential facilities, and day-treatment centers. JBFCS makes referrals to legal services through its family violence prevention program, and provides therapy to adolescents who have been involved with the criminal justice system through its juvenile justice program.

Legal Action Center ("LAC")
225 Varick Street
New York, NY 10014
(212) 243-1313; Toll Free: (800) 223-4044
www.lac.org
The Legal Action Center is a public interest law firm that generally handles law reform litigation. LAC has a program that focuses on challenging discrimination against ex-offenders, especially in employment. It has also handled challenged guard brutality at a New York City correctional institution.

National Employment Law Project
75 Maiden Lane, Suite 601
New York, NY 10038
(212) 285-3025
www.nelp.org
Handles employment discrimination cases. Ex-offenders with employment-related problems and prisoners with work-related problems should contact this organization.

National Lawyers Guild ("NLG") National Office
132 Nassau Street, Suite 922
New York, NY 10038
(212) 679-5100
www.nlg.org
The NLG seeks to unite the lawyers, law students, legal workers and jailhouse lawyers of America in an organization that acts as an effective political and social force in the service of the people to promote human rights.

4. Other Legal Services Organizations

Below is a list of free legal service organizations in New York City and State. These groups do not necessarily provide legal services to prisoners. But, if you are a prisoner at a city or county jail in either New York City or New York State, and you do not have access to any of the organizations listed above, you should contact a general legal service organization in the city or county where you are incarcerated. However, be aware that law or the people funding them might prevent them from helping prisoners.

If you are a prisoner at a state institution and seek legal assistance in a criminal trial or direct criminal appeal, you should contact a legal service organization in the city or county where you are incarcerated. Many counties in New York State have a public defender's office and a county bar association program designed to assist you by providing free legal counsel. These organizations are not listed below. To find the address for your county's public defender's office and bar association program, ask your librarian or consult a telephone book for your county.

(a) Legal Services Organizations in New York City

(i) The Legal Aid Society (Civil and Criminal Divisions)

MANHATTAN
Civil Practice
199 Water Street, 3rd Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3300; Toll Free: (888) 218-6974

Criminal Defense Office
49 Thomas Street
New York, NY 10013
(212) 732-5000

Juvenile Rights Office
New York County Family Court Building
60 Lafayette Street, Room 9A
New York, NY 10013
(212) 312-2260

Harlem Community Law Office (Civil)
230 E. 106th Street
New York, NY 10029
(212) 426-3000

BRONX
Civil Practice
953 Southern Boulevard, 4th Floor
Bronx, NY 10459
(718) 991-4600

Criminal Defense Office
1020 Grand Concourse
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 579-3000

Juvenile Rights Office
Bronx County Family Court Building
900 Sheridan Avenue, Room 6-C12
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 579-7900

BROOKLYN
Civil and Criminal Practices
111 Livingston Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 722-3100 (Civil Practice)
(718) 237-2000 (Criminal Defense Office)

Juvenile Rights Office
111 Livingston Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 237-3100

QUEENS
Civil and Criminal Division
120-46 Queens Boulevard
Kew Gardens, NY 11415
(718) 286-2450 (Civil Division)
(718) 286-2000 (Criminal Division)

STATEN ISLAND
Civil Division
60 Bay Street
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 273-6677

Juvenile Rights Division
60 Bay Street
Staten Island, NY 10301
(718) 981-0219

(ii) Community Action for Legal Services (civil cases only)

MANHATTAN
Legal Services for New York - Manhattan
90 John Street, Suite 301
New York, NY 10038
(646) 442-3100

Harlem Legal Services, Inc.
55 West 125th Street, 10th Floor
New York, NY 10027
(212) 348-7449

BROOKLYN
South Brooklyn Legal Services
105 Court Street, 3rd Floor
Brooklyn, New York, NY 11201
(718) 237-5500

Legal Services of Brooklyn
3049 Brighton Sixth Street
Brooklyn, NY 11235
(718) 852-8888

Bedford-Stuyvesant Community Legal Services
1360 Fulton Street, 3rd Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11216
(718) 636-1155

Brooklyn Legal Services Corp. A
80 Jamaica Avenue
Brooklyn, NY 11207
(718) 487-1300

BRONX
Bronx Legal Services Corporation
579 Courtlandt Ave.
Bronx, NY 10451
(718) 928-3700

QUEENS
Queens Legal Services Corporation
89-00 Sutphin Boulevard
Jamaica, NY 11435
(718) 657-8611

Queens Legal Services Corporation
42-15 Crescent Street
Long Island City, NY 11101
(718) 392-5646

(b) Legal Services Organizations in Other Counties (Legal Aid & CALS)

ALBANY COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
55 Colvin Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
(518) 462-6765; Toll Free: (800) 462-2922
www.lasnny.org

ALLEGANY COUNTY
Southern Tier Legal Services
104 East Steuben Street
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-4126; Toll Free: (877) 776-4126

AUBURN COUNTY
Legal Services of Mid-New York
472 South Salina Street, Suite 300B
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 475-3127
www.lasmny.org

BROOME COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
30 Fayette Street
Binghamton, NY 13901
(607) 723-7966
www.lasmny.org

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY
Southern Tier Legal Services
103 South Barry Street
Olean, NY 14760
(716) 373-4701; Toll Free: (888) 767-1950

CAYUGA COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York, Inc.
472 South Salina Street, Suite 300
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 703-6600
www.lasmny.org

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY
Legal Aid of Chautauqua Region, Inc. (LACR)
111 West 2nd Street, Suite 250
Jamestown, NY 14701
(716) 483-2116
(716) 664-9590 (fax)

Southern Tier Legal Services
Hotel Jamestown Building
110 West Third Street, Suite 507
Jamestown, NY 14701
(716) 664-4535; Toll Free: (866) 664-4567

CHEMUNG COUNTY
Chemung County Neighborhood Legal Services
215 East Church Street, Suite 301
Elmira, NY 14901
(607) 734-1647
www.wnylc.net

COLUMBIA COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
55 Colvin Avenue
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 462-6765
www.lasnny.org

CORTLAND COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
111 Port Watson Street
Cortland, NY 13045
(607) 428-8400
www.lasmny.org

ERIE COUNTY
New York Civil Liberties Union,
Western Region
712 Main St # B2
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 852-4033
www.nyclu.org

Legal Aid Bureau of Buffalo, Inc.
Civil, Public Defender, and Appellate Divisions
237 Main Street, Suite 1602
Buffalo, NY 14203
(716) 853-9555
www.legalaidbuffalo.org

GENESEE COUNTY
Oak Orchard Legal Services
5073 Clinton Street Road
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 343-5450

GREENE COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York, Inc.
55 Colvin Avenue
Albany, NY 12207
(518) 462-6765; Toll Free: (800) 462-2922
www.lasnny.org

JEFFERSON COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York, Inc.
44 Public Square
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 955-6700
www.lasmny.org

Legal Aid Society of Nassau County
Criminal Bureau
1 Helen Keller Way, 3rd Floor
Hempstead, NY 11550
(516) 560-6400

Legal Aid Society of Rochester
1 West Main Street, Suite 800
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 232-4090
www.lasroc.org

Legal Services of the Hudson Valley
90 Maple Avenue
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 949-1305
www.lshv.org

LEWIS COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
44 Public Square
Watertown, NY 13601
(315) 788-2072 (General Office)
(315) 955-6700 (Lewis County Office)
www.lasmny.org

LIVINGSTON COUNTY
Legal Assistance of the Finger Lakes
P.O. Box 487
1 Franklin Square
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465
www.lawny.org

MONROE COUNTY
Monroe County Legal Assistance Center
1 West Main Street, 4th Floor
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 325-2520
www.mclac.org

Monroe County Legal Assistance Center
80 St. Paul Street, Suite 700
Rochester, NY 14604
(585) 325-2520
www.mclac.org

Empire Justice Center
1 West Main Street
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 454-4060
www.empirejustice.org

NASSAU COUNTY
Nassau/Suffolk Law Services
1 Helen Keller Way, 5th Floor
Hempstead, NY 11550
(516) 292-8100
www.nslawservices.org

NIAGARA COUNTY
Niagara County Legal Aid Society
775 Third Street, P.O. Box 844
Niagara Falls, NY 14302
(716) 284-8831

ONEIDA COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York, Inc.
255 Genesee Street, 2nd Floor
Utica, NY 13501
(315) 793-7000
www.lasmny.org

ONONDOGA COUNTY
Frank H. Hiscock Legal Aid Society
351 South Warren Street #2515
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 422-8191
www.hiscocklegalaid.org

Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York, Inc.
472 South Salina Street, Suite 300
Syracuse, NY 13202
(315) 703-6600
www.lasmny.org

ONTARIO COUNTY
Legal Assistance of the Finger Lakes
P.O. Box 487
1 Franklin Square
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465
www.lawny.org

ORANGE COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Orange County
P.O. Box 328
2 Court Lane
Goshen, NY 1092
(845) 562-1333

ORLEANS COUNTY
Oak Orchard Legal Services
5073 Clinton Street Road
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 343-5450

OSWEGO COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
108 West Bridge Street
Oswego, NY 13126
(315) 342-2191

OTSEGO COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Mid-New York
P.O. Box 805
387 Chestnut Street
Oneonta, NY 13820
(607) 433-2600

PUTNAM COUNTY
Putnam County Legal Aid Society
19 Fair Street
Carmel, NY 10512
(845) 225-8466

RENSSELAER COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
55 Colvin Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
(518) 462-6765
www.lasnny.org

ROCKLAND COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Rockland County
2 Congers Road
New City, NY 10956
(845) 634-3627

SARATOGA COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
10 Lake Avenue
Saratoga Springs, NY 12866
(518) 587-5188
www.lasnny.org

SCHENECTADY COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York
55 Colvin Avenue
Albany, NY 12206
(518) 462-6765
www.lasnny.org

SENECA COUNTY
Legal Assistance of the Finger Lakes
P.O. Box 487
1 Franklin Square
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; Toll Free: (866) 781-5235
www.lawny.org

STEUBEN COUNTY
Southern Tier Legal Services
104 East Stueben Street
Bath, NY 14810
(607) 776-4126

SUFFOLK COUNTY
Legal Aid Society of Suffolk County
Juvenile Rights Law Guardian Office
Cohalan Court Complex
P.O. Box 9082
400 Carleton Avenue
Central Islip, NY 11722
(631) 853-4336

Criminal Division Offices
Cromarty Courts Building
300 Center Drive
Riverhead, NY 11901
(631) 852-1650

SULLIVAN COUNTY
Sullivan County Legal Aid Panel Inc.
11 Bank Street
Monticello, NY 12701
(845) 794-4094

TIOGA COUNTY
Tompkins/Tioga Neighborhood Legal Services
215 N. Cayuga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-3667; Toll Free: (800) 724-4176
www.mclac.org

TOMPKINS COUNTY
Cornell Legal Aid Clinic
Cornell Law School
Myron Taylor Hall
Ithaca, NY 14853
(607) 255-4196

Tompkins/Tioga Neighborhood Legal Services
215 N. Cayuga Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 273-3667 or Toll Free: (800) 724-4176
www.mclac.org

WAYNE COUNTY
Legal Assistance of the Finger Lakes
1 Franklin Square, P.O. Box 487
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; Toll Free: (866) 781-5235
www.mclac.org

WESTCHESTER COUNTY
Legal Aid Society
1 North Broadway, Suite 910
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 286-3400

WYOMING COUNTY
Oak Orchard Legal Services
5073 Clinton Street Road
Batavia, NY 14020
(585) 343-5450

YATES COUNTY
Legal Assistance of the Finger Lakes
1 Franklin Square, P.O. Box 487
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 781-1465; Toll Free: (866) 781-5235
www.mclac.org

5. Organizations that Specialize in Death Penalty Cases

NATIONAL
American Bar Association
Death Penalty Representation Project
740 15th Street NW, 9th Floor
Washington D.C., 20005-1009
(202) 662-1738
FAX: (202) 662-8649
www.abanet.org/deathpenalty/

ALABAMA
Equal Justice Initiative
Bryan Stevenson, Executive Director
122 Commerce Street
Montgomery, AL 36104
(334) 269-1803
FAX: (334) 269-1806
www.eji.org

ARIZONA
Arizona Justice Project, azjusticeproject.org, 480-727-0009, Arizona Justice Project c/o Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law, P. O. Box 877906, Tempe, AZ 85287-7906

CALIFORNIA
California Appellate Project
Michael G. Millman, Esq.
101 2nd Street, Suite 600
San Francisco, CA 94105
(415) 495-0500
FAX: (415) 495-5616
http://www.capsf.org

Habeas Corpus Resource Center
Michael Laurence, Esq.
50 Fremont St., Suite 1800
San Francisco, CA 94105
(415) 348-3800
www.hcrc.ca.gov

COLORADO
Federal Public Defender
633 12th Street, Suite 1000
Denver, CO 80202
(303) 294-7002
FAX: (303) 294-1192

CONNECTICUT
Jerome N. Frank Legal Services Organization
Yale Law School
P.O. Box 209090
New Haven, CT 06520-9090
(203) 432-4800
FAX: (203) 432-1426

FLORIDA
Commission on Capital Cases
402 S. Monroe Street
Tallahassee, FL 32399-1300
(850) 921-4704
FAX: (850) 921-4737

GEORGIA
Southern Center for Human Rights
Lisa Kung, Director
83 Poplar Street, NW
Atlanta, GA 30303
(404) 688-1202
FAX: (404) 688-9440
www.schr.org

Georgia Appellate Practice and Educational Resource Center
Tom Dunn, Director
303 Elizabeth Street, NE
Atlanta, GA 30307
(404) 222-9202
FAX: (404) 222-9212

IDAHO
Capital Habeas Unit
317 W. 6th Street, Suite 204
Moscow, ID 83843
(208) 883-0180
FAX: (208) 883-1472
http://www.fdewi.org/

ILLINOIS
Office of the State Appellate Defender
Post-Conviction Unit
20 North Clark Street, 28th Floor
Chicago, IL 60602
(312) 814-5100
FAX: (312) 814-5951

INDIANA
Public Defender of Indiana
Susan Carpenter
1 North Capitol, Suite 800
Indianapolis, IN 46204
(317) 232-2475
(Only state court post-conviction relief)

KANSAS
Paul E. Wilson Kansas Defender Project
University of Kansas School of Law
1535 W 15th Street
Green Hall #409
Lawrence, KS 66045
(785) 864-5571

Death Penalty Defense Unit
112 West Sixth, Suite 300
Topeka, KS 66603
(785) 296-6555

KENTUCKY
Department of Public Advocacy
Capital Post-Conviction Branch
100 Fair Oaks Lane, Suite 301
Frankfort, KY 40601
(502) 564-3948
FAX: (502) 564-3949

LOUISIANA
Center for Equal Justice
7100 St. Charles Avenue
New Orleans, LA 70118
(504) 864-0700
FAX: (504) 864-0780

Louisiana Capital Assistance Center
636 Baronne Street
New Orleans, LA 70113
(504) 558-9867
FAX: (504) 558-0378

MARYLAND
Federal Public Defender
Northern Division
Tower II, Suite 1100
100 South Charles Street
Baltimore, MD 21201-2705
(410) 962-3962
FAX: (410) 962-0872

Federal Public Defender
Southern Division
6411 Ivy Lane, Suite 710
Greenbelt, MD 20770-4510
(301) 344-0600
FAX: (301) 344-0019

MISSOURI
Public Interest Litigation Clinic
305 East 63rd Street
Kansas City, MO 64113
(816) 363-2795
FAX: (816) 363-2799

Eastern Federal Public Defender
1010 Market Street, Suite 200
St. Louis, MO 63101
(314) 241-1255
FAX: (314) 421-3177

NEVADA
Nevada Federal Public Defender
330 South 3rd St., Suite 700
Las Vegas, NV 89101
(702) 388-6577 ext. 279

NEW JERSEY
Office of the Public Defender – Capital Litigation
Huges Justice Complex
1st Floor, N-Wing
25 Market Street
P.O. Box 850
Trenton, NJ 08625
(609) 292-7087

NEW YORK
Capital Defender Office c/o Arnold & Porter
399 Park Avenue, 34th Floor
New York, NY 10022
(917) 301-6761

NORTH CAROLINA
Center for Death Penalty Litigation
201 West Main St., Suite 301
Durham, North Carolina 27701
(919) 956-9545
FAX: (919) 956-9547

OHIO
Ohio Public Defender
Death Penalty Division
8 East Long Street, Suite 1100
Columbus, Ohio 43215-2998
(614) 466-5394; Toll Free: (800) 686-1573
FAX: (614) 728-3670
www.opd.ohio.gov

OKLAHOMA
Oklahoma Indigent
Defense System
P.O. Box 926
Norman, OK 73070
(405) 801-2700 (Capital Trials)
(405) 801-2665 (Capital Direct Appeals)
(405) 801-2770 (Capital Post-Conviction) www.state.ok.us/~oids/divisions.htm

OREGON
Office of Public Defense Services
1320 Capitol Street NE, Suite 200
Salem, OR 97303-6469
(503) 378-3349
FAX: (503) 375-9701
www.opd.state.or.us

PENNSYLVANIA
Defender Association of Philadelphia
1441 Sansom St
Philadelphia, PA 19102
(215) 568-3190

Capital Habeas Unit
Federal Community Defender Office
The Curtis Center
Independence Square West
Suite 545 West
Philadelphia, PA 19106

SOUTH CAROLINA
Center for Capital Litigation
P.O. Box 11311
Columbia, SC 29211
(803) 765-0650
FAX: (803) 765-0705

TENNESSEE
Tennessee Federal Public Defender
810 Broadway, Suite 200
Nashville, TN 37203
(615) 736-5047
FAX: (615) 736-5265

TEXAS
Texas Defender Service
412 Main Street, Suite 1150
Houston, TX 77002
(713) 222-7788
FAX: (713) 222-0260

Texas Defender Service – Austin Office
510 South Congress, Suite 304
Austin, Texas 78704
(512) 320-8300
FAX: (512) 477-2153
www.texasdefender.org

Texas Defender Service – Houston Office
Texas Defender Service
412 Main Street, # 1150
Houston, Texas 77002
(713) 222-7788
FAX: (713) 222-0260
www.texasdefender.org

VIRGINIA
Virginia Capital Representation Resource Center
2421 Ivy Road, Suite 301
Charlottesville, VA 22903
Toll Free: (800) 697-6841

WYOMING
Legal Services for Southeast Wyoming
1620 Central Avenue, Suite 200
Cheyenne, Wyoming 82001-4575
(307) 634-1566

B. Social Services

The following is a list of social service agencies and prisoners' rights projects in New York City and New York State. Most do not provide legal services, although many refer clients to legal services. Some of these organizations provide counseling, referral, and support services specifically for prisoners and ex-offenders. Others provide services to members of the general public. Offenders and ex-offenders should contact any of the listed agencies with their problems.

A short description of the services provided follows most addresses. In some of the counties in New York State, no agencies are listed. This does not necessarily mean that no social service agencies exist in these counties. If there are no agencies listed for your county, you should consult your telephone book for a Department of Social Services office under either the name of the county or New York State; you should also consult the listings for neighboring counties.

1. Social Services in New York City

In the New York City listings, the code following each address describes the services provided by the particular agency.

C = Counseling
R = Referral
JD = Job Development
EV = Educational and Vocational Training
FA = Financial Assistance
SS = Support Services
P = Directed Especially Towards Prisoners and Ex-Offenders
H = Housing

Argus Community, Inc.
760 East 160th Street
Bronx, NY 10456
(718) 401-5700
www.arguscommunity.org
EV, JD

GED Plus
198 Forsyth Street
New York, NY 10002
(212) 673-8254
EV, R
Provides GED preparation, direct-to-employment, and vocational opportunities for parolees and ex-offenders under 21 years of age.

Center for Alternative Sentencing and Employment Services, Inc. (CASES, Inc.)
346 Broadway, 3rd Floor
New York, NY 10013
(212) 732-0076
www.cases.org
C, EV, SS, P, R, JD
Provides alternatives to incarceration and detention. Provides counseling, and vocational and educational assistance to selected participants, aiming for non-jail sentences.

Civil Rights Clinic
New York University School of Law
245 Sullivan Street, 5th Floor
New York, NY 10012
(212) 998-6448
C, R
Helps prisoners understand their legal problems. Handles prisoners' cases or refers them to legal services.

Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)
817 Broadway
New York, NY 10003
(212) 598-4000
www.core-online.org
EV, R, C, SS
Administers welfare-to-work programs available to ex-offenders. Prefers that those interested in their services contact them by writing a letter.

Federation Employment and Guidance Service ("FEGS")
58-19 Van Cleef Street
Corona, NY 11368
(212) 366-8400
www.fegs.org
JD, C, R

Fortune Society
53 West 23rd Street, 8th Floor
New York, NY 10011
(212) 691-7554
www.fortunesociety.org
C, R, SS, P, EV, JD, H
Works with prisoners on a one-to-one basis to help them readjust to society. Counsels individuals in alternative-to-incarceration programs, ex-offenders and the families of prisoners. Provides information and referral services for ex-offenders who are HIV positive or have AIDS-related diseases.

Greenhope Services for Women
448 East 119th Street
New York, NY 10035
(212) 369-5100
www.greenhope.org
H, JD, C, R, P, EV, SS
Counsels both incarcerated women and those participating in programs affording an alternative to incarceration. Provides counseling for substance abuse, HIV/AIDS, parenting and nutrition, as well as GED training, employment, medical and residence referral services, and legal advocacy.

Institute for Community Living
6209 16th Avenue
Brooklyn, NY 11204
(718) 234-0073
EV, H, C, R, JD, SS
Serves patients with mental illness or substance abuse issues.

NAACP
39 Broadway, Suite 2201
New York, NY 10006
(212) 344-7474
www.naacp.org

Salvation Army
Main Office:
120 West 14th Street
New York, NY 10011
(212) 337-7200

Salvation Army
Drug Rehabilitation Office:
536 West 46th Street
New York, NY 10036
(212) 757-2311
P, C, R, JD, SS
Visits prisoners and provides social services to ex-offenders in the boroughs of New York. Provides prison counseling, parole planning, parole counseling services, and programs in pre-release job training.

State University Educational Opportunity Center in Brooklyn
111 Livingston Street
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 488-9840
www.bklyn.eoc.cuny.edu
EV, JD
Provides academic and career counseling and job placement assistance through a tuition-free program.

The Correctional Association of New York
135 East 15th Street
New York, NY 10003
(212) 254-5700
www.correctionalassociation.org
SS, P
Monitors New York state prisons, ensures proper conditions, and investigates complaint letters.

The Osborne Association, Inc.
175 Remsen Street, 8th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201
(718) 637-6560
www.osborneny.org
EV, JD, FA, P, R, SS
Provides substance abuse counseling, youth micro-enterprise project, and alternatives to incarceration programs for nonviolent or youthful offenders.

The Osborne Association, Inc.
36-31 38th Street
Long Island City, NY 11101
(718) 707-2600
www.osborneny.org
EV, JD, FA, P, R, SS
Provides programs in prisoner reentry, family services, court advocacy, and employment guidance.

The Osborne Association, Inc.
809 Westchester Avenue
Bronx, NY 10455
(718) 707-2600
www.osborneny.org
EV, JD, FA, P, R, SS
Provides HIV/AIDS and substance abuse counseling.

Vocational and Educational Services for Individuals with Disabilities
New York State Department of Education
116 West 32nd Street
6th Floor
New York, NY 10001
(212) 630-2300
www.vesid.nysed.gov
JD, EV

Provides services to those who fit their disability criteria, which includes physical or mental disabilities, drug or alcohol abuse, or learning disabilities.

Vocational Foundation, Inc.
53 Broadway
New York, NY 10004
(212) 823-1001
EV, JD
Provides GED preparation and job training for young adults aged 17–20 who pass an admittance test.

Women's Prison Association & Home, Inc.
110 Second Avenue
New York, NY 10003
(646) 336-6100
www.wpaonline.org
P, EV, JD, FA, H, C, R
Rehabilitates female ex-offenders. Operates as a halfway house available to those with alternative-to-incarceration acceptance; clients may stay for six months without paying a fee. Also offers counseling and training in life-skills. Provides additional services for women involved in the prison system. For more information, contact the Community Linkage Unit at (212) 674-1163, ext. 25.

2. Social Services in Other Counties

ALBANY COUNTY
New York State Catholic Conferences
465 State Street
Albany, NY 12203
(518) 434-6195
www.nyscatholic.org
C
Acts as a liaison for Catholic chaplains in New York state correctional institutions.

BROOME COUNTY
The Reverend Cris Mogenson
The Jail Ministry
Broome County Council of Churches
3 Otseningo Street
Binghamton, NY 13903
(607) 724-8771
www.broomecouncil.net/jail.asp
C, SS, FA
Counsels prisoners and provides family support, clothing and services to releasees.

CAYUGA COUNTY
Auburn Hospitality Center
148 State Street
Auburn, NY 13021
(315) 253-0121
SS
Assists visitors to Auburn prison, and attempts to increase citizen and prison administration awareness of criminal justice system problems.
See MONROE COUNTY

CHENANGO COUNTY
Opportunities for Chenango
P.O. Box 470
44 West Main Street
Norwich, NY 13815
(607) 334-7114
www.ofcinc.org
SS, FA
Assists families in moving out of poverty and into situations where they are self-sufficient.

ERIE COUNTY
Buffalo Half-Way House
115 Glenwood Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14209
(716) 882-0027
H, P
Provides transitional housing for both male and female ex-offenders returning to Buffalo County who meet the eligibility requirements of the New York Division of Parole or the U.S. Federal Bureau of Prisons.

FRANKLIN COUNTY
Community Action Agency of Franklin County
("ComLinks")
343 West Main Street
Malone, NY 12953
(518) 483-1261
www.comlinkscaa.net
P, SS
Provides support services for ex-offenders.

GREENE COUNTY
Department of Social Services
411 Main Street
Post Office Box 528
Catskill, NY 12414
(518) 943-3200
FA, H, SS
Helps find housing and provides support services for ex-offenders.

HAMILTON COUNTY
Department of Social Services
White Birch Lane
Post Office Box 725
Indian Lake, NY 12842
(518) 648-6131
FA, SS
Provides support services, such as public assistance, food stamps, and Medicaid, for low-income residents of Hamilton County.
See WARREN COUNTY

LEWIS COUNTY
Lewis County Opportunities
8265 State Route 812
Lowville, NY 13367
(315) 376-8202
www.lcopps.com
SS
Provides support services for low-income residents of Lewis County.

MONROE COUNTY
Judicial Process Commission
121 North Fitzhugh Street
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 325-7727
C, EV, SS, R
Develops public awareness of the criminal justice system. Answers prisoner correspondence, refers prisoners to legal services, provides a community jobs program and a mentorship program for ex-offenders, and advocates on behalf of prisoners.

NASSAU COUNTY
Port Washington Community Action Council
382 Main Street
Port Washington, NY 11050
(516) 883-3201
SS
Provides translation services to prisoners or those awaiting trial.

Nepperhan Community Center
Youthful Ex-Offender Program, Project Return
342 Warburton Avenue
Yonkers, NY 10701
(914) 965-0203
www.nepperhan communitycenter.org
C, JD, EV, SS, P
Provides support services for youthful (ages 21 and under) ex-offenders returning to the Yonkers community, including basic skills remediation, pre-employment maturity skills, and job-specific skills training.

New Rochelle Outreach Center
33 Lincoln Avenue
Suite # 2
New Rochelle, NY 10801
(914) 636-2721
C, R
Provides both voluntary and mandated treatment for drug addiction.

NIAGARA COUNTY
Niagara Community Action Program, Inc.
1521 Main Street
Niagara Falls, NY 14305
(716) 285-9681
SS
Provides support for low-income Niagara County residents, particularly housing, food, and emergency shelter.

Open Door Family Medical Group
165 Main Street
Ossining, NY 10562
(914) 941-1263
C
Provides medical and dental care, HIV testing, and counseling.

Pretrial Services Institute of Westchester County
300 Hamilton Avenue, Suite 204
White Plains, NY 10601
(914) 428-6663
Interviews and screens defendants in the Westchester County Jail for release without bail, through its "ROR" Program. Runs a monitored release program, allowing Pretrial Services Institute to monitor released prisoners through daily contact and supervise additional conditions the court may order. Runs a bail expediting program for defendants whose bail is less than $5,000, assisting with calls to collect the necessary funds for bail.

Probe
229 State Street
Binghamton, NY 13901
(607) 772-8912
C, EV, SS
Provides counseling, employment training, and education to help individuals avoid crime. Assists ex-offenders returning to Broome County and works with at-risk youth.

SCHOHARIE COUNTY
Schoharie County Community Action Program, Inc.
795 East Main Street, Suite 5
Cobleskill, NY 12043
(518) 234-2568
www.sccapinc.org
FA, SS
P*rovides family development and emergency support services for low-income residents but only after other social services have been exhausted.*

SENECA COUNTY
Salvation Army
P.O. Box 532
41 North Street
Geneva, NY 14456
(315) 789-1055
C, SS, R
Provides support services for ex-offenders, including counseling, referral to drug rehabilitation programs, help with food and medication, and jail visitation (if requested).

Society of St. Vincent de Paul
Central Council, Diocese of Rockville Centre
249 Broadway
Bethpage, NY 11714
(516) 822-3132
C, R, JD, H, SS, EV
Provides transitional programming for ex-offenders with substance abuse problems. Provides job assistance and subsidized housing. Runs a juvenile offender program.

SULLIVAN COUNTY
Tioga Opportunities Program
9 Sheldon Guile Boulevard
Owego, NY 13827
(607) 687-4222
SS, P, H
Provides support services for ex-offenders, including housing, and head-start programs for family health and planning.

TOMPKINS COUNTY
Offender Aid and Restoration of Tompkins County ("OAR")
518 West Seneca Street
Ithaca, NY 14850
(607) 272-7885
SS, P
Provides support services and advocacy for ex-offenders to aid in community readjustment.

WARREN COUNTY
Warren-Hamilton Counties
Community Action Agency
P.O. Box 968
190 Maple Street
Glen Falls, NY 12801
(518) 793-0638
R, FA, SS, P
Provides support services for ex-offenders, including referrals and emergency food, clothing, and rental assistance.

WAYNE COUNTY
Wayne County Action Program
159 Montezuma Street
Lyons, NY 14489
(315) 946-7530
www.waynecap.org
C, SS
Provides support services for qualifying

ex-offenders through a structured program that includes counseling and referral (even ex-offenders who were incarcerated for periods as short as one day may be admitted). Works with probation and parole officers.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY
Mount Vernon Community Action Group of WestCOP
Outreach Office Ex-offender Counseling
42 East Third Street
Mount Vernon, NY 10550
(914) 664-8680
C
Provides counseling for drug addiction, alcoholism, and AIDS.

C. Official Corrections Agencies

1. Watchdog Agencies

The New York State Commission of Correction and the New York City Board of Correction help prisoners in many areas. The State Commission provides information and investigates complaints by prisoners of state prisons. The City Board provides similar services for prisoners in New York City.

NEW YORK STATE COMMISSION OF CORRECTION
80 Wolf Road, 4th Floor
Albany, NY 12205
(518) 485-2346
www.scoc.state.ny.us

NEW YORK CITY BOARD OF CORRECTION
51 Chambers Street
Room 923
New York, NY 10007
(212) 788-7840

2. Administrative Agencies

These agencies have responsibility for care of prisoners in New York State and City prisons.

STATE OF NEW YORK DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES
Building 2, 1220 Washington Avenue
Albany, NY 12226
(518) 457-8126
www.docs.state.ny.us

NEW YORK CITY DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS
60 Hudson Street
New York, NY 10013
(212) 266-1000
www.nyc.gov/doc

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

Appendix V: Definitions of Words Used in the JLM

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

APPENDIX V

DEFINITIONS OF LEGAL TERMS USED IN THE JLM[*]

A.L.R.: stands for American Law Reporter; a reference book that aids your legal research by referring you to cases and legal writings on particular topics. The different editions of A.L.R. are indicated by numbers. For example, A.L.R. refers to the first edition, and A.L.R.2d refers to the second edition.

Acquit: An acquittal means a jury or court finds a defendant (in a criminal trial) not guilty of a crime.

Adjournment: Delaying or temporarily stopping a court session that is already in progress. For example, a judge may call an adjournment due to a holiday, after which the court session will continue.

Administrative agency: A political body created by the state or federal government to carry out the laws. For example, the New York's Department of Corrections is an administrative agency that carries out the laws passed by the New York state legislature relating to prisons.

Administrative law judge: An administrative law judge (ALJ) is a representative of an administrative agency. The ALJ hears cases related to the administrative agency (for example, INS) when disputes arise between the agency and a person whom the agency's decision affects. The ALJ has the power to take testimony and decide issues of evidence, like a judge who hears civil and criminal cases in a court of law.

Admissible evidence: Evidence that can legally be introduced at a trial; the evidence must be relevant and not, for example, unfairly prejudicial, based on hearsay, or privileged.

Affidavit: A written or printed statement of facts that is made voluntarily by a person who swears to the truth of the statement before a public officer, such as a notary public.

Affidavit of service: A sworn statement saying that legal papers have been delivered to, or served upon, the other party in a lawsuit.

Affirm: When the appellate court agrees with the decision of the trial court, the appellate court affirms the decision of the trial court. When this happens, the party who lost in the trial court and appealed to the appellate court is still the loser in the case.

Affirmative defense: A defense the defendant offers to justify his criminal act. When a defendant asserts an affirmative defense, he means that even if the allegations against him are true, he should still be found not guilty. Affirmative defenses include self-defense, coercion, insanity, and duress.

Aggravated felony: A felony is a crime that involves serious bodily injury or the use of a dangerous weapon. It also means that a harsher sentence may be imposed. In the context of immigration, aggravated felony has a different meaning. Please refer to the Immigration and Consular Access Supplement to the JLM for more information about immigration.

Aggravating factors: In deciding whether to impose a sentence, a judge and jury consider certain "aggravating factors," which are defined by statutes. Aggravating factors require a harsher punishment. Some examples of aggravating factors are murder committed for money, robbery committed by someone out on bail, or assault perpetrated for racist reasons.

Allege: To claim or to charge that someone acted, or that something happened, but that act or occurrence has yet to be proven. When you allege something, you make an allegation.

---

* Words that are defined elsewhere in this Appendix are printed in italics.

Amendment (for example, 14th Amendment): Any change that is made to a law after it is written originally. In the United States Constitution, an amendment is a law added to the original document that further defines the rights and duties of individuals and the government.

Annotation: A remark, note, or comment on a section of legal writing, which is intended to explain and clarify the passage.

Appeal: To complain to a higher court that the judgment of a lower court was wrong or that the lower court made an error. For example, if you lose in the trial court, you may appeal to the appellate court.

Appellate Court: A court that reviews the decision of the lower court on appeal. It has the authority to affirm, reverse, or remand the decision of the lower court.

Appellate Term: One of the two types of intermediate appellate courts in New York State. The appellate term is housed within the New York Supreme Court and initially handles all of the appeal cases coming from lower courts such as county courts, town courts, district courts, civil courts, etc.

Appellate Division: One of the two types of intermediate appellate courts in New York State. New York State is divided up into territorial departments, and each department has an Appellate Division that serves as its intermediate appellate court. The Appellate Division handles appeals from the Appellate Term and the New York Supreme Court.

Arbitrator: An impartial person who, in a special proceeding called arbitration, decides a dispute between parties, who have chosen arbitration instead of trial. Arbitration is sometimes required by law.

Authorities: Legal sources affecting how your case is decided. Authorities include cases and statutes. If neither cases nor statutes exist, secondary sources such as law reviews may be considered authorities.

Beyond a reasonable doubt: The standard by which the government must prove every element (part) of its case in a criminal trial. It is the most demanding burden of proof.

Burden of proof: A party's duty in a trial to prove a fact or facts at issue to convince the jury of the truth of the party's claim. If a party does not fulfill this duty, all or part of the case must be dismissed. In civil cases, juries must decide whether the plaintiff proved the case by a preponderance of the evidence; in other words, the plaintiff's burden of proof in civil suits is a preponderance of the evidence. In criminal cases, juries must decide whether the government proved its case beyond a reasonable doubt; in other words, the government's burden of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt. Beyond a reasonable doubt is a higher burden of proof than a preponderance of the evidence, meaning it is more difficult to satisfy.

Certiorari, Writ of (cert.): An order by an appellate (higher) court declaring that it will review the decision of a lower court. "Certiorari granted" means that the appellate court decided to approve a petition for certiorari and review the trial court's decision. "Certiorari denied" means that the appellate court decided not to approve a petition for certiorari and, thus, not to review the lower court's decision. Some courts, such as in New York, simply call certiorari "leave to appeal."

Cf.: A signal used in legal writing that means "compare" but that still supports the statement to which it cites. Cf. directs the reader to another case or article to compare, contrast, or explain differing views.

Circuit Court of Appeals: The United States is divided into federal judicial circuits, based on geographical areas (New York is located in the Second Circuit). Each circuit has a court of appeals known as the U.S. Court of Appeals for that particular circuit. These courts are one level below the U.S. Supreme Court. See the front inside cover of the JLM for a diagram of the structure of the U.S. judiciary.

Civil ("civil trial," "civil case," or "civil action"): In general, all types of actions that are not criminal. Civil actions are brought by a private party to protect a private right. The burden of proof and the procedural rules in a civil trial may be different from those in a criminal trial.

Class action: A lawsuit in which the plaintiffs represent and sue on behalf of all the people in the same situation as the plaintiffs and with similar legal claims. See Chapter 16 for an explanation of class actions.

Clear and convincing evidence: A burden of proof that requires more convincing evidence than a preponderance of the evidence, but not as much as beyond a reasonable doubt. This burden of proof is used in certain types of immigration proceedings. Please refer to the Immigration and Consular Access Supplement to the JLM for more information.

Clemency (mercy, leniency): Kindness that is shown toward a criminal act. It is often used to describe the act of a state governor in which he or she commutes or reduces a sentence.

Coerce/coercion: To force someone to do something. A confession of a defendant that is coerced may be held inadmissible by a court. Coercion is defined as force—physical or mental—that overcomes a person's free choice in doing something. Coercion can be an affirmative defense.

Collateral (attack or appeal): To make a collateral appeal means to bring a civil proceeding to challenge an error in an earlier proceeding with the purpose of obtaining a ruling on the alleged error. This takes place in a different proceeding than a direct appeal from the earlier case.

Commuted sentence: A sentence that is reduced.

Concurrent sentences: When a person is convicted of several criminal charges, the judge can order that the person's sentences run at the same time (concurrently) rather than one after another (consecutively). For example, if you are sentenced to six months for assault and nine months for robbery, you would have to serve fifteen months total under consecutive sentencing; however, if the judge orders your sentences to run concurrently, you only have to serve nine months total.

Contingent fee: A method of fee payment describing how a lawyer may agree to represent a client. The plaintiff who retains (hires) the lawyer only pays the lawyer if the plaintiff wins the case. The lawyer accepts an agreed-upon percentage of the money judgment the plaintiff wins. For example, most lawyers who are paid like this charge a 33% contingency fee, which means that if you win $1000, the lawyer will keep $330 plus his or her expenses for things like phone calls and photocopies. Some lawyers may charge you for their expenses even if you lose your case. Lawyers generally may not charge contingent fees in criminal cases.

Convict: To find a defendant guilty of the crime he or she has been accused of committing.

Counsel: A lawyer (attorney).

Court of Appeals: In New York, the Court of Appeals is the highest level appellate court that can review your case. It reviews the decision of the appellate division, which reviewed the trial court decision.

Counterclaim: In a civil proceeding, a defendant who is sued may then bring suit against the person suing him or her. This suit brought by the defendant against the plaintiff is called a counterclaim.

Criminal ("criminal case," "criminal proceeding," or "criminal trial"): A case in which the government brings a charge against a person for a crime the person is accused of committing. The burden of proof and the procedural rules in a criminal trial may be different from those in a civil trial. See the definition of beyond a reasonable doubt.

Cross-examination: At a trial or hearing, when the lawyer for the opposing party questions a witness. Cross-examination takes place after the direct examination. The lawyer usually asks questions that require a yes or no answer. Each party has a right to cross-examine the other party's witnesses.

Custody (Custodian): Being "in custody" means that police officers or law enforcement authorities have control over you. It may refer to arrest, actual imprisonment, or a temporary restraint of liberty at the station house. A custodian is the person or law enforcement agency with the control over a person.

Damages: The money awarded by a court to a person who has suffered loss, injury, or harm, either to the person's body or to property.

De minimis: A term used to describe something that is insignificant or small, and thus ignored by the law and the courts. For example, you experienced a de minimis injury if your car was bumped by another car, and you will not be successful if you try to sue the person who bumped you for assault.

Declaratory judgment (Declaratory relief): A court's decision in a civil case declaring the rights of the parties or expressing the court's opinion on a certain part of the law, without ordering relief for either side.

Defendant: The party against whom a lawsuit is brought.

Denial: A rejection, as in rejecting an application, motion, or petition. Also, denial can be an assertion that the statement offered is untrue, as someone who denies a statement made about him that he has committed a crime.

Determinate sentence: A prison sentence that sets a fixed period of incarceration, as opposed to an indeterminate sentence, which sets a range of possible periods of incarceration.

Dictum: An observation or a remark made by a judge in his or her opinion, about a question of law suggested by the case, but that is not considered the law of the case because it is not the legal basis for the judge's decision. Therefore, other courts do not have to follow the legal analysis found in dictum (although sometimes judges may choose to) even when the same question of law comes up in the future.

Direct examination: At a trial or hearing, when the lawyer questions a witness for the party that the lawyer is representing in attempting to prove his or her side of the case.

Discipline (Disciplinary proceeding): Punishment for violation of rules. At the proceeding, a person or committee decides what punishment is appropriate.

Discovery: In preparation for a trial, the process of obtaining information about your case. See Chapter 8 for more information.

Discretion: The power of a legal body, such as a court or agency, to act or decide in a situation in which the law provides no precise answers. For example, the judge may have discretion to create remedies for you if the law does not say precisely how to do so.

Disposition: The disposition of a case refers to how the case was decided or settled.

Dissent (Dissenting opinion): A judge who disagrees with the decision of the majority of the other judges on the same appellate court. He or she writes the reasons for disagreeing in what is known as a dissenting opinion. The dissenting opinion is not the main opinion of the case nor is it considered the law.

Due process (Constitutional right to due process): You have two types of due process rights. Your right to procedural due process means government proceedings must treat you fairly. It limits the ways the government can take away your property, liberty, and life. Your right to substantive due process prevents government interference with other rights individuals have that the government cannot take away—rights such as privacy, speech, and religion. Many Chapters in the JLM deal with these two types of due process.

Duress: A threat of harm that causes a person to do some act that the person otherwise would not have done. Duress can be an affirmative defense. Threats of imprisonment and injury are examples of duress.

Entitled: Having a legal right.

Evidence: Anything presented to a court that proves, or helps to prove, the claim of a party. Evidence can be presented orally by witnesses; or through documents, physical objects, or any means to help prove a point.Ex rel. (Ex relatione): A Latin[1] phrase meaning "by or on the relation of." A lawsuit "ex rel." is brought by the government if a private party (someone not acting as a government official) interested in the matter asks the government to bring suit. For example, if Smith asks the government to bring a lawsuit against Jones, the case would be written as "State ex rel. Smith v. Jones."

Exclude from evidence: The use of legal means to keep certain evidence from being considered in deciding the case.

Exculpate: To free from blame. For example, "exculpatory evidence" is evidence that shows the innocence of the defendant. A prosecutor is required to disclose such evidence to the defense attorney.

Facially: Appearing on the surface. Something may seem to be true on the surface, but turn out to be false upon further investigation. For example, the words in a statute may not seem "facially" discriminatory toward women but can still discriminate against them when the statute is applied.

Federal: In the JLM, "federal" is used to describe a system of government, including courts and laws, organized under the United States Constitution. In contrast, "state" describes fifty separate and differing systems of government, including courts and laws, organized under the constitutions and statutes of each of the fifty states that make up the United States of America.

Felony: In many states, this is any crime that is punishable by imprisonment of more than one year in prison or is punishable by death. Felonies are crimes that are more serious than misdemeanors.

Felony murder: In many states, this is an unintended death that occurs during the commission of a felony (such as armed robbery). In those states, anyone accused of the felony can automatically be charged with murder, too. This is called the "felony murder doctrine").

File: To submit for recognition, as in "filing papers with the court."

Footnote (Footnote Number): A number appearing in the body of a piece of legal writing that indicates that at the bottom of the page there is more information about the particular section or sentence next to which the number appears. The information at the bottom of the page is the footnote itself.[2] In legal citations, footnotes are usually abbreviated as 'n.'—for example to refer to footnote number 7, you should use "n.7." In the JLM, this information is especially useful for clarifying sentences in the text and providing cases to support the text.

Grant (as in "grant a motion"): To allow or permit. For example, when the court grants a motion, it allows what the motion was requesting.

Habeas corpus (writ of habeas corpus): This is a Latin term that refers to the form of relief that the court may grant, after a prisoner files a petition, to release the prisoner from unlawful confinement or incarceration. The prisoner must prove that he or she was held in violation of his rights. The habeas writ can be sought in both state and federal courts. For more information, see Chapters 13 and 21 of the JLM. A habeas petition is a form of collateral attack on a conviction or sentence.

Hear (for example, "hear a motion"): To listen to both sides on a particular legal issue. For example, when a judge hears a case, he or she considers the validity of the case by listening to the arguments of the lawyers from both sides in the litigation.

Hearing officer: A person appointed to preside over a hearing. This person does not have to be a judge.

---

[1] Latin phrases are italicized in legal writing. Therefore, if you submit any motions, briefs, complaints, etc. to the court, you should italicize any Latin phrases you use.

[2] This is an example of a footnote. If you were citing it, you would call it n.2.

Hearing: A legal proceeding before a judge or hearing officer that is similar to a trial. In a hearing, the judge or hearing officer decides an issue of the case, but does not decide the defendant's guilt or innocence.

Hearsay: Used to describe testimony in which a witness talks about something he or she does not know through personal experience, but that he or she has been told by others. (Hearsay is defined by Fed. R. Evid. 801(c) as a "statement other than one made by the declarant [the person testifying] while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.") Hearsay testimony generally is not admissible in court and may be excluded. But, many exceptions to the hearsay rule exist.

Holding: The decision of a court in a case and the accompanying explanation.

Immunity (as in "immunity from lawsuit"): When a person or governmental body cannot be sued (is immune from suit). For example, sovereign immunity means that you cannot sue certain parts of the government without the government's consent.

Impartial: Not favoring either side; fair and unbiased.

Inadmissible evidence: Evidence that cannot legally be introduced at trial.

Indeterminate Sentence: A prison sentence that does not set a fixed period of time for incarceration, but sets a minimum and a maximum period, so that the incarceration cannot last less than a certain period or more than a certain period. The length of incarceration is determined later, according to factors such as behavior in prison.

Indictment (pronounced "in-DITE-ment"): A written accusation presented by the grand jury charging a person with a particular crime or crimes. After the issuing of an indictment, the charges must be proven at trial in order for the defendant to be convicted.

Indigent person: A person who does not have enough money to hire a lawyer to defend him or herself. In most criminal cases, an indigent defendant is entitled to counsel provided by the state. Court costs may also be waived for an indigent defendant. To request the services of an attorney or a reduction or waiver of court filing fees, you must file poor person's papers, which is also called filing "in forma pauperis."

Injunction (Injunctive relief): An order of the court that a person should immediately stop doing something, or should begin to do something it has stopped doing.

Intentional: On purpose. In general, to act with intention is to act with the conscious objective of bringing about a particular result. For certain crimes, intentional acts may have to be proven by the state.

Intermediate appellate court: The court above the trial court that reviews some decisions of the trial court, but that is lower than the final appellate court (such as the New York Court of Appeals). There are two intermediate appellate courts in New York State, the Appellate Division and the Appellate Term. These courts review decisions of the lower trial court (in New York it is confusingly called the New York Supreme Court), and their decisions are reviewed by the New York Court of Appeals. Generally, in the federal justice system, the circuit court is the intermediate appellate court; it reviews the decisions of the district courts, and its own decisions are reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Washington, D.C.

Interrogatories: A set of questions. See Chapter 8 for an explanation of interrogatories and how they fit into the discovery process.

Involuntary: Describes an act that you did not intend to do.

Judgment: The final decision of a court that resolves a case and determines the parties' rights and duties.

Jurisdiction: The authority under which a court decides a case. A court must have subject matter jurisdiction over the kind of dispute (for example, only criminal courts can hear criminal cases) and personal jurisdiction over both sides. Put very simply, personal jurisdiction means that either you have agreed to come to that particular court or you have certain relationships with the state that allow them to bring you to court—for example, if you live in that state.

Jury: A jury is a group of people who will vote to decide the outcome of a case. The Sixth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution provides for a jury trial for criminal offenses. State constitutions also often contain the right to a jury trial. For some "petty offenses" (low-level offenses that do not carry sentences of more than six months), a defendant may not be entitled to a jury trial.

Lesser included offense: A crime that has some, but not all, of the elements of another, more serious, crime. It must also not have any elements that are different from the greater crime. A lesser included offense occurs when it is impossible to commit a crime without also committing a crime of a lesser degree. For example, manslaughter is a lesser included offense of murder. See Chapter 9 for more information.

Liable: To be obligated by the court to make compensation. For example, if the court decides that A must pay B $100 for the injury A caused B, A is liable to B for $100.

Litigate (Litigation): To participate in a trial. All the events in a trial, including the trial itself and proceedings prior to trial (sometimes called pre-trial proceedings), constitute litigation.

Majority (Majority opinion): An opinion signed by more than half of the judges of a court or panel; it constitutes the court's decision.

Material evidence: Evidence that is relevant and important to the legal issues being decided in a lawsuit.

Minor: Someone under the legal age of adulthood. In most states, the age of adulthood is eighteen years old. Being charged as a minor in a criminal case means there will be much lower penalties; however, this decision is up to the court's discretion.

Minutes: Transcript. The final copy of the record taken from the shorthand originally written by the court reporter.

Miranda (Miranda v. Arizona): A U.S. Supreme Court case setting forth the rights you should be informed about just after you are arrested. This case requires police officers to inform suspects in police custody of certain rights before their interrogation.

Misdemeanor: In general, misdemeanors are punishable by fine, penalty, or imprisonment of less than one year. In most states and under federal law, any offense that is not a felony is classified as a misdemeanor. Both felonies and misdemeanors are grouped into classes (for example, Class A, B, C, etc.) and the sentencing varies by the class. There may be procedural differences in how felonies and misdemeanors are handled by a court.

Misrepresentation: A written or oral statement that is an untrue statement of the facts.

Mistrial: If a fundamental error occurs during trial (for example, a court does not have jurisdiction, or a jury selection error or hung jury occurs) that cannot be corrected, a judge may decide the trial should not continue and declare a "mistrial." A judge may also declare a mistrial if an extraordinary event takes place (like a juror's or attorney's death). Often, when a mistrial occurs, the accused may be tried again.

Mitigating factors: Factors that reduce your blameworthiness and that the jury or judge may rely upon to decide on a lower level of punishment. Examples of mitigating factors are you have no significant history of prior criminal activity, you committed the crime while you were under the influence of extreme mental disturbance, or you were very young when you committed the crime. Mitigating factors are sometimes defined by statute.

Moot: An issue or case is considered moot when it is no longer necessary for a court to render a decision about that issue or case because of a change in circumstances or passage of time. For example, if the law changes, then the case concerning that old law can (but not always does) become moot. Another example is a case about custody of a minor; if the minor becomes an adult, then that case becomes moot.

Motion: In litigation, a request that the judge take some sort of action, or make some sort of ruling.

Motion papers: Papers presented to court requesting that the judge make a decision. Typically, if a factual question is raised in motion papers, the court will hold a hearing.

Negligence: To be negligent is to not behave as a reasonable person would under the same circumstances. This includes to do something that a reasonable person would not do, or to not do something thing a reasonable person would do. Negligence is often a standard in a case, meaning that a party needs to prove that the opposing party in the suit was negligent in order to win the case. For example, if you do not shovel your sidewalks all winter (and you live in a place where it snows), you may be negligent.

Notary (Notary public): A person who is authorized to fix his or her seal on certain legal papers in order to verify that a particular person signed the papers. This is known as notarizing the papers.

Notice (Notification): "Notice" has several meanings in the law. First, the law often requires that "notice" be given to an individual about a certain fact. For example, the government is required to provide "notice" to a defendant of the charges against the defendant in criminal proceedings or in civil proceedings in which an individual's interests are involved. This means the government must give you a piece of paper explaining the charges. It also means that if you sue someone, you must give them "notice" through service of process. Second, "notice" is used in cases to refer to whether an individual was aware of something. For example, a statute may require that before an individual be held liable for damages, the individual have "notice" about a certain fact.

Objection: During a trial, the prosecutor or the defense attorney may disagree, based on the rules of the courtroom, with something opposing counsel says (for example, the way questioning is being conducted during testimony) or does (for example, the way evidence is presented). An attorney tells the court of his or her disagreement by saying "I object" or "objection." The judge decides immediately after each objection whether to "sustain" (uphold) or "overrule" the objection. If the judge sustains an objection, it means the judge (based on his or her interpretation of the law) agrees with the attorney raising the objection and whatever is objected to must stop because it is against the rules. If an objection is overruled, it means the judge disagrees with the attorney raising the objection and whatever is objected to may continue.

Off the record: This is what the judge says when he or she wants to say something or wants to hold a discussion that he or she does not want to appear in the court record. For example, plea bargaining discussions between lawyers and the judge usually are held off the record.

Opinion: When a court decides a case, the court writes an explanation of how it reached its decision. This is an "opinion."

Oral arguments: Spoken arguments made by the parties of a case that a judge may hear before reaching a decision and issuing an opinion. Oral arguments are often presented to appellate judges; see Chapter 9 for more information on the criminal appeals process.

Overrule: To reverse, reject or rule against. When a court's later decision on a point of law conflicts with a prior decision by the same court, it "overrules" the prior decision. The earlier decision is no longer precedent because it has been reversed. A judge also "overrules" an attorney's objection when he or she disagrees with that attorney and believes that the conduct objected to should be allowed.

Party: The people who are involved in the lawsuit on either side. For example, the defendant is a party. Multiple defendants can also collectively be considered one party.

Peace officer: Officers in various state agencies appointed to maintain order or "keep the peace," including sheriffs, police officers, and state highway patrol.

Per se: A Latin phrase meaning "by itself" or "in itself." For example, in considering a habeas petition, a court may consider a violation "per se prejudicial" and not require you to present further evidence to prove you were prejudiced (harmed) because the court has already assumed that you were prejudiced by the violation.

Peremptory strike or peremptory challenges: In selecting a jury for a jury trial, both the prosecution and defense can remove a potential juror from serving on the jury without providing a reason; each such removal is called a peremptory strike or challenge. The number of peremptory challenges for the prosecution and defense are fixed, and after the given number is used up, each side must then provide reasons for refusing a potential juror. Peremptory challenges are defined by state statutes.

Personal property: Everything that a person owns that does not fall under the definition of real property.

Petition: A formal, written request to the court to take action on a particular matter. The petition should contain all necessary information and be presented in the proper format.

Petitioner: The person who brings a lawsuit or an appeal by "petitioning" the court for relief.

Plaintiff: The person who brings a lawsuit.

Pleas: After being indicted for a particular crime, a defendant enters a plea of guilty, not guilty, or no contest. A plea of no contest, usually in a situation of a misdemeanor as part of a plea arrangement, means you are not denying or admitting the allegations against you on the record but that you accept the sentence. A plea of not guilty may lead to a trial. A guilty plea may be a requirement of "plea bargaining," which takes place when the prosecutor and the accused negotiate a resolution to the case subject to court approval. Usually, a "plea bargain" includes a defendant pleading guilty in return for a lower sentence. A plea of guilty leads to a sentencing hearing at which the defendant's sentence is decided by a judge.

Post-conviction relief: A remedy granted by a court after conviction that changes the terms of conviction, either by awarding a new sentence or trial, or by reversing the conviction. Examples of post-conviction relief include habeas corpus and, in New York, Article 440 motions.

Precedent: A case decided by a court that serves as the rule to be followed in similar later cases. For example, a case decided in the United States Supreme Court is precedent for all other courts—any rules established in that case become laws that must be followed by all other courts unless or until overruled by a later decision of the Supreme Court.

Prejudice, Prejudicial: When something happens that biases the jury against one of the parties in a case, there has been prejudice to that party's case. For example, if there has been a long delay between your arrest and your final parole revocation hearing, habeas corpus may be granted because of the delay, which may have been prejudicial to your case.

Preponderance of the evidence: This is the burden of proof in a civil suit. To meet this burden of proof, there must be more evidence that the thing being proved happened than that it did not happen.

Presumption: Something that a court takes to be true according to the rules of the court or the laws of the jurisdiction. For example, in all criminal trials, a defendant is presumed innocent. Therefore a jury must believe the defendant is innocent unless there is sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the defendant is guilty. A rebuttable presumption is one that can be overcome by proof that it is not true in the case being considered by the court. For a presumption to be rebutted, the rebutter must meet the burden of proof (either by preponderance of the evidence, clear and convincing evidence, or beyond a reasonable doubt, depending upon the type of presumption). An irrebuttable presumption is one that the court always considers to be true, and cannot be rebutted by any amount of proof.

Privilege: A special legal right or exemption that allows certain people to not testify about information they learned from a specific source—for example, the attorney-client privilege and the spousal privilege. The attorney-client privilege means that the information exchanged between an attorney and his or her client is confidential, so an attorney may not reveal information regarding the representation of a client without the client's consent. The spousal privilege means that information exchanged between spouses is also protected, and a spouse may not be required to testify against his or her spouse. There are narrow exceptions to these privileges.

Pro se: A Latin phrase meaning "for oneself"; someone who appears in court pro se is representing him or herself without the services of a lawyer.

Probable Cause: A reasonable ground for believing, based on existing facts, that a crime has been committed, or that an arrest or search is necessary. Generally, the police must show probable cause to have a judge issue an arrest, search, or eavesdropping warrant. Same as reasonable cause.

Proceeding: Courtroom or related matter that occurs during the course of a dispute or lawsuit, or any individual courtroom or related event that takes place during the course of the dispute or lawsuit.

Questions of fact: The issues of a case that deal with the facts, or, in other words, what actually happened. This is in contrast to the issues of a case that deal with the law. In a jury trial, the jury decides questions of facts. In the absence of a jury, the judge decides the questions of fact (as well as questions of law).

Questions of law: The issues of a case that deal with what the law means, or how the law is applied or should be applied to the facts of the case. A jury cannot decide questions of law; only the judge can.

Real property: Land, and whatever is built or grows upon land.

Reasonable cause: Same as probable cause.

Reckless: To act despite the fact that you are aware that your action creates a substantial and unjustifiable (large and unnecessary) risk of harm to others. For certain crimes, recklessness is the mental state that must be proved by the prosecution.

Record (as in the record of a trial): A written account of all of the proceedings of a trial, as transcribed by the court reporter. Errors made by the court that appear in the record can be appealed, while those that do not appear in the record must be collaterally attacked.

Regulation: A rule or order that manages or governs a situation, as in "prison regulation." A regulation has the same effect as a law if the regulation is legally issued by an executive authority of government.

Relator: The person on whose behalf the state brings a claim, or who is permitted to bring a claim in the name of the state. See ex rel.

Relevant: A fact or circumstance that is important or helpful in the process of determining the truth of a matter is relevant. Something that is not important to determining the truth is "irrelevant."

Relief: Remedy or benefit that a plaintiff or petitioner seeks from a court or that is awarded by a court to a plaintiff or petitioner. See remedy, as these terms are often used interchangeably.

Remand: When a case is sent back from the appellate court to the trial court for further action or proceedings.

Remedy: When a court decides a criminal or civil issue, it often issues an order so that a right recognized by the court may be enforced. For example, a court may find that a confession taken by the police was coerced in violation of a defendant's right. Under these circumstances, the remedy the court may order is to not allow the defendant's confession to be used by the prosecution in its case to the jury. Remedies can consist of damages, injunctive relief, other orders, or solutions that a judge may use his or her discretion to create. See relief.

Reply: The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's case, either in a written brief or, at trial, orally.

Reprieve: Temporary delay in carrying out a criminal punishment.

Respondent: The person against whom a lawsuit or appeal is brought. This person "responds" to the claims of petitioner. See Defendant.

Retain (as in "to retain counsel"): To hire, usually used with respect to hiring a lawyer.

Reversed: When an appellate court changes the decision of a lower court, it reverses the lower court's decision. The party who lost in the trial court and then appealed to the appellate court is now the winner of the case.

Revoke (Revocation): To take back or cancel; the act of taking back or cancelling. For example, when the parole board revokes your parole, it cancels your parole and places you back in prison.

Right: A legal power that someone possesses. For example, if you are arrested, at the time of the arrest, you have the right to remain silent.

Right to an attorney: You have a right to the assistance of counsel (attorney) at any critical stage of your prosecution—meaning you have the right to counsel when adversarial proceedings have begun (in other words, after a formal charge has been filed, a preliminary hearing held, or during an indictment or an arraignment). This right to counsel is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution, even if you cannot afford an attorney. In such cases, counsel is provided by the state. You also have the right to counsel during an interrogation, as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, which protects you from self-incrimination. You may also be entitled to an attorney in proceedings other than criminal prosecutions. See Chapter 9 on criminal appeals and Chapter 4 on finding a lawyer for more information.

Right to be free from arbitrary search and seizure: The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution provides this right. The police in many cases must have a search warrant (especially if police are going to search a person's home). However, there are many exceptions to the requirement of a search warrant. If police locate evidence as a result of an illegal search, a judge may exclude the evidence from being heard or presented at trial.

Right to be free from torture: The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution states that you have a right to be free from "cruel and unusual punishment." State constitutions have similar provisions. See Chapter 16 for more information on enforcing your civil rights in prison.

Right to freely practice your religion: You have the right to practice your religion even though you are in prison. Prison officials may restrict your right to practice your religion only if the restriction imposed reasonably relates to the requirements of running the prison system. See Chapter 27 for more information on your religious freedom.

Right to remain silent: After a defendant is arrested, he or she has the right to not say anything. Police officers are required to inform a defendant of this right as part of the Miranda warnings given to an accused.
Sentence: The punishment imposed by the court or a judge against a defendant after he or she has been convicted of a crime.

Sentencing hearing: After a trial is concluded and the jury has reached a verdict (the jury's decision), the sentence of the defendant is still to be decided. Prior to sentencing, a hearing is held and a judge may review any relevant material before deciding on a sentence. These materials usually include a pre-sentencing report that often contains information such as the circumstances of the crime, and the educational and employment background of a defendant, among other factors.

Service ("to serve"): As used in legal language, the physical act of handing something over, or delivering something to a person, as in serving legal papers on a person.

Session ("in session"): That period of time during any given year in which a legal body (for example, a court, or the state legislature) carries on its usual business.

Standard (of proof): How the court will judge your evidence and decide your case. Certain situations require meeting a higher standard. In a criminal case, for example, the prosecution must show the court that you are guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt" for you to be convicted. Some other common standards of proof besides "beyond a reasonable doubt" include by "clear and convincing evidence" and by "a preponderance of the evidence."

Statute: Laws passed by the U.S. Congress or state legislatures. Criminal offenses are defined by statues.

Statute of limitations: A law that sets out time limitations within which different types of lawsuits or criminal charges must be brought. After the statute of limitations has "run" on a particular type of lawsuit, a plaintiff can no longer bring that lawsuit. For example, if the statute of limitations on a tort action is five years, the plaintiff cannot wait for five years and one day after the cause of action arises to bring the lawsuit. If the plaintiff waits that extra day, he or she can no longer sue.

Stenographer: The person who makes the court record by writing it in shorthand; same as the court reporter.

Subpoena: An official court document that requires a person to appear in court at a specific time and place. A particular type of subpoena requires an individual to produce books, papers, and other things.

Suppress (motion to suppress): To prevent evidence from being introduced at trail.

Tort: A legal term that means a "wrong" or "injury" inflicted on someone for which a remedy may be obtained in a civil case. Someone who destroys your property or injures you may have committed a tort. See Chapter 17 for more information on tort actions.

Trial: A proceeding that takes place before a judge or a judge and a jury. In a trial, both sides present arguments and evidence, which the court examines.

United States Law Week (U.S.L.W.): A reference book that contains newly-reported cases not yet printed in bound volumes.

v. (vs., versus): Means "against;" used to indicate opponents in a case, as in Doe v. Smith.

Vacate: To set aside, ignore, not give any merit. This term is used when an appellate court will vacate the judgment of a trial court if it concludes that the decision was wrong. It will ignore that decision so that the appellate court can decide the case as if they are seeing it for the first time, or so that it can send the case back to be looked at as if it is being viewed for the first time by the trial court.

Vague: Indefinite; not easy to understand; can be reasonably interpreted more than one way.

Verdict: At the end of a trial, a jury reaches a verdict (a decision) of not guilty or guilty based on the evidence presented at trial and in accordance with the legal questions presented to the jury by the court.

Verify: To confirm the authenticity of a legal paper by affidavit or oath.

Voir dire: Before selecting a jury for a trial, the court and attorneys for each side ask the jury questions to determine which people are suitable jurors in that case. This questioning of jurors is called voir dire.

Voluntary: An act that a person freely carries out and is not forced to do.

Waive (Waiver): To give up a certain right. For example, a waiver of the right to a jury trial or the right to be present at a hearing means to give up those rights.

Witness: A person a party in a legal proceeding calls upon to testify for or against a party. They can give factual evidence (like what they saw, felt, heard, etc.) or can be experts about the subject matter at issue.

Writ: An order written by a judge that requires a specific act to be performed, or gives someone the power to have the act performed. For example, when a court issues a writ of habeas corpus, it demands that the person who is detaining you release you.

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual

Appendix VI: Definitions of Latin Words Used in the JLM

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

APPENDIX VI

DEFINITIONS OF LATIN[1] WORDS USED IN THE JLM[*]

Actus reus: The wrongful act or omission that is the physical component of a crime. This is one of the necessary elements of a crime in criminal law. Actus reus is the direct action used to commit a crime (compared with mens rea, which relates to the mental state of the accused and his criminal intent).

Amicus curiae: Latin for "friend of the court," an amicus curiae is someone who is not a party to the litigation, but who believes that the court's decision may affect his interest, and may therefore volunteer to offer information to assist a court in deciding a matter before it. This information is often provided in a legal opinion in the form of a brief (known as an amicus brief). The court has the discretion to decide whether or not to admit this information.

Certiorari, Writ of (cert.): An order by an appellate (higher) court declaring that it will review the decision of a lower court on appeal. "Certiorari granted" means that the appellate court decided to approve a petition for certiorari and review the trial court's decision. "Certiorari denied" means that the appellate court decided not to approve a petition for certiorari and, thus, not to review the lower court's decision. Some courts, such as those in New York, simply call certiorari "leave to appeal."

Coram nobis (writ of coram nobis): An order for a court to review its own earlier decision because of possible errors that were not obvious when the decision was made. These writs are usually used when no other remedy, such as direct appeal or habeas corpus is available, for instance when a prisoner has already been convicted and completely served his prison sentence.

Coram non judice: A legal term that is used to indicate a legal proceeding held without a judge, with improper venue, or without jurisdiction (meaning "not in the presence of a judge").

Corpus delicti: The fact of a crime having been actually committed. Latin for the "body of evidence," corpus delicti refers to the principle that there must be proof that a crime has taken place before a person can be convicted of committing that crime. For example, in a murder case, this can refer to the actual body of the victim or circumstantial evidence that prove death beyond a reasonable doubt.

De facto: An action occurring in practice but which is not necessarily established by law. De facto is commonly used in contrast to de jure: When discussing a legal situation, de jure refers to what the law itself states, while de facto refers to what actually happens in practice.

De jure: An action or regulation that is formally established by law. It is commonly used in contrast to de facto: When discussing a legal situation, de jure refers to what the law says, while de facto refers to what actually happens in practice.

De minimis: De minimis is a Latin phrase describing things that are insignificant or small. If something is de minimis, it is ignored by the law and the courts for lack of importance. For example, a driver experiences a de minimis injury if his car is only slightly bumped by another car, and he will not be successful if he tries to sue the person who bumped him for assault.

---

[1] Latin phrases are italicized in legal writing. Therefore, if you submit any motions, briefs, complaints, etc. to the court, you should italicize any Latin phrases that you use.

[*] Words that are defined elsewhere in this Appendix are printed in italics.

De novo: A standard of review that a court uses for certain issues in a case on appeal. When a court reviews an issue with a de novo standard of review, it can decide the issue as though it was the court that heard the case for the first time. In other words, the appellate (higher) court does not give any deference to the way in which the trial (lower) court decided the issue.

Dictum (plural: Dicta): A statement in a judge's opinion, about a question of law suggested by the case, that is not critical to the case's holding. Dictum is not law and is not binding on later courts because it is not the legal basis for the judge's decision. In other words, later judges can choose to follow the legal analysis found in the dictum, but they do not have to. The plural form of the word dictum is dicta.

Ex post facto: A Latin phrase meaning "from a thing done afterward." Ex post facto describes the situation where a new law applies to acts committed in the past. The U.S. Constitution prohibits ex post facto criminal laws. This means that someone can only be punished under a law that was in effect at the time when he committed an offense, and his punishment cannot be increased if stricter laws are passed after he broke the law. While ex post facto, or retroactive, criminal law are not allowed, ex post facto civil laws are sometimes allowed.

Ex parte: A Latin phrase meaning "from (by or for) one party." An ex parte motion or petition is one brought by one person or party in the absence of, and without representation or notification of, other parties. An ex parte judicial proceeding is one where the opposing party has not received notice for the proceeding and is not present for the decision. The availability of ex parte orders is limited by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, which provide that a person shall not be deprived of his liberty or property without sufficient notice. Because of the absence of parties from ex parte proceedings, ex parte orders are usually temporary orders, such as restraining orders, and any person(s) affected by the order are given an opportunity to contest it before it is made into a permanent order.

Ex rel. (ex relatione): A Latin phrase meaning "by or on the relation of." A lawsuit ex rel. is brought by the government if a private party (someone not acting as a government official) who is interested in the matter asks the government to bring suit and the government agrees. For example, if Smith asks the government to bring a lawsuit against Jones, the case would be written as "State ex rel. Smith v. Jones."

Guardian ad litem: A guardian appointed by a court to assist a minor or other incapable defendant or plaintiff in a particular legal matter. The guardian ad litem directs litigation in the best interests of the person that they assist, often in juvenile or domestic relations matters.

Habeas corpus (writ of habeas corpus): A Latin term referring to the form of relief that a court may grant in order to release a prisoner from unlawful imprisonment. The prisoner must prove that he is being held in violation of his rights, for instance because his trial was unfair due to ineffective assistance of counsel. The habeas writ can be sought in both state and federal courts. For more information on habeas corpus, see Chapters 13 and 21 of the JLM.

In forma pauperis: A Latin term, meaning "like a poor person." A court will allow someone without money to proceed in forma pauperis and avoid paying all filing fees and other court costs. A criminal defendant who proceeds in forma pauperis will also usually have a defense lawyer appointed free of charge.

In absentia: Meaning "in the absence," this term usually pertains to a defendant's right to be present in court proceedings in a criminal trial. U.S. courts have held that the Constitution protects a criminal defendant's right to appear in person at their trial, as a matter of due process; however, there are certain exceptions to the rule, including the defendant's waiver of his right to be present by voluntarily leaving the trial after it has started.

Malum in se: An offense that is malum in se is one which is seen as wrong in and of itself, such as murder or theft. While there are laws against malum in se crimes, they are viewed as wrong because of their inherent evilness, not because of the laws prohibiting them. Malum in se offenses are distinguished from malum prohibitum crimes, which are wrong only because they are prohibited by law.

Malum prohibitum: Malum prohibitum crimes are crimes that are wrong because they have been prohibited by law. These crimes can therefore vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction depending on what the legislatures decide the law should be. An example of a malum prohibitum crime is speeding. Driving at 70 miles per hour is not a bad act by itself. It is only bad when the law has set a speed limit to be under 70 miles per hour, so that anyone exceeding the speed limit is breaking a law. As distinguished from malum in se crimes which are morally wrong, malum prohibitum crimes are not wrong on their own but are wrong because the law declares it to be wrong.

Modus operandi (M.O.): Meaning "method of operating," this term is used to describe someone's habits or manner of working and functioning. In a criminal context, modus operandi can be used to identify a culprit based on a characteristic pattern of methods of a repeated criminal act.

Mens rea: Latin for "guilty mind," mens rea is the mental state, or state of mind when a criminal act is committed. Mens rea is one of the necessary elements of a crime in criminal law. Mens rea relates to the mental state of the accused, as compared with actus reus relates to the direct physical action used to commit a crime.

Nolle prosequi: A declaration made before or during trial declaring that the case against a defendant is being dropped. This can be made in a criminal case by the prosecutor, or in a civil lawsuit by the plaintiff. A nolle prosequi declaration may be made for many reasons, including because the charges against the defendant cannot be proven, because the prosecutor no longer thinks that the accused defendant is guilty, and/or because the accused has died.

Nolo contendere: When a defendant pleads nolo contendere, he is stating "no contest," meaning that he does not deny responsibility for the charges; however, he is not explicitly admitting guilt either. A criminal defendant's nolo contendere plea differs from a guilty plea because it cannot be used against him in another cause of action. Because of this, some defendants plead nolo contendere to avoid civil suits that may arise from a criminal conviction.

Per curiam: A court decision made per curiam is one that refers to a decision handed down by the court as a whole acting collectively and anonymously, without identifying any individual judge as the author.

Per se: A Latin phrase meaning "by itself" or "in itself." For example, in considering a habeas petition, a court may consider that a violation was "per se prejudicial" and not require you to present further evidence to prove you were prejudiced (harmed) because the court has already assumed that you were prejudiced since the violation is considered to be "per se prejudicial."

Prima facie case: The facts sufficient to allow the judge or jury to find in a party's favor if everything he said were undisputed by the other side.

Pro se: A Latin phrase meaning "for oneself." Someone who appears in court pro se is representing himself without the services of a lawyer.

Res ipsa loquitur: A Latin phrase meaning "the thing speaks for itself." In tort claims of negligence, res ipsa loquitur describes certain situations where it can be assumed (without having to be proven) that an individual's injury was caused by the negligent action of another party because the accident was the sort that would not have occurred unless someone were negligent.

Res judicata: A legal concept that requires that, when issues have already been determined by a court, they are not allowed to be re-litigated, because the court's determination is final. This notion may also be called "collateral estoppel" and "issue preclusion."

Respondeat superior: Most commonly used in tort claims, respondeat superior is a legal doctrine which states that an employer or other 'principal' can be held to be legally responsible for the wrongful acts of his employee or agent, if such acts occur within the scope of the employment or agency. This vicarious liability rule may also be called the 'master-servant rule.'

Stare decisis: Latin for "to stand by things decided," stare decisis is the basic legal principle that a court should follow the rules, or 'precedent,' established by a court above it (a higher court) or by prior courts. This is so that judges and courts do not disturb settled matters and the law remains predictable and uniform in application. Courts cite to stare decisis when a particular issue has been previously brought to the court and a ruling already made on that issue. While courts will generally adhere to the previous ruling, this is not universally true.

Sua sponte: Meaning "of one's own will," this usually refers to a judge's order made without a request by any party to the case. Where grounds for dismissal exist, an action is subject to dismissal on a court's own motion. A trial court has the power to dismiss such an action sua sponte. An example of a situation where a trial court could dismiss an action sua sponte would be where there was a failure to comply with the rules of civil procedure or where the judge has determined that his court does not have jurisdiction over the case at issue.

Sub judice: Used to indicate that a particular case or matter is before the court and under judicial consideration.

Subpoena: A command that a person must appear before the court, subject to a penalty if they do not appear.

Subpoena duces tecum: Meaning "bring with you under penalty of punishment," a subpoena duces tecum is an order for the witness to appear before the court and to bring specified items.

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

IMMIGRATION AND CONSULAR ACCESS SUPPLEMENT

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface and Acknowledgments vi
Foreword by Justice Thurgood Marshall vii
Legal Disclaimer ix
Table of Contents xi

SECTION I: IMMIGRATION

Chapter I The Immigration Consequences of Criminal Activity

A. Introduction 1
B. Determining Your Immigration Status 2
C. How the Government Places You in Removal Proceedings 7
D. Two Grounds for Removal: Inadmissibility and Deportability 8
E. Removal Proceedings 16
F. Forms of Relief 20
G. Decision and Appeals 33
H. Detention 37
I. Failure to Depart from the U.S. and Returning to the U.S. After Deportation 40
J. Conclusion 41
Appendix A: Glossary 42
Appendix B: Forms 51
Appendix C: Immigration and Legal Resources 53
Appendix D: List of Legal Services Providers: New York 55

SECTION II: CONSULAR ACCESS

Chapter II The Right to Consular Access

A. Introduction 60
B. The Right to Consular Access 60
C. Why Contact the Consulate? 65
D. When and How to Contact Your Consulate 68
E. Conclusion 69
Appendix A: List of Consulates, Embassies, Missions, and Private Organizations. 70

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

IMMIGRATION AND CONSULAR ACCESS SUPPLEMENT

Chapter 1: The Immigration Consequences of Criminal Activity

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER I

THE IMMIGRATION CONSEQUENCES OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITY*

A. Introduction

Immigration law has changed significantly in recent years and continues to change all the time. Therefore, you should not assume that everything you read in this Chapter is up-to-date or accurate. Instead, you should always make sure the laws mentioned here are correct by referring to the sources listed in Appendices A–D at the end of the Chapter. Because each immigration court case is different, it is always best to consult with an attorney because an attorney might better understand your particular situation and possibilities for relief and can help you with your case. If you do not have access to an attorney, you should ask a family member or trusted friend to consult one of the agencies listed in Appendix D at the end of this Chapter to help you get in touch with an attorney or some other professional who might be able to assist you with your immigration case. Many of the agencies listed provide free or low-cost legal services. This Chapter and its contents are not meant to replace the advice of an attorney.

Some of you may be prisoners who are still serving prison sentences for criminal convictions, or you may be detained[1] by the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”).[2] If you are not a citizen of the United States (“non-CUS”) and you have not yet been approached by the United States (“U.S.”) government regarding your immigration status[3] despite the fact that you are currently serving a prison sentence, this does not mean that it will not happen at a later time. It is very likely that you will be approached by an immigration officer, and you should read this Chapter to prepare yourself for when that day comes.

There are many reasons why the government might place someone in immigration court proceedings. We mention some of these reasons in this Chapter, but the Chapter’s primary focus will be prisoners who are facing or will face removal proceedings[4] because of criminal convictions. It is important for you to realize that even if you are a legal permanent resident (“LPR”)[5] or have other legal status in the United States, you can still face removal proceedings and deportation. Even if you have a child who is a citizen of the United States (“CUS”), you have been in the U.S. for many years, and you have worked legally and paid federal income taxes, you can still face removal proceedings if you have one or more criminal convictions. The only people in the U.S. who cannot be deported are CUSs or nationals.[6]

---

* This Chapter was revised by James Concannon, based on a previous version by Cristina Quintero, with contribution from Kanika Chander and Laboni Rahman. Special thanks to Maria E. Navarro, Esq., The Legal Aid Society, Immigration Law Unit.

1. Immigration detention is not the same as imprisonment. Imprisonment is a criminal punishment, whereas immigration detention is not considered a criminal matter even though some immigration detainees are detained in prisons. Because immigration detention is a civil matter, immigration detainees do not have the same rights as criminal prisoners. See Part H of this Chapter, which describes detention in detail.

2. In March 2003, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Services (“INS”), which used to be part of the U.S. Department of Justice, was restructured. As a result, INS no longer exists. In 2003, the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) was created, as well as three new agencies within it. These agencies took over the functions of the former INS. The United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (“CIS”) is responsible for the administration of immigration services, including permanent residence, naturalization, asylum, and other duties. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) was created to serve the investigative and enforcement functions of the former INS (including investigations, deportation, and intelligence). The attorneys representing the government in immigration proceedings are part of ICE and are called assistant chief counsel. U.S. Customs investigators, the Federal Protective Service, and the Federal Air Marshal Service are all also part of ICE. The U.S. Customs and Border Protection (“CBP”) was created and took over the border functions of the INS, including border patrol and customs inspection.

3. Immigration status is whether you are legally or illegally in the U.S. Part B of this Chapter discusses how you can determine your immigration status.

4. This Chapter was written for people who have been or may be placed in removal proceedings. Removal proceedings were referred to as “exclusion” or “deportation” proceedings before April 1, 1997. Removal is the process by which the government forces a non-CUS to leave the U.S. For ease of reference, we will use the word “deportation” instead of “removal” throughout the text, but the legal proceedings are technically called “removal proceedings” and we will refer to them as such. So, keep in mind that if you face deportation, you will be placed in “removal proceedings.”

5. We will also refer to people who have LPR status as “LPRs.”

6. U.S. nationals are people born in American Samoa or Swains Islands.

For the purposes of this Chapter, "INA" refers to the Immigration and Nationality Act;[7] the corresponding "U.S.C." citations are also in the footnotes. U.S.C. citations refer to the United States Code, a collection of all United States federal laws. All cases are followed by their appropriate citation. This chapter is broken down into several Parts:

- Part B of this Chapter explains how to determine your immigration status in the U.S. and how this status may affect your ability to stay in the U.S.
- Part C describes how the government places non-CUSs in removal proceedings.
- Part D discusses the differences between inadmissibility and deportability and includes information about criminal convictions and their effect on your immigration status in the U.S.
- Part E details the process of removal proceedings from start to finish, including what you can expect during the proceedings and how the government initiates them.
- Part F outlines forms of relief from deportation (forms of relief are ways that you might be able to stay in the U.S.). Part F will explain the application for each form of relief, as well as what you must prove to the judge in order to be granted that form of relief and the types of evidence you should be ready to present.
- Part G explains how the immigration judge makes a final decision in your immigration case and what you can do to appeal or reopen your immigration case if you are dissatisfied with the result and meet the legal requirements to do so.
- Part H describes immigration detention, including information about non-CUSs who are subject to mandatory detention. Part H also illustrates the bond hearing process for those who are not subject to mandatory detention and are otherwise eligible for bond.
- Part I provides an outline for applying for reentry into the U.S. after your deportation has been ordered and describes the serious consequences that result from illegal reentry into the U.S.

Following Part I are four Appendices:

- Appendix A provides a glossary that defines many key terms found in this text. These terms appear in bold italics the first time they are used.
- Appendix B has a list of various immigration forms and applications that you may have to fill out at some point in this process.
- Appendix C contains a list of useful websites that will help you research your particular immigration case.
- Appendix D has a list of providers of legal services (some free and others not) in and around the New York area.[8]

B. Determining Your Immigration Status

The first step in your immigration court proceedings is determining your immigration status in the U.S. If you already know your immigration status, you can skip this Part and move on to Part C of this Chapter, which describes how the government places you in removal proceedings.

1. Types of Legal Immigration Status

This section discusses five types of statuses: United States citizenship ("derivative" and "acquired"), legal permanent residency status, asylee/refugee status, parolee status, and temporary protected status. This section also explains visas.

(a) United States Citizenship[9]

If any of the following applies to you or if you think you might be a CUS, you should tell your immigration judge during your immigration court proceedings that you think you might be a CUS. You should also consult with an attorney or someone who may be able to help you with your citizenship claim

---

7. Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA"), ch. 477, 66 Stat. 163 (1952) (codified as amended at 8 U.S.C. §§ 1101–1537 (2006)).

8. A list of free or low-cost legal service providers can also be found on the U.S. Department of Justice Executive Office for Immigration Review ("EOIR") website, available at http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/states.htm (last visited January 10, 2010).

9. The law regarding U.S. citizenship can be complicated. You should definitely consult an attorney if you believe you might be a CUS. If you were born in the U.S. (and are not the child of a foreign diplomat), you are most likely a CUS.

and work with you to obtain the evidence you will need to prove that you are a CUS.[10] This is very important for immigration court proceedings because CUSs cannot be deported by the U.S. government.[11] If none of the below applies to you, then you are probably not a CUS, and you should determine whether you are an LPR or have another kind of legal status in the U.S.[12]

There are several kinds of U.S. citizenship including citizenship by birth, citizenship by naturalization (meaning you applied for and were granted U.S. citizenship by the government after fulfilling certain requirements), derivative citizenship, and acquired citizenship.

The following questions may help you determine whether you are a CUS:[13]

(1) Were you born in the U.S. or one of its possessions?[14]
(2) Was either of your parents born in the U.S.?
(3) Were any of your grandparents born in the U.S.?
(4) Was either of your parents a CUS before you turned eighteen (18) years old?

(i) Derivative Citizenship

Derivative citizenship means that you "derive" citizenship through your parent(s), who have been naturalized. The laws regarding derivative citizenship are complex and may result in different outcomes when you were born and when your parent(s) became CUSs.

You can obtain derivative citizenship if all of the following occurred on or after February 27, 2001:[15] (1) you turned eighteen years old, (2) you entered the U.S. as an LPR, and (3) one of your parents[16] became a naturalized CUS.

(ii) Acquired Citizenship

If you were born outside of the U.S. and either of your parents was a CUS when you were born, then you may have acquired U.S. citizenship at the time of your birth.[17]

(b) Legal Permanent Residency or "LPR" Status

People with LPR status have the right to live and work in the U.S. indefinitely and can petition for certain family members (such as spouses and children) to live in the U.S.[18] LPRs can also travel to and from the U.S. without permission, but they must apply for a reentry permit for trips that last longer than one year.[19] An LPR is entitled to apply to become a CUS after five years.[20] You can prove that you are an LPR by showing any of the following documentation:

---

10. If you are not yet in removal proceedings, you should contact your deportation officer and tell him or her you think you might be a CUS.

11. Even if you make a claim that you are a CUS, you should still apply for other forms of relief. Just because you think you have a strong claim for citizenship, it does not mean that a judge will agree and decide in your favor. See Part F of this Chapter to determine the forms of relief for which you should apply.

12. According to the INA, everyone present in the U.S. is either a "national" as defined in INA § 101(a)(22); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(22) (2006), or an "alien" as defined in INA § 101(a)(3); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(3) (2006). Alien means "any person not a citizen or national of the U.S."

13. You are not necessarily a CUS even if you answer "yes" to any of these questions, but you should investigate each of the possibilities before making any assumptions about your immigration status.

14. You may also be a CUS if you were born on a ship or vessel while at a U.S. port, harbor, bay or sea, or if you were born within a certain number of miles from the U.S. in U.S. territorial waters or within U.S. airspace.

15. If you turned 18 years old before February 27, 2001, the new law does not apply to you. The law applies prospectively only. This means that the new law only applies in the future for people who turned 18 years old after the laws went into effect. Before February 27, 2001, the laws regarding derivative citizenship are much more complicated, and you may have to meet many more requirements. You should consult an attorney if you turned 18 years old before February 27, 2001, and believe you might be a CUS.

16. This parent must also live with and have legal custody of you.

17. This may still be true if neither of your parents was born in the U.S., but at least one of your grandparents was. This is a complicated area of immigration law. You should discuss the possibility that you have acquired citizenship with an immigration attorney if you suspect that any of this applies to you.

18. Note that under Title IV of the Adam Walsh Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 16901–16962 (2006), any U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident who has been convicted of a "specified offense against a minor" may not file a certain type of family-based immigration petition for any beneficiary, regardless of age. INA § 204(a)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1154(a)(1) (2006).

19. If you are an LPR and leave the U.S. for more than a year, you may be deemed to have abandoned your immigration status.

(1) green card/resident alien card,
(2) I-551 stamp in foreign passport, or
(3) Form I-94 Arrival/Departure Record with a photo and stamp of "Temporary Evidence of Permanent Resident Status, I-551."

If you possess a green card[21] or a resident alien card, then you most likely have LPR status.[22] If you did not enter the U.S. as an LPR but have, at some point during your time in the U.S., adjusted your status to LPR status, you are now considered an LPR, and this Part applies to you. Even if the green card expires, your LPR status does not, but you should apply to renew your green card.[23] In other words, if you are an LPR and never commit a crime, then you always have the right to live, work, and travel in and out of the U.S.

Your LPR status is not secure, however. Your LPR status can be taken away. If you are an LPR and commit (or have committed) certain types of crimes, you may face deportation and your LPR status may be taken away.[24] However, even if you do face deportation because of a criminal conviction, you may be eligible for a form of relief and, as a result, may be allowed to remain in the U.S.[25]

(c) Asylee/Refugee Status

(i) Asylee/Refugee Status Defined

Asylee or refugee status is a legal status given by the U.S. government to you if you apply for it and show likelihood that your life or freedom would be threatened in your home country "because of ... race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion."[26] This means that you must show that you are being persecuted[27] because of your membership or participation in one or more of these categories.

If you applied for admission before entering the U.S., were granted a visa, and then were admitted into the U.S., you are a refugee. An asylee, by contrast, first enters the U.S. either legally or illegally and is later granted asylum.[28] Both refugees and asylees can apply for adjustment of status to LPR status after they have lived in the U.S. for one year.[29]

---

20. If you obtained your LPR status through marriage to a CUS and were married for three years at the time your spouse petitioned for you, you may be eligible to apply for naturalization three years after obtaining your LPR status. Therefore, the waiting period may be shorter for LPRs who obtained their status through marriage.

21. Green cards are not actually green. They have been issued in many different colors in the past. It does not make a difference what color your green card is.

22. One exception applies to some non-CUSs who obtained their green card through marriage. If your marriage to a CUS occurred less than two years before you applied for your green card, you received a green card for conditional permanent residency, which was valid for only two years from the date it was issued. If you have one of these kinds of green cards and you never lifted the condition (if you did not apply for LPR status toward the end of the two year period), then you do not have LPR status and this section does not apply to you. However, if you are the immigrant spouse of a U.S. citizen and your spouse died during the conditional period, you may be eligible for LPR status. It used to be the case that if your spouse died before you were granted LPR status, you were no longer eligible for that status, but a new law has ended that practice.

23. In the past, green cards did not have expiration dates on them, but now they do. The expiration date is usually 10 years after the card is issued. Even after the card expires, your status as an LPR does not expire. If your green card has expired, you can file an application to renew it. However, if you have any criminal convictions, you should consult an attorney before you file the application to find out about any consequences you may face by filing the application. See Section C(3) of this Chapter, which explains the consequences of filling out immigration applications if you have criminal convictions.

24. Criminal convictions are not the only way to lose your LPR status. For example, extended periods of time outside of the U.S. may constitute abandonment of status. Assisting other immigrants to enter the U.S., using false documents or pretending to be a CUS are some of the other ways in which you can lose your LPR status.

25. See Part F of this Chapter for more information about applying for and obtaining relief from deportation.

26. INA § 241(b)(3)(A); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3)(A) (2006).

27. In immigration law, "'persecution" means punishment for political, religious, or other reasons that our country does not recognize as legitimate." Osaghae v. INS, 942 F.2d 1160, 1163 (7th Cir. 1991).

28. Asylum is granted under INA § 208; 8 U.S.C. § 1158 (2006).

29. INA § 209(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1159(a)(1) (2006). Adjustment of status will be discussed as a form of relief from deportation in Part F of this Chapter, but for the purposes of this Part it means that refugees and asylees can apply for permanent status in the U.S. after one year. If you were once considered a refugee or asylee but have already adjusted your status to LPR status, you are now considered an LPR and should read Part B(1)(b) of this Chapter about LPR

Also note that you may be eligible for asylum even if the harm or threats to your safety come from non-government actors.[30] However, you may find it difficult to be successful with this claim, because violent crime occurs in all countries, even those with stable governments.

(ii) Application for Asylee Status

A non-citizen applies for asylee status by filing Form I-589, Application for Asylum and for Withholding of Removal, at the appropriate Immigration Service Center within one year of arrival in the United States. You may apply for asylum regardless of your immigration status and regardless of whether you are in the United States legally or illegally.[31] If you miss the one-year deadline, you may still be eligible to apply for asylum if new circumstances arise that greatly affect your eligibility for asylum or extraordinary circumstances directly affected your failure to file within one year. These may include certain changes in your home country conditions, certain changes in your own circumstances, or other events.[32]

Keep in mind that the decision to grant asylum is a discretionary matter, meaning the judge has the power to decide whether or not to grant it. The applicant has the burden of proving a well-founded fear of persecution. The totality of circumstances and your actions will be considered.[33] The judge will also look to humanitarian concerns, such as your age or poor health.

(iii) Criminal Status and Eligibility

If you have been convicted of a crime, you may still be eligible to apply for asylum. However, depending on the crime, you may be barred from receiving asylum. You are barred from receiving asylee status if you have been convicted of an aggravated felony[34] in the United States.[35] You must disclose any criminal history on Form I-589, Application for Asylum and for Withholding of Removal, and at the asylum interview. Failure to disclose such information may result in your asylum claim being referred to the Immigration Court or in a fine.

(d) Parolee Status

Parolees are people the U.S. government has allowed to physically enter the country for different humanitarian reasons, including, but not limited to, illness or because of home country conditions. Sometimes the government sets a specific time for parolees to remain in the U.S. Other times, the government allows parolees to stay in the U.S. indefinitely. In that case, a parolee's status would not expire, much like LPR status. But parolee status can be taken away for a variety of reasons, including criminal convictions.[36] Some parolees can apply for adjustment of status after one year.[37] status.

---

30. See Navas v. I.N.S., 217 F.3d 646, 655-656 (9th Cir. 2000) ("In order to establish eligibility for asylum on the basis of past persecution, an applicant must show ... [persecution that] is committed by the government or forces the government is either "unable or unwilling" to control."); McMullen v. I.N.S., 658 F.2d 1312, 1315 n.2 (9th Cir. 1981) (finding that fear of persecution by the Irish Republican Army, a group which is not part of any official government, met the requirement since the government could not control the non-governmental group).

31. INA § 208(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a) (2006).

32. INA § 208(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2) (2006). See 8 C.F.R. § 208.4 (2008) (listing some examples of circumstances that may be considered changed or extraordinary).

33. See Kalubi v. Ashcroft, 364 F.3d 1134, 1141 (9th Cir. 2004) (explaining that the court must consider discretionary factors such as likelihood of future persecution, separation from spouse, and disability and then explain the weight given to each); In re Pula, 19 I & N Dec 467, 471–72 (BIA 1987) (describing factors to be taken into consideration such as whether the alien passed through any other countries or arrived in the United States directly from his country and whether orderly procedures were available to help him in any country he passed through or any attempts to seek asylum before coming to the U.S.), superseded by regulation in part, 8 C.F.R. § 208.15 (2008), as recognized in Andriasian v. INS, 180 F.3d 1033, 1043–44 (9th Cir. 1999) (recognizing that neither asylum officers nor judges have discretion to grant asylum where a third country in which the applicant had "firmly resettled" has offered to accept the applicant and the applicant would not face fear of persecution in that country).

34. See INA §101(a)(43); 8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(43) (2006) for the definition of aggravated felony. See Part D of this Chapter for a discussion of what kinds of crimes are considered aggravated felonies.

35. INA §§ 208(b)(2)(A)(ii), 241(b)(3)(B)(ii); 8 U.S.C. §§ 1158(b)(2)(A)(ii), 1231(b)(3)(B)(ii) (2006).

36. 8 C.F.R. 212.5(e)(2)(i) (2008); Ordaz-Machado v. Rivkind, 669 F.Supp. 1068, 1070 (S.D. Fla., 1987) (finding that parolee status could be revoked after parolee pled guilty to drug possession, even though parolee later challenged the legality of that guilty plea).

37. Adjustment of status will be discussed as a form of relief from deportation in Part F of this Chapter, but, for

(e) Temporary Protected Status ("TPS")[38]

TPS is a form of temporary lawful status granted by the President of the U.S. ("President") to people from certain countries[39] to which it would be dangerous to return. Examples of these dangerous situations are armed conflict, environmental disasters, or other extraordinary and temporary conditions. The President reviews the conditions for which TPS was granted on a yearly basis. If he determines that the basis for TPS no longer applies, the TPS of that country expires and people with TPS from that particular country may face deportation.

(f) Visas[40]

Visas are granted to non-CUSs by a U.S. consul, authorizing a person to come to a U.S. port or inspection point to apply to be admitted to the U.S.[41] Visas are given for a specific purpose and a specific period of time and grant a legal right to be in the U.S.[42] For example, non-CUSs who come into the U.S. with a non-immigrant visa may have a student or visitor visa for a specific period of time. Once either the purpose or time of your visa expires, you have overstayed your visa and no longer have legal status in the U.S.[43] For example, if you come to the U.S. with a student visa and you are no longer a student, then your status has expired and you are now illegally present in the U.S. You have no legal right to remain in the U.S., so the government can initiate removal proceedings against you. Therefore, if you are a visa overstay, it does not matter whether you have been convicted of any crimes—the government can still deport you.[44]

2. Types of Illegal Status

(a) Entry Without Inspection ("EWI")[45]

If you have not been legally admitted into the U.S., which this Chapter refers to as entry without inspection ("EWI"), you are in the U.S. illegally and may be detained at one of the U.S. borders or other inspection points at any time. Many people who face removal proceedings have entered the U.S. without inspection and are therefore removable on that fact alone. Some examples of EWI include crossing one of the U.S. borders without being detected or using someone else's passport or other documentation to enter the U.S. Like visa overstays, EWIs can be deported simply because they have no legal status in the U.S.[46]

At this point, you should know your immigration status in the U.S. Next, you should determine whether the government placed you in removal proceedings. Even if you have not yet been placed in removal proceedings, you should read Part C of this Chapter. If you are serving a criminal prison sentence and are a non-CUS, you will most likely face removal proceedings at some point in the near future.

---

the purposes of this Part, it means that a parolee can apply for permanent status in the U.S. after one year. If you were once considered a parolee but have already adjusted your status to LPR status, you are now considered an LPR and should read Part B(1)(b) about LPR status.

38. INA § 244; 8 U.S.C. § 1254a (2006).

39. Some countries that are currently designated for TPS as of 2010 include, but are not limited to, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Somalia, Sudan, and Liberia.

40. Immigrant visas are defined in INA § 101(a)(16); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(16) (2006).

41. INA § 221(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1201(a) (2006) (discussing the issuance of visas). Visas do not necessarily constitute permission to come into the U.S. Instead, they actually give a person permission to travel to the U.S. and apply for admission at the border. An immigration officer at the border who disagrees with the consular's determination that the visa-holder should be allowed into the U.S. can deny this person entrance into the U.S. This rarely happens but is nevertheless important to note.

42. INA § 221(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1201(c) (2006) (discussing the period of validity for visas).

43. Under INA § 222(g); 8 U.S.C. § 1202(g) (2006), a non-immigrant visa is void as soon as the non-immigrant alien "remain[s] in the United States beyond the period of stay authorized by the Attorney General." Aliens affected by this provision are precluded from seeking a new non-immigrant visa anywhere other than in their country of nationality, except under "extraordinary circumstances." This Chapter refers to these people as "visa overstays."

44. However, your criminal conviction or deportation can affect your ability to return to the U.S. in the future.

45. Note that EWI is not actually an official immigration status.

46. One difference between EWIs and visa overstays, however, is that EWIs were never legally admitted into the U.S., whereas visa overstays had legal status at some point.

C. How the Government Places You in Removal Proceedings

The government has the authority to place non-CUSs in removal proceedings because of criminal convictions, even if the non-CUS is in the U.S. legally, has worked, paid taxes, and has CUS family members (including children). You may wonder how the government finds out about the non-CUSs who have criminal convictions and places them in removal proceedings.

There are four main ways that people are placed in removal proceedings: (1) stopped at the airport after traveling abroad; (2) interviewed while in jail/prison; (3) immigration applications; and (4) prior deportation orders.

1. Stopped at the Airport After Traveling Abroad

If you are a non-CUS and you travel abroad, you must go through a customs inspection conducted by DHS and attempt to reenter the U.S. In the past, many non-CUSs traveled to their home countries and returned to the U.S. without facing any immigration problems. However, DHS is now enforcing the laws much more strictly. The government now regularly updates its computers at inspection points, especially airports. These computers have access to criminal records and prior deportation orders, among other things. Therefore, if a DHS officer at the airport or other inspection point finds that you have a criminal conviction or prior deportation order, you may be detained or given a deferred inspection appointment.[47] DHS will then likely start removal proceedings against you.[48]

Because there is no statute of limitations (time limit) under immigration laws, you may face serious immigration consequences for your criminal convictions or prior deportation orders, even if they occurred many years ago. If you are a non-CUS and have a criminal conviction, you should talk to an attorney before traveling abroad to make sure that you will be able to reenter the U.S. without facing any immigration consequences.

2. Interviewed While in Jail or Prison

There are DHS officers at most jails and state prisons. If you are a non-CUS serving a criminal sentence in a jail or state prison, you will likely be interviewed at some point during your imprisonment by a DHS officer who will ask you about your immigration status. You may not even realize that it is a DHS officer who is interviewing you. On the basis of this interview and other information they collect, the DHS officers may find a reason to initiate removal proceedings against you.

Once a DHS officer interviews you, he or she may place a "detainer" on you. Basically, a detainer is an order issued by a government agency saying that they will place you in their detention, although they cannot take possession of you at the moment. For example, if DHS cannot take possession of you immediately because you are in prison, they will use a detainer to make sure that they can detain you in a DHS facility in the near future. If a detainer has been placed on you, you will not be released once your bail is paid or your prison sentence is complete, as would be the case if you were a CUS. Instead, the government will detain you, sometimes beyond your sentence, for immigration purposes.[49] In other words, you will either (1) complete your criminal sentence in a jail or prison, then be moved to a DHS detention center (a jail or prison that DHS uses[50]) to face deportation or (2) you will have to defend yourself at removal proceedings

---

47. A deferred inspection appointment means that you will be allowed to enter the U.S. but are expected to appear at your immigration court date, which will be set at a later time. You will eventually receive your Notice to Appear ("NTA"). The NTA is discussed in greater detail in Section E(1) of this Chapter. If you do not receive the NTA, you should call 1-800-898-7180 and enter your Alien Registration Number (an eight- or nine-digit number preceded by an "A" found on your resident alien card or other documents related to immigration) to see if your court date has been set.

48. If you were in prison after October 1998 for your conviction, you may be subject to mandatory detention. This means you may be detained at the airport or point of inspection and be forced to defend your immigration case from inside the DHS detention center or a prison or jail that DHS uses. See Part H of this Chapter, which discusses detention in greater detail.

49. State and local law enforcement authorities may only hold persons on immigration detainers for 48 hours after the completion of their jail time. 8 C.F.R. § 287.7(d). This means that once you have completed your criminal sentence, DHS must take you into custody for immigration purposes within two days. DHS frequently violates this provision. Therefore, if DHS does not take you into custody within 48 hours after the completion of your prison sentence, you should contact your criminal defense attorney and ask him or her to file a writ of habeas corpus with the state court demanding your release from immigration detention.

50. At this point, you are no longer considered a prisoner. You are an immigration detainee. Although some while you are completing your criminal sentence in a jail or prison. If you win your immigration case, you will then be released at the end of your criminal prison sentence. But if you lose your immigration case, DHS will detain you and then deport you to your home country. You should be aware that recently concern has arisen over the movement of detainees to remote out-of-state facilities without providing notice to the detainees, their families, or their lawyers.[51]

3. Immigration Applications

Most, if not all, applications[52] to the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services ("CIS") now require security clearances and/or fingerprints as part of the application process. Once CIS has received your immigration application, it determines whether you have any criminal convictions that occurred anywhere in the U.S., even if they occurred a long time ago. In other words, when you submit an application and your fingerprints to CIS, it is able to obtain a list of all your criminal convictions, regardless of when or where they occurred. If you have a criminal conviction that makes you deportable or inadmissible,[53] your application will likely be denied and you may be placed in removal proceedings.

4. Prior Orders of Deportation

DHS also apprehends people who live in the U.S. and have prior deportation orders. Even if you do not know that the government has ordered you deported in the past or your deportation order was entered many years ago, it is still a problem for you. If you were ever in immigration court proceedings and you did not appear for your scheduled court date, you may have been ordered deported in your absence.[54] Persons with prior deportation orders have been entered onto a national absconder list. Local law enforcement officers (such as police) help immigration officers catch the people on this list. This can happen anywhere, even if you are stopped for a traffic violation.

Now that you have determined your immigration status and how you were placed in removal proceedings, you should find out whether you are removable under inadmissibility or deportability grounds, discussed in the next part, Part D of this Chapter.

D. Two Grounds for Removal: Inadmissibility and Deportability

Depending on the facts of your case, you may face removal proceedings under inadmissibility grounds or deportability grounds.[55] This means that if you are found either inadmissible or deportable, you will be deported. You may still be deportable even if you are lawfully present in the U.S. at the time DHS initiates removal proceedings against you. If this is because of a criminal conviction (see below for more information on what counts as a criminal conviction), you may be deported. You may be inadmissible if you are found to be unlawfully present in the U.S., if you have entered without inspection, or if you are stopped while attempting to enter the U.S. (at a border, port, or inspection point).

People without any legal status (EWIs) are considered inadmissible. Although LPRs have legal status, they too can be considered inadmissible if they are stopped while attempting to reenter the U.S. after a trip abroad.[56] If you have been given a deferred inspection appointment[57] or are in a DHS detention center after detainees are held in regular prisons, immigration detainees have fewer rights than prisoners.

---

51. U.S.: Remote Detainee Lockups Hinder Justice, Human Rights Watch, Dec. 2, 2009 available at http://www.hrw.org/en/news/2009/11/30/us-remote-detainee-lockups-hinder-justice (last visited Jan. 10, 2010).

52. These include, but are not limited to, applications for U.S. citizenship, renewal of green cards, employment authorizations and petitions for family members.

53. Grounds for deportability and inadmissibility will be discussed in greater detail in Part D of this Chapter.

54. Part E of this Chapter describes the consequences of not appearing for your scheduled immigration court hearings. Part G of this Chapter explains how you may be able to file a motion to reopen your immigration case due to failure to appear.

55. The difference between deportability and inadmissibility may seem trivial, but the category you fall into will determine which forms of relief are available to you.

56. This may seem confusing, but every time you travel abroad and attempt to reenter the U.S., you are essentially asking the government for permission to be readmitted into the U.S.

57. A deferred inspection appointment is an appointment at your local DHS office in which DHS will continue the interview it began at the airport or inspection point. DHS usually takes your green card and passport from you in anticipation of your removal proceedings. At the deferred inspection appointment, DHS will generally give you the Notice to Appear ("NTA") that will begin the removal proceedings against you. See Section E(1) of this Chapter, which discusses the NTA in greater detail.

attempting to enter the U.S. illegally (or reenter the U.S. if you are an LPR), you may be inadmissible. Because most of the readers of this Chapter are prisoners, however, you are probably deportable because you were legally present in the U.S at the time DHS began removal proceedings against you.

Before we move on to discuss deportability and inadmissibility, you should understand how a conviction is defined for immigration purposes. The definition of conviction for immigration purposes is different from the definition in criminal law. In fact, the immigration definition is much broader and many more criminal acts may be considered convictions under immigration law even though they are not considered convictions in criminal law. Read the following section to find out what is considered a conviction for immigration purposes.

1. Criminal Convictions

(a) What Is a Criminal Conviction?

For the purposes of removal proceedings, the term conviction means that a court has entered a formal judgment of guilt in your case. If a formal judgment has not yet been entered, you may still be "convicted" if

(1) A judge or a jury has found you guilty, you have entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere,[58] or you have admitted sufficient facts to warrant a finding of guilt, and
(2) The judge has ordered some form of punishment, penalty, fine, community service, or restraint on your liberty to be imposed.[59]

In other words, if you were found guilty or you admitted sufficient facts of your guilt and you somehow have been punished for your actions, you probably have a conviction for the purposes of your immigration court proceedings.

Since the definition of conviction changed in 1996, the courts have been determining which criminal convictions are considered convictions for immigration purposes. Some convictions are no longer considered convictions in criminal court but are still considered convictions for the purposes of removal proceedings. For example, the following are considered convictions for immigration purposes:

(1) "Deferred adjudications" are convictions that are given in "specialized courts" (such as drug courts and domestic violence courts) whereby a judge accepts the defendant's plea and orders treatment. Upon completion of this treatment, the judge vacates or reduces the defendant's original plea. Therefore, the conviction is vacated or reduced for criminal purposes. However, the initial plea combined with the judge's order to attend a program is still considered a conviction for immigration purposes.[60]
(2) The Second Circuit has held that an expungement of a non-drug offense may be a conviction for immigration purposes.[61]
(3) Convictions that are vacated for reasons solely related to rehabilitation or immigration hardships, rather than because of procedural or substantive defects in the underlying criminal proceedings, may still be considered convictions for immigration purposes.[62]

---

58. Nolo contendere literally means "no contest." Black's Law Dictionary 1074 (8th ed. 2005). This plea is technically not an admission of guilt, but it is enough of an admission to subject the defendant to criminal punishment and to warrant immigration consequences.

59. INA § 101(a)(48); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(48) (2006).

60. See In re Salazar-Regino, 23 I. & N. Dec. 223, 227–34 (BIA 2002) (deciding that state rehabilitative expungements shall be considered convictions for immigration purposes). Some state specialized courts have gotten around this harsh interpretation of "conviction" by developing "pre-plea diversion programs" that require the usual completion of treatment, but instead of vacating the original plea upon completion of treatment, the court does not require you to initially plead guilty, so the court's judgment is not enough to count as a "conviction" for immigration purposes. States with pre-plea diversion programs include Connecticut, New Jersey, and Vermont. Many cities and counties—such as Cook County, Illinois and Seattle, Washington—have their own pre-plea diversion programs.

61. Mugalli v. Ashcroft, 258 F.3d 52, 62 (2d Cir. 2001) (examining the effect of the New York State Certificate of Relief from Disabilities provision on the immigration consequences of a criminal conviction).

62. In re Christopher Pickering, 23 I. & N. Dec. 621, 624 (BIA 2003) (declaring that a Canadian court's order quashing a conviction still counts as a conviction for immigration purposes and distinguishing between convictions that are vacated for rehabilitative or immigration reasons and those that are vacated for procedural or substantive reasons; a conviction that was vacated for rehabilitative or immigration reasons remains a conviction for immigration purposes), rev'd on other grounds, 465 F.3d 263 (6th Cir. 2006); Sansui v. Gonzales, 474 F.3d 341, 347 (6th Cir. 2007) (holding that petitioner who committed property theft and then paid a fine in lieu of a court appearance could be removed as an alien

The following are not considered convictions for the purposes of removal proceedings:

(1) Youthful offender adjudications (as defined by Federal law).[63]
(2) A conviction that a trial or appeals court vacates because it was legally defective,[64] and
(3) A disorderly conduct violation.

(b) How Do I Know if I Have Any Criminal Convictions?

It is important that you know when and how many times you have been arrested because any arrest in your record needs to be analyzed to determine if it is a conviction according to the immigration definition of conviction set forth above. You, your attorney, or a trusted friend should obtain certificates of disposition[65] or a comprehensive rap sheet.[66] You can obtain certificates of disposition from the criminal courts in which you were convicted. These documents will give you information about what happened in your criminal court proceedings and will indicate what your convictions and punishments were. Once you know and understand this information, you can determine what immigration consequences you might face.

Your rap sheet and certificates of disposition will not only help you determine what immigration consequences you may face but also what forms of relief may be available to you, since some criminal convictions bar (or stop) you from getting certain forms of relief. The following may also play a role in determining the forms of relief available to you: (1) your particular criminal sentence or punishment (how much jail time the judge ordered you to serve, even if it was suspended); (2) the maximum penalty possible for your conviction (how much jail time the judge could have ordered you to serve, even if you received less); (3) and whether you were given a suspended sentence or parole.

If your criminal case is still pending, you should discuss the immigration consequences that may result from it with your criminal defense attorney. Make sure that he or she understands how the result of your criminal court case may affect your ability to remain in the U.S. Because criminal law is different from immigration law, some criminal defense attorneys are unaware of the severe consequences of criminal convictions on immigration court hearings.[67] convicted of a crime of moral turpitude within five years of his admission and could not have his theft conviction vacated through a writ of coram nobis without a "colorable legal basis"); Saleh v. Gonzales, 495 F.3d 17, 21 (2d. Cir. 2007) (holding that an alien remains convicted of a removable offense for federal immigration purposes when the conviction is vacated simply to aid the alien in avoiding negative immigration consequences).

---

63. In re Devison-Charles, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1362, 1368–73 (BIA 2000) (finding that declaration of juvenile delinquency does not count as a conviction for immigration purposes); In re Ramirez-Rivero, 18 I. & N. Dec. 135, 137 (BIA 1981) (holding that juvenile adjudications do not count as convictions for immigration purposes). But see Wallace v. Gonzales, 463 F.3d 135, 139 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that a youth's propensity to violate the law, demonstrated by multiple convictions, can be considered for immigration purposes when determining whether an alien merits discretionary relief in applying for a change of status); Garcia v. INS, 239 F.3d 409, 412–13 (1st Cir. 2001) (considering a theft offense four days before petitioner's 18th birthday as a conviction for immigration purposes).

64. In re Rodriguez-Ruiz, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1378, 1380 (BIA 2000) (holding that a conviction vacated under Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law, which was not a state rehabilitative statute, was no longer a conviction for immigration removal purposes); In re Sirhan, 13 I. & N. Dec. 592, 599 (BIA 1970) (discussing the validity of the California Superior Court's vacating of narcotics convictions through a writ of coram nobis, thus terminating deportation proceedings because the underlying conviction no longer existed).

65. In New York, a certificate of disposition is an official court document that contains the Court Seal and indicates the disposition (or what determination the judge made) of a criminal case. This document may have a different name in other states. If your criminal court case occurred in a state outside of New York, you should obtain the equivalent court document that indicates the result of your case.

66. The Legal Action Center, available at http://www.lac.org/ (last visited January 10, 2010), can help you obtain your rap sheet if you are unable to do so on your own. The following website describes the process of obtaining and cleaning up a rap sheet in New York State: Legal Action Center, How to Get and Clean Up Your New York State Rap Sheet (7th ed. 2007), available at http://www.hirenetwork.org/pdfs/NYS_Rap_Sheet_Final.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010). Also, this website describes the process of obtaining all kinds of documentation, such as marriage certificates, social security cards, etc. that might be helpful in immigration proceedings: Legal Action Center, How to Obtain Important Documents (2003), available at http://www.hirenetwork.org/pdfs/ (last visited January 23, 2011) (follow link for "How to Obtain Important doc"). Appendix D at the end of this Chapter includes more resources and websites, most of which will be helpful nationwide.

67. It is also important for you to realize that anything you say during your immigration court proceedings can be used against you in your pending criminal case. Therefore, if you are in immigration court and your criminal court proceedings are not complete, you should discuss your case with your criminal defense attorney before making any admissions of guilt. If, however, you have already been convicted of a crime, you should not deny your guilt during your

2. Deportability[68]

A conviction in one of the following categories of crimes make you deportable, although you may avoid deportation if you qualify for one of the forms of relief described in Part F of this Chapter.

(a) Aggravated Felony

This is the worst category of crimes for immigration purposes because being convicted of an aggravated felony (1) makes you ineligible for most forms of relief and (2) subjects you to mandatory detention.[69] The term "aggravated felony" is a term created for the purposes of immigration law and has no connection to the definition of "felony" in state or federal criminal law. So, even if your criminal conviction was not called a "felony" under state law, it may still be considered an aggravated felony for purposes of your immigration proceedings. For example, some state misdemeanor convictions are considered aggravated felonies.[70] However, sometimes a state felony conviction is not considered an aggravated felony. Furthermore, many crimes become aggravated felonies if the sentence imposed is for one year or more, even if it is a suspended sentence. This is why it is important to know not only what your convictions are for and how long your sentence was.[71] Other crimes may be aggravated felonies regardless of what the sentence was.

(i) What is an aggravated felony?

An aggravated felony is defined in the INA.[72] Examples of aggravated felonies are

(1) Crimes of violence for which the penalty was at least one year;[73]
   (a) If physical force was used or most likely could have been used in committing the crime, the crime may be considered a crime of violence and, therefore, an aggravated felony.[74]

---

immigration court proceedings. Judges are more likely to grant relief to people who admit that they have done wrong in the past but have improved their lives or have been rehabilitated. Part F of this Chapter discusses the importance of rehabilitation for obtaining certain forms of relief.

68. The burden is on the government to prove deportability. If you are facing removal as a lawful resident who has been admitted into the U.S., the burden is on the government to prove "by clear and convincing evidence" (meaning enough evidence to show that the thing is substantially more likely than not) that you are deportable. This is not a very difficult burden for the government to overcome, however. To establish deportability, the government can use any official criminal court records to prove that you have been convicted of criminal violations. See Santapaola v. Ashcroft, 249 F. Supp. 2d 181, 189–90 (D. Conn. 2003) for a list of documents that can be used as a record of conviction. If your crimes fall in the group of deportable crimes, the government will begin removal proceedings. For more information about the procedural steps of immigration court proceedings (especially removal proceedings), see Part E of this Chapter, which goes through the process from beginning to end.

69. Mandatory detention will be discussed in greater detail in Part H of this Chapter.

70. An example is United States v. Graham, 169 F.3d 787, 793 (3d Cir. 1999), which held that a state misdemeanor conviction for petit larceny, carrying a maximum sentence of one year, constituted an aggravated felony under INA § 101(a)(43)(G); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(G) (2006). Since the decision in Graham, other Circuit courts have come to similar conclusions. See United States v. Cordoza-Estrada, 385 F.3d 56, 58–59 (1st Cir. 2004) (holding that a misdemeanor assault conviction constituted an aggravated felony); Guerrero-Perez v. INS, 242 F.3d 727, 737 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that a misdemeanor sexual abuse conviction constituted an aggravated felony); United States v. Saenz-Mendoza, 287 F.3d 1011, 1014 (10th Cir. 2002) (holding that a misdemeanor child abuse conviction constituted an aggravated felony).

71. It is important to note that the relevant sentence is not what could possibly have been imposed by the statute under which you were convicted, but instead the actual sentence you were given. See Ahmed v. Att'y Gen. of the United States, 212 Fed. Appx. 133, 135 (3d Cir. 2007) (instructing courts to look to the sentence imposed). However, in a case where you are originally sentenced to probation and then resentenced after a probation violation, the court will treat the modified sentence as the sentence originally imposed for immigration purposes.

72. INA § 101 (a)(43); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (2006).

73. Crimes of violence are offenses that have as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against another person or property of another. Vargas-Sarmiento v. United States Dep't of Justice, 448 F.3d 159, 165 (2d Cir. 2006). A crime of violence can also be any other offense that is a felony and by its nature involves a risk that physical force may be used against the person or property of another in the process of committing the offense.

74. A few recent decisions have offered additional indications of what is included in the definition of crimes of violence. See United States v. Franco-Fernandez, 511 F.3d 768, 770–771 (7th Cir. 2008) (holding that the abduction of a child by a parent did not qualify as a "crime of violence" under Illinois law because the abduction of a child by a parent does not generally involve restraint against the child's will or involve violence or threat of violence); Estrada-Rodriguez v. Mukasey, 512 F.3d 517, 520–521 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that resisting arrest under Arizona law was an "aggravated felony" because the elements for conviction included a component of physical violence or the threat of physical violence).

(2) Murder;
(3) Rape;
(4) Sexual abuse of a minor;[75]
(5) Drug trafficking;
  (a) The law on what counts as drug trafficking is still changing. A felony drug sale or a felony drug possession with intent to sell are both considered aggravated felonies. The Supreme Court recently held that a first-time state felony drug possession—without intent to sell—is not an aggravated felony.[76] A first-time misdemeanor possession is also not an aggravated felony.[77] The law is not clear yet on whether two or more misdemeanor possessions, or whether misdemeanor sales, can be considered aggravated felonies.[78]
(6) Firearms trafficking;[79]
(7) Theft or burglary for which the penalty imposed is imprisonment for at least one year;[80]
(8) Child pornography;
(9) Prostitution business;[81]

---

75. Sexual abuse of a minor can be a felony or class A misdemeanor under criminal law but either one could be defined as an aggravated felony for immigration purposes. The Second, Third, Fifth, Seventh, and Eleventh Circuits have used the definition of "sexual abuse" found at 18 U.S.C. § 3509(a)(8) (2006), under which misdemeanors could be defined as aggravated felonies. The Ninth Circuit has rejected this approach, using the definition of "sexual abuse of a minor" found at 18 U.S.C. § 2243 (2006), which excludes indecent exposure offenses, includes a four-year age-span gap, and criminalizes only sexual contact with children sixteen years or younger. Estrada-Esponoza v. Mukasey, 546 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 2008) (finding that "it is more plausible that Congress intended the 'aggravated felony' of 'sexual abuse of a minor' to incorporate the definition of 'sexual abuse of a minor' in 18 U.S.C. § 2243 … rather than the definition of 'sexual abuse' found in 18 U.S.C. § 3509"). For example, under the Ninth Circuit approach, the fact that a 19 year old had sex with a 16 year old would not be enough, in and of itself, to be an aggravated felony for immigration purposes. Depending on the state statute, state sex offenses involving a minor may not be considered "sexual abuse of a minor." See, e.g., Rebilas v. Keisler, 506 F.3d 1161, 1164–65 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that the Arizona state offense of attempted public sexual indecency to a minor did not qualify as an "aggravated felony" because the defendant could be arrested and convicted for behavior the minor was unaware of and finding the Arizona definition overly broad compared to the federal definition of sexual abuse of a minor).

76. Lopez v. Gonzales, 127 S. Ct 625, 633, 166 L. Ed. 2d 462, 474 (2006) (holding that where the drug possession offense is a felony under state law but only a misdemeanor under the Federal Controlled Substances Act, the possession is not an aggravated felony). But see Storeby v. Unites States, No. 8:02-cr-65-T-24TBM, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39494, at *5 (M.D. Fla. May 31, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that Lopez does not apply retroactively to cases on collateral review).

77. See Lopez v. Gonzales, 127 S. Ct 625, 633, 166 L. Ed. 2d 462, 474 (2006); see also Gonzales-Gomez v. Achim, 441 F.3d 532, 535 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding that states may not reclassify misdemeanors as aggravated felonies in order to banish immigrants); Arce-Vences v. Mukasey, 512 F.3d 167, 170 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that a single charge of possession of marijuana is not an aggravated felony).

78. One District Court found that multiple misdemeanor possessions qualified as an aggravated felony for the purposes of sentencing. Though the question was not reached, the interpretation of an aggravated felony will most likely be the same in the removal context. United States v. Castro-Coell, 474 F. Supp. 2d 853, 864 (S.D. Tex. 2007) (holding that two state misdemeanor drug offenses could qualify as an aggravated felony). See also United States v. Lopez-Molina, 494 F.Supp.2d 517, 520 (W.D. Tex. 2007) (finding that under the Court's decision in Lopez v. Gonzales, 127 S. Ct. 625, 166 L. Ed. 2d 462 (2006), the crime at issue in this case, repeated drug possession, can be treated as drug trafficking for the purposes of immigration proceedings). But see In re Carachuri-Rosendo, 24 I. & N. Dec. 382, 393-394 (BIA 2007) ("[A]bsent controlling authority regarding the 'recidivist possession' issue, an alien's State conviction for simple possession of a controlled substance will not be considered an aggravated felony conviction on the basis of recidivism unless the alien's status as a recidivist drug offender was either admitted by the alien or determined by a judge or jury in connection with a prosecution for that simple possession offense.") For more information or practical advice on how to defend yourself in removal proceedings involving this area of law, visit the New York State Defenders Association (NYSDA) website, which contains a variety of practice advisories. NYSDA Immigrant Defense Project, available at http://www.nysda.org/idp/webPages/LvGPressroom.htm (last visited January 10, 2010), or call the Immigrant Defense Project at 212-725-6422.

79. Both the sale and distribution of firearms are considered aggravated felonies.

80. Regardless of whether the conviction was a misdemeanor or a felony, both types of theft or burglary are considered aggravated felonies as long as the penalty imposed was at least one year of prison time. Additionally, the 9th Circuit has held that a theft offense, for the purposes of finding an "aggravated felony," does not require the intent to permanently deprive someone of property; the deprivation of property can be temporary or incomplete and still qualify as a theft offense. Arteaga v. Mukasey, 511 F.3d 940, 947 (9th Cir. 2007).

81. Prostitution business constitutes any crime related to owning, controlling, managing, or supervising a prostitution business. INA § 101(a)(43)(K)(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(K)(i) (2006).

(10) Crime of fraud or deceit[82] or tax evasion if the loss to the victim[83] exceeds $10,000;[84]
(11) Some types of money laundering in excess of $10,000;
(12) Failure to appear for service of sentence;[85]
(13) Crime related to commercial bribery;[86]
(14) Crime relating to obstruction of justice, perjury or subornation (encouragement) of perjury, or bribery of a witness, where the penalty imposed is one year or more in prison (felony or misdemeanor);
(15) Smuggling aliens;[87]
(16) Conviction related to failure to appear before a court on a felony charge that could result in a sentence of two or more years; or
(17) An attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the above.

(b) Other Offenses That Could Make You Deportable

The following are other crimes that could make you deportable, although they are not aggravated felonies.[88]

(i) Controlled Substance Offenses

If you have been convicted of a controlled substance offense, other than a single offense involving possession of thirty grams or less of marijuana for your own use,[89] you may be deportable.[90] Conviction for a conspiracy or an attempt to possess, distribute, or manufacture a controlled substance is also a deportable offense.[91]

(ii) Crime Involving Moral Turpitude[92]

A crime involving moral turpitude ("CIMT") is a crime that is "inherently base, vile, or depraved, and contrary to the accepted rules of morality and the duties owed between persons or to society in general."[93] CIMTs are not defined by statute but have been defined by case law (i.e., by the courts). Courts struggle to apply this definition, and identifying what is and what is not a CIMT is difficult. Therefore, you should do as much research as possible if you think you might have committed a CIMT.

There are various categories of CIMTs, which include, but are not limited to:

(1) Crimes in which an intent to steal or defraud is an element;
(2) Crimes in which bodily harm is caused or threatened by an intentional or willful act;
(3) Crimes in which serious bodily harm is caused or threatened by a reckless act; and
(4) Sex offenses.

---

82. An offense may not be fraud or deceit unless fraud or deceit is a necessary or proven element of the crime.

83. For the purposes of tax evasion, the "victim" is the government.

84. However, a recent court decision held that a loss of over $10,000 is not required for the fraud or deceit to be an aggravated felony as long as the defendant intended to cause a loss of that size or greater. Eke v. Mukasey, 512 F.3d 372, 380–81 (7th Cir. 2008).

85. This is an aggravated felony if the underlying offense is punishable by a term of five years or more. INA § 101(a)(43)(Q); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43)(Q) (2006).

86. Some examples of this include counterfeiting, forgery, and trafficking in cars with altered vehicle identification numbers, where the penalty imposed is imprisonment for one year or more (felony or misdemeanor).

87. If you have not been criminally convicted of smuggling, you might be eligible for a waiver if it is your first offense and you assisted your spouse, child, or parent.

88. Other crimes besides the ones listed can make you deportable, such as failure to register and falsification of documents, INA § 237 (a)(3)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(3)(B) (2006), security and related grounds, INA § 237(a)(4); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(4) (2006), and being a public charge or an unlawful voter. INA § 237(a)(5), (6); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(5)–(6) (2006).

89. If you are currently in criminal proceedings and are able to prove that you possessed 30 grams or less of marijuana for your own use and this is your only crime, you should tell your criminal defense attorney that this should be reflected in the criminal court record. Otherwise, even if you prove in your criminal proceedings that you possessed 30 grams or less for your personal use, it will not automatically be reflected in the record and you may still face immigration consequences for the conviction.

90. INA § 237(a)(2)(B)(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(B)(i) (2006).

91. INA § 237(a)(2)(B)(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(B)(i) (2006).

92. INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(i) (2006).

93. Rodriguez v. Gonzales, 451 F.3d 60, 63 (2d Cir. 2006).

To determine whether you have been convicted of a CIMT, the judge will look at the elements of the crime of which you have been convicted. These elements are found in the statute that defines the crime. If certain elements (such as the intent to steal or defraud mentioned above) are included in the definition of your crime, the judge will consider your crime a CIMT. Therefore, courts will not generally look to the particular facts of your case to determine whether you have been convicted of a CIMT, but instead to the criminal statute defining the crime and its elements.[94]

Some examples of CIMTs are voluntary manslaughter,[95] involuntary manslaughter,[96] tax evasion, aggravated assault,[97] sexual abuse, spousal abuse, breaking and entering, kidnapping, arson, and theft or fraud (including welfare fraud and student loan fraud). While drunk driving is not considered a crime involving moral turpitude, drunk driving without a license may be.[98] Because CIMTs have been defined by case law, it is important to get advice from your criminal defense attorney before taking a plea bargain. Remember that if you take a plea and confess to committing a crime that can be defined as a CIMT, you may face serious immigration consequences. By speaking to your attorney, you may be able to change your plea and avoid deportation in the future.

If you have been convicted of one CIMT within five years of the date of your admission to the U.S. and the judge could have sentenced you based on your crime to a prison term of one year or more, you may be deportable.[99] It does not matter what your actual sentence was, as long as the judge could have sentenced you to one year or more. If you are convicted of only one CIMT, but more than five years (ten if you are an LPR) have passed since you were admitted to the U.S., you cannot be deported. If, however, you have been convicted of two CIMTs that do not arise out of a single scheme any time after you were admitted into the U.S., you may also be deportable.[100]

(iii) Certain Firearms Offenses

If you have been convicted of certain firearms offenses, you may be deportable.[101]

---

94. Immigration judges were generally considered to be prohibited from looking at the particular facts of your conviction, and could only look at the elements of the crime for which you are convicted to determine whether the crime qualified as a CIMT. See United States ex rel. Mylius v. Uhl, 210 F. 860, 863 (2d Cir. 1914) (finding that if a person can be convicted of a crime without having the level of depravity necessary to make the crime a CIMT, then anyone convicted of committing the crime cannot be said to have committed a CIMT, regardless of the facts of the particular case). See also Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 599-603, 110 S. Ct. 2143, 2158-2161, 109 L. Ed. 2d 607 (1990) (finding that the "categorical approach" like that laid out in Uhl is a workable and appropriate approach, but also holding that immigration judges are allowed to inquire into the record when faced with "divisible statutes" like burglary statutes in which one "branch" of the statute might include elements that would lead to a crime being classified as one involving moral turpitude, and another branch would not). In 2008, the Attorney General issued a decision that greatly expands the immigration judge's ability to investigate the particular facts of a conviction. In re Silva-Trevino, 24 I. & N. Dec. 687, 704 (A.G. 2008) ("[I]f the record of conviction does not resolve the inquiry, [a judge should] consider any additional evidence the adjudicator determines is necessary or appropriate to resolve accurately the moral turpitude question."). The impact of this case is not clear at the time of this writing, and it is the subject of much debate. The new Attorney General may withdraw the opinion. If you have been convicted of a crime that you think might involve moral turpitude, you should discuss the issue with your attorney.

95. See In re Wojtkow, 18 I. & N. Dec. 111, 112 (BIA 1981) (holding that voluntary manslaughter can involve moral turpitude because "moral turpitude can lie in criminally reckless conduct").

96. See In re Franklin, 20 I. & N. Dec. 867, 870 (BIA 1994) ("[B]ecause the statute under which the respondent was convicted requires that she acted with a 'conscious disregard of a substantial and unjustifiable risk,' the conclusion necessary follows that she has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude.").

97. See In re Medina, 15 I. & N. Dec. 611, 612-614 (BIA 1976) (holding that a conviction for aggravated assault inherently involves moral turpitude where a statute requires either intent, knowledge, or recklessness).

98. See Marmolejo-Campos v. Gonzales, 503 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that while drunk driving is not moral turpitude, drunk driving without a license is because "[d]riving while intoxicated is despicable, and when coupled with the knowledge that one has been specifically forbidden to drive, it becomes an act of baseness, violence or depravity in the private and social duties which a person shows to a fellowman or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty."), aff'd, 588 F.3d 903, 914-917 (9th Cir. 2009) (en banc).

99. INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(i)(I)–(II); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(i)(I)–(II) (2006).

100. INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(ii); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(ii) (2006).

101. INA § 237(a)(2)(C); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(C) (2006). These firearms offenses include "purchasing, selling, offering for sale, exchanging, using, owning, possessing, or carrying, or attempting or conspiring to purchase, sell, offer for sale, exchange, use, own possess, or carry, any weapon, part, or accessory which is a firearm or destructive device … in violation of any law."

(iv) Domestic Violence Crimes

If you have been convicted of domestic violence crimes, including a violation of an order of protection, stalking, or crimes against children (including child abuse, child neglect, or child abandonment), you may be deportable.[102]

(v) High-Speed Flight

If you are convicted of high-speed flight from an immigration checkpoint, you may be deportable.[103]

3. Inadmissibility[104]

You are inadmissible if you do not have permission to enter the U.S. or if you entered the U.S. illegally at some point and are currently unlawfully present in the U.S. You may also be found to be inadmissible any time you seek permission to enter the U.S., even if you are an LPR returning from a trip abroad. Therefore, inadmissibility can apply without criminal convictions. The focus, however, of this Section will be individuals who are inadmissible because of criminal convictions. The following Subsection describes the criminal grounds (or reasons) for inadmissibility.

(a) Criminal Grounds for Inadmissibility

There are many grounds for inadmissibility.[105] Criminal grounds for inadmissibility[106] are usually raised when an LPR with criminal convictions travels abroad and is stopped at U.S. customs upon return. The LPR would have been deportable if already in the U.S., but attempting to reenter the U.S. subjects him to inadmissibility. Basically, if you are an LPR with criminal convictions who was stopped at an inspection point after a trip abroad, you are probably facing inadmissibility grounds in your removal proceedings.

The criminal grounds for inadmissibility are similar to those for deportability, although the forms of relief available to those who are subject to inadmissibility may be different. The following criminal convictions will make you subject to inadmissibility:

(i) CIMTs

For the purposes of inadmissibility, CIMTs are defined in the same way they are defined for deportability,[107] explained in Subsection D(2)(b)(ii) above. However, if you have only been convicted of one CIMT, you may qualify for one of the following petty offense exceptions and therefore may not be inadmissible:

(1) Petty offense exception 1: (a) the crime was committed when you were under eighteen (18) years old, (b) you were only convicted of one CIMT, and (c) the crime was committed more than five years before your application for admission.[108] If all three of these conditions apply to you, then you may qualify for the first exception.
(2) Petty offense exception 2: (a) you must have only been convicted of one CIMT and (b) the maximum possible penalty for the crime (the maximum amount of time the judge could have sentenced you to)

---

102. INA § 237 (a)(2)(E); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(E) (2006).

103. INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(iv); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(iv) (2006).

104. INA § 212; 8 U.S.C. § 1182 (2006).

105. INA § 212(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a) (2006). You may be inadmissible if you have been convicted of certain crimes or acts (either outside or inside the U.S.) as discussed further in this Part. Here are some of the other reasons why you may be inadmissible: you have certain communicable diseases, like tuberculosis ("TB"); you have a controlled substance addiction; you have a mental illness; you have immigration violations such as unlawful presence in the U.S.; you lied about a material fact in order to obtain an immigration benefit (for example, you lied on your application); you have a past deportation order or entered the U.S. without valid documents; you are a public charge, meaning that you are likely to become dependent on public benefits as your main source of income (in other words, if you are likely to request government (public) assistance). It was the case that being infected with Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) made you inadmissible, but this is no longer a ground of inadmissibility as of January 4, 2010.

106. INA § 212(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2) (2006) (outlining inadmissibility due to a criminal conviction).

107. An alien "who admits having committed" a CIMT can also be found inadmissible. INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i) (2006).

108. See INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(I) (2006) (listing exceptions to inadmissibility).

cannot exceed one year in prison. Also, you must not actually have been sentenced to more than six months in prison.[109]

(ii) Two or More Criminal Convictions

Two or more criminal convictions (regardless of whether the crimes arose from a single scheme and regardless of whether the crimes were CIMTs) with a combined prison sentence of five years or more make you inadmissible.[110]

(iii) Any Controlled Substance Offense

If you are convicted of violating any controlled substance law, you are inadmissible. There is no exception for a single offense for thirty grams or less of marijuana for personal use, as there was under deportability.[111]

(b) Other Grounds for Inadmissibility

(i) Detained by Customs Officials During First Attempt to Enter the U.S.

If customs officials detained you during your first attempt to enter the U.S. because you did not have permission to enter the U.S., you are inadmissible.

(ii) You Have Entered the U.S. Without Inspection

If you ever entered the U.S. without inspection ("EWI") and did not have legal permission to enter the U.S., you are inadmissible.

If you are in removal proceedings under inadmissibility, the burden is on you to show, if applying to enter the U.S., that you are "clearly and without doubt entitled to be admitted" and not inadmissible or, if already present in the U.S., "by clear and convincing evidence" that you were lawfully admitted.

Now that you know your immigration status (Part B), how you were placed in removal proceedings (Part C), and under which grounds—deportability (Part D(2)) or inadmissibility (Part D(3))—you should read the following Part E to get an idea of what actually happens in immigration court, including the chronology of removal proceedings.

E. Removal Proceedings

This Part covers the step-by-step process of your actual removal proceedings. Your case will be heard in an administrative court with authority to hear only immigration cases, called an immigration court.[112] Removal proceedings must be conducted by an immigration judge,[113] except in the case of expedited removal.[114] An attorney from U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE"), part of DHS, referred to as assistant chief counsel, will represent the government in your removal proceedings. These attorneys take immigration cases that involve criminal convictions very seriously and generally will vigorously fight these cases on the government's behalf.

---

109. See INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(ii)(II) (2006).

110. INA § 212(a)(2)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(B) (2006).

111. INA § 212(a)(2)(C); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(C) (2006).

112. You can find a list of the various immigration courts (including their addresses and phone numbers) throughout the U.S. on the EOIR website, http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/sibpages/ICadr.htm (last visited Jan. 10, 2010). If you are still serving your prison sentence, the Institutional Hearing Program ("IHP") may apply to you. The IHP was designed in order to expedite the deportation of non-CUSs with criminal convictions. Therefore, the IHP enables the government to ensure that you will be deported as soon as you are released from prison by conducting its investigations and hearings and even ordering you deported while you are still incarcerated.

113. INA § 240(a)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(a)(1) (2006). See also INA § 101(b)(4); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(b)(4) (2006) (defining "immigration judge").

114. If you attempt to enter the U.S. by fraud or without valid documentation, you may be deported without a hearing ("expedited removal"), unless you claim asylum, have a fear of persecution, or can show that you have been in the U.S. continuously for at least the previous two years. INA § 235(b)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1) (2006).

1. Notice to Appear ("NTA")

Removal proceedings begin with a notice to appear (NTA), a document the government gives both you and the court. The NTA explains why the government thinks you should be deported from the U.S. and usually provides you with your first court date.[115] The NTA is sent to your last known address, even if you no longer live there, so make sure you provide an accurate mailing address to immigration officials.[116] If you are placed in a DHS detention center, DHS is supposed to give you the NTA within seventy-two hours of your detention.

The NTA is divided into two parts. The first part is called "Allegations" and includes your name, your home country, the date you entered the U.S., and how you entered the U.S. Here, the government gives the factual reasons for wanting to deport you. The second part of the NTA is called "Charges" and gives the legal reasons for your removal. In the NTA, the government must tell you all of the following:[117]

(1) The nature of the removal proceedings against you;
(3) The laws that you allegedly violated;
(4) What you did to violate the law(s);
(5) The consequences of not appearing at your hearing; and
(6) The time and place of your court proceeding.

Make sure to check the NTA carefully for accuracy. For example, you should make sure that all of the names, dates, and addresses are correct. You should also verify that your criminal convictions have been listed correctly. These may seem like unimportant details, but they can make significant differences in your removal proceedings, including whether you are subject to mandatory detention and the forms of relief for which you may be eligible.[118] If any of the facts in the NTA are not true, you should deny the charges or allegations and demand that the government provide proof of them.

2. Immigration Court

It is extremely important that you appear at all of your immigration court dates. You cannot send someone (even your attorney) to appear in your place. If you do not appear at your scheduled hearing, the hearing will take place in absentia (in your absence), and the judge will likely order you deported. In this situation, all the government has to do is prove (1) that the NTA was properly served on you[119] and (2) that you are removable.[120]

If you miss your court hearing, you may move to reopen the case, but only if you can (1) show "exceptional circumstances" for being absent; (2) prove that you did not receive notice; or (3) prove that you were in state or federal custody.[121]

3. Master Calendar Hearing

Removal proceedings begin with a master calendar hearing, which is similar to an arraignment in criminal court. The master calendar hearing can take place in person, through video conference, or (with your permission) on the telephone.[122] The hearing is the first time you appear in front of the judge in immigration court (although you may appear at several master calendar hearings). In the master calendar

---

115. Sometimes, you will be served with an NTA that says "to be calendared." This means that you will get a Notice of Hearing in the near future giving you a court date. You can also call 1-800-898-7180 and enter your Alien Registration Number to see if your court date has been set.

116. If you fail to provide an address, then the government does not have to give you notice. INA § 240(b)(5)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(5)(B) (2006). Without notice, you will likely fail to show up to court and could be ordered deported in your absence. See Section 2 below.

117. INA § 239(a)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229(a)(1) (2006).

118. Mandatory detention is discussed in greater detail in Part H of this Chapter. Forms of relief are discussed in Part F of this Chapter.

119. The government properly serves you with an NTA when it either gives you the NTA in person, or, if personal notice is not possible, mails it to you or your lawyer. INA § 239(a)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229(a)(1) (2006).

120. INA § 240(b)(5)(A); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(5)(A) (2006).

121. INA § 240(b)(5)(C); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(5)(C) (2006). See Part G(3) of this Chapter for more information about motions to reopen. Motions to reopen are not necessarily easy to obtain, especially since "exceptional circumstances" usually means a serious illness that caused emergency hospitalization or death of a family member. INA § 240(e)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(E)(1) (2006).

122. INA § 240(b)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(2) (2006).

hearing, the basic facts of your case will be reviewed briefly. The judge will take the pleadings (discussed below), confirm you are subject to deportation as the government has claimed,[123] and identify the forms of relief for which you are eligible to apply, if any. If the judge determines you are ineligible for any form of relief, the judge may order you deported at a master calendar hearing.

The judge will hear anywhere from a few to over fifty cases at the master calendar hearing. Therefore, these hearings are not usually very long. There are several reasons why a judge might adjourn (postpone) the hearing for another master calendar hearing. If you are eligible for a form of relief, the next court date after all of your master calendar hearings is the individual hearing, which will be discussed in more detail below.

(a) Reasons for Adjournment

(i) You Need Time to Find an Attorney

Although you are entitled to have an attorney represent you in your immigration court proceedings, you do not have the right to a free attorney provided by the government.[124] Instead, you must obtain an attorney on your own. You should ask the court for a list of organizations that provide low-cost or free legal services.[125] The judge will adjourn (postpone) your first master calendar hearing for another date to give you time to find an attorney. If you have not found an attorney by the second master calendar hearing, the judge may allow you more time to find an attorney or may proceed with your case, and you may have to represent yourself. If you are ineligible for any form of relief, the judge may order you deported at this second master calendar hearing.

(ii) You Need Time to Fill Out Your Application for Relief

At the master calendar hearing, the judge may tell you the forms of relief for which you may be eligible, but you should be ready to state which one of the forms of relief[126] you are seeking and bring the corresponding applications with you, if possible. Otherwise, you should ask for an adjournment, which will give you more time to fill out the necessary applications. The judge should adjourn your case for another master calendar hearing.

(iii) You Need Time to Appeal a Criminal Conviction

If you are currently appealing your criminal conviction, you should notify the immigration judge. In general, a conviction that is pending on direct appeal is not a final conviction.[127] This is important because the government can only rely on final convictions when it uses criminal convictions as the basis for deporting non-CUSs from the U.S. You must have exhausted all of your direct appeal rights for a criminal conviction before the U.S. government can deport you.

(iv) You Want a Change of Venue

If you are facing removal proceedings outside of your home state, you may apply for a change of venue to move your removal proceedings to a more convenient location. You can apply for a change of venue at any time during your case, but the judge is more likely to grant you your request if you apply early. If you plan to request a change of venue, you should do so at the master calendar hearing.

You may want to request a change of venue if moving to a court closer to your home would lessen the hardship of traveling to court. Distance can also be difficult if you are seeking a form of relief and would like to bring witnesses to testify in the court hearing on your behalf. In addition, official records are harder to obtain at great distances. The judge will consider these and other factors in determining whether to move your case. If you are detained by the government and subject to mandatory detention, which means you are

---

123. This does not mean that the judge will decide whether or not you will be deported. He will just confirm that you are eligible for deportation. If, however, the judge finds that you are not eligible for any form of relief, he may order you deported at the master calendar hearing.

124. Unlike criminal court proceedings, the government will not assign a free attorney to you. If you cannot find one on your own, you will have to proceed without one.

125. Appendix D at the end of this Chapter includes a list of providers of legal services.

126. See Part F of this Chapter for more information regarding forms of relief and their applications.

127. If your case is on direct appeal, you should notify the immigration judge immediately and request that the immigration case against you be terminated.

ineligible for bond,[128] it is very unlikely that you will be transferred to another state unless the government agrees. The courts have given great weight to the government's right to detain you wherever there is detention space available, which may not be in or near your home state. So, if you are detained, it is highly unlikely that your request for a change of venue will be granted.[129]

Whether or not you have an attorney, the judge can still "take the pleadings," which is the next step in the master calendar hearing.

4. Pleadings

At the beginning of your master calendar hearing, the judge will "take the pleadings," or review the NTA with you. The judge will ask you (1) if the facts in the NTA are true, (2) if you admit you are removable, and (3) whether you will be applying for any forms of relief. If, in reviewing the NTA, you found any mistakes and/or discrepancies, you should mention them and deny false or incorrect allegations.

The government, however, must first prove two facts: (1) that you are an alien, meaning that you are a non-CUS;[130] and (2) if you are an LPR or were otherwise lawfully admitted into the U.S., that you are removable. This means that the government must show that you have done something to violate immigration law that permits the government to send you back to your home country.[131]

If the judge finds that you are not eligible for any form of relief discussed in Part F of this Chapter, the immigration judge will likely make a decision at your master calendar hearing and order you deported. Both the chief counsel and you can reserve the right to appeal this decision.[132] If you have applied for a form of relief and the immigration judge has found that you are eligible for that form of relief, he or she will schedule an individual hearing at the end of your final master calendar hearing. The individual hearing is discussed in greater detail below.

5. Individual Hearing

At the individual hearing, it is your burden to prove why you deserve the form of relief for which you have applied, which means you must convince the judge that you deserve to stay in the U.S. At this hearing, you, and your witnesses, if you have any,[133] will testify. The immigration judge and assistant chief counsel will also most likely question both you and your witnesses. A foreign language interpreter will be provided, if necessary.

(a) Evidence at the Individual Hearing

The Federal Rules of Evidence are loosely applied in immigration court proceedings. For example, in criminal trials, there are very strict rules of evidence. In immigration court proceedings, however, the government may be able to use evidence against you that would not be allowed in criminal court.

(b) Supporting Documents at the Individual Hearing

Supporting documents are any documents that you bring to your removal proceedings for the purpose of helping you prove that you should not be deported. Part F of this Chapter discusses what kinds of documents you may want to present to the court, which vary depending on which form of relief you are seeking. Before you read that Part, however, you should know that there are some expectations of how you present evidence in immigration court:

---

128. See Part H Section 1 of this Chapter for more information on mandatory detention.

129. In fact, many immigration detainees are moved around the country more than once if DHS determines that this is necessary because of space concerns.

130. If you are an LPR, the government can prove you are a non-CUS by showing the judge a copy of your "visa face sheet"—the document that you received when you first entered into the U.S. If you entered without inspection ("EWI"), they may rely on any statements you made or any other evidence showing that you were not lawfully admitted into the United States. If the government cannot prove that you are an alien, then the case must be terminated.

131. For example, if the NTA states that you are removable for a criminal conviction, the government will need to produce a certificate of disposition or some other court record to verify that you were convicted of a crime. The government will also have to show that the crime you were convicted of is one that allows the government to deport you. It is generally fairly easy for the government to meet this burden by producing criminal records from the criminal court.

132. See Part G of this Chapter, which discusses decisions and appeals.

133. Part F of this Chapter discusses who should come to your individual hearing and what evidence you will need to present in order to convince the judge that you deserve to remain in the U.S.

(1) You should make three copies of all documents: one for the judge, one for the assistant chief counsel, and an extra set for you.
(2) You should request to keep the originals for your own records.
(3) You should punch two holes (using a "two-hole puncher") at the top-center of all of the documents you submit so that they can easily be inserted in the judge's and assistant chief counsel's files.
(4) Affidavits or letters of support should be notarized to prove that they were done under oath and contain only truthful information.
(5) You and your witnesses should dress in a clean and professional manner.
(6) Refer to the immigration judge as "Your Honor" and always maintain a respectful tone.

(c) Witnesses at the Individual Hearing

You are allowed to—and should, if you can—present witnesses to support your case at your individual hearing. These witnesses may include your spouse, children, siblings, friends, clergy, doctors, boss, co-workers, and neighbors. Your witnesses should have legal immigration status in the U.S.[134] If they do not, they risk being placed in removal proceedings also. Your witnesses should try to attend your removal proceedings in person. If they cannot, they should write notarized letters or affidavits for you.

Depending on which form of relief you are seeking, you will want to make sure your witnesses are prepared to discuss the discretionary factors that correspond to that form of relief.[135] Generally, your witnesses should be prepared to discuss your life in the U.S., your "good moral character,"[136] the nature of your relationship with them, and why they do not want you to be deported, especially if they will be directly harmed by your deportation. They should be prepared to discuss any financial or emotional support you provide for them. If your witnesses know anything about your criminal history, they should be prepared to discuss that as well.

Your attorney, the assistant chief counsel, and the immigration judge may ask your witnesses questions during the individual hearing. You or your attorney should prepare your witnesses by asking them some of the questions you think the judge or assistant chief counsel will ask. While it may seem easy for a friend or family member to discuss your life, your witnesses should still be thoroughly prepared because the judge and/or assistant chief counsel may ask questions that are more difficult than anticipated. If your witnesses are unprepared, they are more likely to say something that ends up hurting your case.

F. Forms of Relief

A form of relief is when the judge cancels or suspends your deportation. It is the method by which you can apply to remain in the U.S. even though you are deportable. There are several different forms of relief, each of which is explained below. A form of relief might also be called a waiver because it waives, or sets aside, the immigration consequences of your criminal activity. To have a judge grant you the form of relief that you request, you must

(1) Fill out the required application;
(2) Be eligible for that form of relief;
(3) Meet the standard for that form of relief; and
(4) Convince the judge that you deserve to stay in the U.S. because your positive discretionary factors outweigh any negative discretionary factors.

Each of these requirements is discussed below. If the judge grants you the form of relief that you request, you will not be deported, and you will be permitted to resume your life in the U.S.[137]

---

134. Part B of this Chapter can help you determine whether your witnesses have legal U.S. immigration status.

135. Part F of this Chapter will discuss these discretionary factors in more detail.

136. Some of the reasons an immigration judge would think you do not have good moral character: you get drunk regularly; you committed a crime involving moral turpitude ("CIMT"); you engaged in prostitution. In addition, there are other characteristics that will cause a judge to find that you are not of good moral character. Some exceptions may also apply. See INA § 101(f); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(f) (2006 & Supp. 2008) (stating what bars a finding of good moral character).

137. The exception to this is voluntary departure, discussed later in this Chapter. With voluntary departure, you still must leave the U.S.

1. Applications for Forms of Relief

You must fill out an application for each of the forms of relief you seek. In the descriptions of each form of relief below, the corresponding required application is included.[138] Most applications also ask you to pay a fee. If you cannot afford this fee, you may request a fee waiver from the court.[139] To do this, you must explain in writing how much money you receive from income, government assistance (such as public assistance or disability benefits), and any other sources and why you cannot afford the fee.

2. Eligibility for Forms of Relief

Each form of relief has certain eligibility requirements, which are defined by statute. This means that each form of relief can only be given under certain circumstances. For example, certain forms of relief are only available if you are deportable; others are only available if you are inadmissible, if you have family in the U.S., or if you have lived in the U.S. for five years. To find out if you qualify for a form of relief, read the eligibility requirements section under each form of relief discussed below.

You should ask the judge at the master calendar hearing if you are eligible for any forms of relief. There are several forms of relief available for people facing deportation, and you may qualify for one or several of them depending on a variety of factors. If you qualify, the judge will give you the appropriate application materials. The judge will then set another court date to give you time to complete the application materials. You should bring the application and other supporting documents with you to this next court date, which will be either another master calendar hearing or an individual hearing (discussed above in Part E).

3. Standard

In addition to meeting the eligibility requirement for a form of relief, you must also meet the applicable standard. The standard is also defined and required by statute. Unlike the eligibility requirements, however, the standard is not a simple fact (as in, the simple fact that you have family in the U.S.). The standard is what you must prove to the judge. The judge will use the discretionary factors, explained below, to decide whether you meet the standard.

4. Discretionary Factors

To stay in the U.S., you must convince the judge that you meet the standard. To do that, you must convince the judge that you meet the discretionary factors for the form of relief you are seeking. Discretionary factors are facts or circumstances that the judge has the option of weighing when making a decision. Even if you meet all of the eligibility requirements for a particular form of relief, you will not automatically be permitted to stay in the U.S.—the final decision is at the judge's discretion. Therefore, the supporting documents you present to the immigration judge are extremely important because you will use them to convince the judge that you deserve to stay in the U.S.

Since the standard requires the judge to make a difficult and subjective decision, he or she probably will look to other court cases in which judges have weighed discretionary factors. Those cases will help the judge choose how to weigh the discretionary factors you present, and, ultimately, to decide whether you meet the standard and therefore are eligible to stay in the U.S.

Keep in mind that some forms of relief are harder to get than others because the discretionary factors are harder to prove.

5. Forms of Relief

This section discusses the eligibility requirements, standards, and discretionary factors for eight forms of relief: (a) Cancellation of Removal for Certain Permanent Residents; (b) Cancellation of Removal and Adjustment of Status for Certain Nonpermanent Residents; (c) Cancellation of Removal and Adjustment of Status for Certain Nonpermanent Residents: Special Rule for Battered Spouses and Children; (d) 212(c) Waiver; (e) 212(h) Waiver; (f) Adjustment of Status to Permanent Resident; (g) Asylum, Withholding of Removal, and Protection under the Convention Against Torture; and (h) Voluntary Departure.

---

138. For each application, read all of the questions carefully and answer each of them as honestly as you can. If you do not know the answer to a question, write, "I don't know." If a question does not apply to you (for example, if you are not married and there is a question about your spouse), write "N/A" or "not applicable."

139. You must complete a Fee Waiver Request Form EOIR-26A to request a fee waiver, available at http://www.justice.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir26a.pdf (last visited Jan. 10, 2010).

(a) Cancellation of Removal for Certain Permanent Residents[140]

The application you must fill out to apply for cancellation of removal for certain permanent residents is called a Form EOIR-42A and can be found online at: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir42a.pdf (last visited Jan. 13, 2010).

(i) Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief if you meet all of the following requirements:

(1) You are an LPR and have been for at least five years;[141]
(2) You have resided in the U.S. continuously[142] for seven years after having been legally admitted to the U.S. under any immigration status;[143]
(3) You have not been convicted of an aggravated felony;
(4) You have had NO prior 212(c) waivers granted (see form of relief in Part F(5)(d) below for an explanation of a 212(c) waiver);[144] and
(5) You are NOT a terrorist, crewman, or exchange visitor.[145]

(ii) Standard

To obtain this waiver, you must convince the immigration judge that the positive discretionary factors in your life outweigh the negative factors.

(iii) Discretionary Factors[146]

These are examples of positive factors:[147]

(1) You can prove long-term residence in the U.S.[148] by showing some or all of the following: apartment leases or mortgages, letters from neighbors, utility bills (including telephone, cable and electric bills).

---

140. INA § 240A(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(a) (2006 & Supp. 2008).

141. This means that at least five years have passed since your green card was issued.

142. According to INA § 240A(d)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(d)(1) (2006 & Supp. 2008), continuous residence or continuous presence in the U.S. ends either when you were served with the NTA or on the day you committed crimes that either make you inadmissible under INA § 212(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2) (2006 & Supp. 2008), or deportable under INA § 237(a)(2), (4); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2), (4) (2006 & Supp. 2008), whichever is earlier. An example of this "clock-stopping" provision is if you entered as an LPR in 1992 and committed a drug crime in 1995. The clock stops in 1995. So, your continuous presence in the U.S. would only be three years, and you would not be eligible for this form of relief.

143. The seven years of continuous residence begin if you were admitted to the U.S. under any lawful immigration status, including admission through a visa or parole, even if your legal status later expired. However, it is clear that continuous residence would never begin if you entered the U.S. illegally or without lawful immigration status. Section D(3)(a)(v) of this Chapter discusses what it means to enter the U.S. without inspection.

144. INA § 240A(c)(6); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(c)(6) (2006 & Supp. 2008).

145. See INA § 240A(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(c) (2006 & Supp. 2008) for a complete list of aliens who are not eligible for this form of relief. "Terrorist", as defined in INA § 501, is any alien described in § 241(a)(4)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(4)(B) (2006 & Supp. 2008). "Crewman" is defined in INA § 101(a)(10); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(10) (2006 & Supp. 2008), and "exchange visitor" is defined in INA § 101(a)(15)(J); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(J) (2006 & Supp. 2008).

146. The standards you must meet to obtain the forms of relief mentioned above are defined by statute. However, the discretionary factors (or how you prove these standards to the judge) are defined by case law. The following cases describe the discretionary factors that judges will consider when deciding whether to cancel removal for certain permanent residents: In re C-V-T, 22 I. & N. Dec. 7, 11–13 (BIA 1998) (listing factors against removal, including: family ties within the U.S., long-term residency, potential hardship caused by deportation, military service, employment history, property or business ties, value to the community, proof of rehabilitation; also listing unfavorable factors, including significant violations of domestic immigration laws, nature and seriousness of criminal record, and other evidence indicating bad character); In re Edwards, 20 I. & N. Dec. 191, 195–96 (BIA 1990) (stating that a clear showing of rehabilitation is not absolutely required for persons with criminal records); In re Arreguin, 21 I. & N. Dec. 38, 39–42 (BIA 1995) (granting relief to an applicant convicted of a serious drug offense, but who had made efforts to reform, had dependent minor children, and was a long-term resident; emphasizing that judges should consider the totality of the circumstances); In re Burbano, 20 I. & N. Dec. 872, 875–76 (BIA 1994) (explaining that an applicant with a lengthy criminal record must show unusual or outstanding favorable factors, and finding that such favorable factors were not shown); In re Roberts, 20 I. & N. Dec. 294, 302 (BIA 1991) (explaining that an applicant convicted for the sale of cocaine must have unusual or outstanding favorable factors, because immigration judges may not reassess an applicant's guilt or evidence, and finding that such favorable factors were not shown).

147. This is not an exhaustive list; you, your witnesses, and your attorney should discuss any other positive factors you can think of that would be helpful to your case.

(2) You can prove a history of legal employment[149] by presenting letters from your employer, pay stubs, W-2 forms, and social security earnings.
(3) You can prove ownership of property in the U.S. by providing copies of your mortgages and bank statements or property deeds.
(4) You can prove payment of federal income taxes[150] by presenting copies of your yearly tax returns and/or a printout of your tax records from the Internal Revenue Service. If you have never paid taxes or did not pay for a particular year, you can remedy this by paying back taxes.[151]
(5) If you are a member of a church group, religious or civic organization, or if you perform some sort of community service, you should obtain letters from other members or participants, attesting to your contributions and personal values.
(6) Close family ties are also an indication that the positive factors outweigh the negative ones. For all of your family members in the U.S. who have legal status (LPR or CUS), you should obtain and copy their documents, including birth certificates, family photos, green cards, U.S. passports, naturalization certificates, and notarized letters or affidavits from family members.

(b) Cancellation of Removal and Adjustment of Status for Certain Nonpermanent Residents[152]

The application that you must fill out to apply for cancellation of removal and adjustment of status for certain nonpermanent residents is called a Form EOIR-42B and can be found online at http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir42b.pdf (last visited Jan. 10, 2010). If the immigration judge approves your application, he may adjust your status to that of an LPR.

(i) Eligibility

If you have no legal status in the U.S., you may qualify for this form of relief if you meet all of the following requirements:

(1) You are not an LPR;
(2) You have been physically present in the U.S. for a continuous period[153] of at least ten years before filing your application, and you have been a person of good moral character[154] during those ten years; and
(3) You have not been convicted of any crimes under INA §§ 212(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2) (2006), INA § 237(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(2) (2006), or INA § 237(a)(3); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(3) (2006) (these do not include petty offenses; they do include CIMT*s*, controlled substance violations, multiple convictions

148. There are several issues related to time in immigration proceedings. It is important that you have a clear understanding of the chronology (timeline) of your history in the U.S.—when you arrived, how many trips you have taken outside of the U.S. and to your home country, and when you have taken them.

149. The concept of a public charge is important in immigration proceedings. You may be deemed a public charge if you depend on the government for your income (in the form of public benefits). Immigration judges are more likely to grant relief to you if you have contributed to the U.S. economy and have been able to support yourself and your family. On the other hand, if you have received any public benefits or welfare, you should be honest about it because this is not the only factor that the judge will consider.

150. Immigration judges look favorably on someone who has paid taxes because that person has not been a public charge and has contributed to society as a whole.

151. If you have not filed taxes in the past, it is not too late to pay your back taxes. You will have to pay a fine, interest, and the taxes you owe, but the filing of taxes from previous years can seriously help your immigration case. For more information on how to file back taxes, visit http://www.irs.gov/pub/irs-pdf/p594.pdf (last visited Jan. 10, 2010). You can download tax forms for previous years at http://www.irs.gov/formspubs/article/0,,id=98339,00.html (last visited Jan. 10, 2010).

152. INA § 240A(b)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(b)(1) (2006).

153. According to INA § 240A(d)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(d)(1) (2006), continuous residence or continuous presence in the U.S. ends either when you were served with the NTA or on the day you committed crimes that either make you inadmissible under INA § 212(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2) (2006) or deportable under INA § 237(a)(2), (4); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2), (4) (2006), whichever is earlier. For example, if you entered as an LPR in 1992 and committed a drug crime in 1995, the clock would stop in 1995. Therefore, your continuous presence in the U.S. would only be three years, and you would not be eligible for this form of relief.

154. The immigration judge uses his discretion in deciding whether you are a person of good moral character. He can deny you LPR status even though you otherwise qualify. See footnote 129 above which lists some activities and characteristics that may bar a finding of good moral character.

for which all of the sentences imposed add up to five years or more, prostitution, and commercialized vice offenses).[155]

(ii) Standard

You must establish that your deportation will result in "exceptional and extremely unusual hardship" on your CUS or LPR spouse, parent, child, or children.[156]

(iii) Discretionary Factors[157]

These are examples of positive factors:

(1) Proof of Spouse, Parent, Child, or Children in the U.S.[158]
   (a) Obtain and make copies of documentation that proves your spouse's, parent's, child's, or children's legal status in the U.S. These documents include, but are not limited to, birth certificates, family photos, green cards, U.S. passports or naturalization certificates, and letters or affidavits from family members.
(2) Proof of Hardship to Spouse, Parent, Child, or Children
   (a) Remember, it is your CUS or LPR family members, not you, who must suffer this hardship as a result of your deportation. This type of hardship must be "exceptional and extremely unusual" and, therefore, greater than what would normally be suffered by the family members of those who face deportation.
   (b) You should obtain records of any medical, psychiatric, or educational disabilities of family members who depend on you, especially elderly parents, children, or spouses.
   (c) You can also show financial and emotional support through letters, affidavits, and financial records (including bank statements).[159]

(c) Cancellation of Removal and Adjustment of Status for Certain Nonpermanent Residents: Special Rule for Battered Spouses and Children (Violence Against Women Act, also known as "VAWA")[160]

The form that you must fill out to apply for cancellation of removal and adjustment of status under the special rule for battered spouses and children is called a Form EOIR-42B and can be found online at http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir42b.pdf (last visited Jan. 10, 2010). If the immigration judge approves your application, he will also adjust your status to that of an LPR.

(i) Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief if you meet all of the following requirements:

(1) You are not an LPR;

---

155. See INA § 212(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2) (2006), INA § 237(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2) (2006) and INA § 237(a)(3); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(3) (2006) for a complete list of offenses which make you ineligible for this form of relief.

156. INA § 240A(b)(1)(D); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(b)(1)(D) (2006).

157. The standards you must meet to obtain the forms of relief mentioned above are defined by statute. The discretionary factors (or how you prove these standards to the judge), however, are defined by case law. The following cases describe the discretionary factors needed for cancellation of removal and adjustment of status for certain nonpermanent residents: In re Monreal-Aguinaga, 23 I. & N. Dec. 56, 60–63 (BIA 2001) (finding that the hardship to an alien's relatives must be "substantially" beyond the ordinary hardship that would be expected when a close family member leaves the country, but the hardship does not need to be "unconscionable"; and the court will consider the ages, health, and circumstances of the alien's CUS and LPR relatives to determine the level of hardship); In re Recinas, 23 I. & N. Dec. 467, 471–72 (BIA 2002) (considering the alien's children's unfamiliarity with the language and life in the return country, the children's complete dependence on alien for financial support, and the lack of any family in the return country in assessing hardship to alien's children); In re Andazola, 23 I. & N. Dec. 319, 323 (BIA 2002) (considering the poor economic conditions of the return country and diminished educational opportunities in assessing hardship to the alien's children, though ultimately failing to find extreme hardship).

158. One of the reasons family ties in the U.S. are important for your case is because the judge and the government are reluctant to separate families. In other words, the judge will be more sympathetic to you if you have a lot of family members (especially if they are LPRs and/or CUSs) in the U.S. and have fewer family members in your home country.

159. If you are divorced, you should obtain any proof of child support or alimony payments. This will show the judge you are not only reliable but also that someone depends on your financial (and possibly emotional) support.

160. INA § 240A(b)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(b)(2) (2006).

(2) Either you have been "battered or subject to extreme cruelty" in the U.S. by a spouse or parent who is a CUS or LPR, or you are the parent of a child who has been "battered or subject to extreme cruelty" in the U.S. by his CUS or LPR parent;
(3) You have been physically present in the U.S. for a continuous period[161] of at least three years, and you have been a person of good moral character[162] during those three years;
(4) You have not been convicted of an offense under INA § 212(a)(2)–(3); 8 U.S.C § 1182(a)(2)–(3) (2006);
(5) You have not been convicted of marriage fraud[163] or any offenses under INA § 237(a)(2)–(4); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)–(4) (2006);[164] and
(6) You have NOT been convicted of an aggravated felony.[165]

(ii) Standard

You must show that you or your children have been battered and/or are subject to "extreme cruelty."[166]

(iii) Discretionary Factors

These are examples of positive factors:

(1) Proof of Child in the U.S.[167]
   (a) Obtain and make copies of documentation that proves your child's legal status in the U.S. These documents include, but are not limited to, birth certificates, family photos, green cards, U.S. passports or naturalization certificates, and letters or affidavits from family members.
(2) Proof of Extreme Cruelty to You or Your Child
   (a) You can prove battery or extreme cruelty by submitting evidence of abuse, acts of violence, or threats of physical or mental abuse. These submissions can include, but are not limited to, reports or affidavits from police, judges and other court officials, medical personnel, school officials, clergy, Child Protective Services staff, or a counseling or mental health professional. You can also show any police reports or orders of protection to prove that there have been incidents of abuse in the past. If you have ever sought shelter in a safe haven for battered individuals, and you have proof that you have done so, you should also submit that proof. Lastly, you can submit letters or affidavits from other people who have evidence of abuse, including particular incidents.

(d) 212(c) Waiver[168] (Possible Waiver for LPRs)

The form that you must fill out to apply for a 212(c) waiver is called a Form I-191 and can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/i-191.pdf (last visited Jan. 10, 2010).

(i) Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief if you meet all of the following requirements:

---

161. The clock-stopping provision, discussed in footnotes 135 and 146, does not apply to this form of relief under the Special Rule for Battered Spouses and Children. See INA § 240A(d)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(d)(1) (2006).

162. See footnote 129, which lists what may bar a finding of good moral character.

163. INA § 237(a)(1)(G); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(1)(G) (2006).

164. These include, but are not limited to, CIMT, multiple CIMTs, an aggravated felony, high speed flight, a controlled substance offense, certain firearms offenses, crimes of domestic violence, stalking, crimes against children, violation of orders of protection, failure to register or falsification of documents, document fraud, falsely claiming citizenship, terrorist activities, and torture.

165. See INA § 240A(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(c) (2006) for a list of aliens who are ineligible for this form of relief.

166. "[T]he phrase 'was battered by or was the subject of extreme cruelty' includes, but is not limited to, being a victim of any act or threatened act of violence, including any forceful detention, which results or threatens to result in physical or mental injury. Psychological or sexual abuse or exploitation, including rape, molestation, incest (if the victim is a minor), or forced prostitution shall be considered acts of violence. Other abusive actions may also be acts of violence under certain circumstances." 8 C.F.R. § 204.2(c)(1)(vi) (2007).

167. One of the reasons family ties in the U.S. are important for your case is because the judge and the government are reluctant to separate families. In other words, the judge will be more sympathetic to you if you have a lot of family members (especially if they are LPRs and/or CUSs) in the U.S. and have fewer family members in your home country.

168. INA § 212(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c) (1994) (repealed 1996). This statute was repealed in 1996 but remains available to LPRs subject to removal for convictions resulting from guilty pleas made prior to Apr. 24, 1996. I.N.S. v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. 289, 326, 121 S. Ct. 2271, 2293, 150 L. Ed. 2d 347, 378 (2001).

(1) You are an LPR;
(2) You pled guilty to a crime before April 24, 1996;[169]
(3) You have lived in the U.S. for seven years; and
(4) You have NOT served a prison sentence of five years or more for one or more aggravated felony convictions.[170]

(ii) Standard

To obtain this waiver, you must convince the immigration judge that the positive discretionary factors in your life outweigh the negative factors.[171]

(iii) Discretionary Factors

These are examples of positive factors:[172]

(1) You can prove long-term residence in the U.S.[173] by showing some or all of the following: apartment leases or mortgages, letters from neighbors, or utility bills (including telephone, cable, and electric bills).
(2) You can prove a history of legal employment[174] by presenting letters from your employer, pay stubs, W-2 forms, and social security earnings.
(3) You can prove ownership of property in the U.S. by providing copies of your mortgages and bank statements or property deeds.
(4) You can prove payment of federal income taxes[175] by presenting copies of your yearly tax returns and/or a printout of your tax records from the Internal Revenue Service. If you have never paid taxes or did not pay for a particular year, you can fix this by paying back taxes.[176]
(5) If you are a member of a church group, religious or civic organization, or perform some sort of community service, you should obtain letters from other members of the group, attesting to your contributions and humanity.
(6) Close family ties are also an indication that the positive factors in your life outweigh the negative ones. For all of your family members in the U.S. who have legal status (LPR or CUS), you should obtain and copy their documentation, including birth certificates, family photos, green cards, U.S. passports or naturalization certificates, and notarized letters or affidavits from family members.

---

169. This crime cannot be an aggravated felony or a firearms offense.

170. Peralta-Taveras v. Attorney General, 488 F.3d 580, 586 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that aliens with a criminal conviction for an aggravated felony are not eligible for a 212(c) waiver).

171. The BIA decided in In re Buscemi, 19 I. & N. Dec. 628, 633 (BIA 1988) that a non-CUS who is convicted of a serious criminal offense must demonstrate "unusual or outstanding equities" in order to obtain relief under 212(c). This is a high standard to meet. This means that if you are eligible for a 212(c) waiver and have a very serious conviction or a number of serious convictions, simply showing that the positive factors in your life outweigh the negative factors may not be enough. Instead, you need to show that the positive factors in your life greatly outweigh the negative factors in your life. See also In re Edwards, 20 I. & N. Dec. 191, 196 (BIA 1990) (clarifying that the Buscemi inquiry is a case-by-case review of the facts and favorable factors, with rehabilitation a factor to be considered).

172. This is not an exhaustive list; you, your witnesses, and your attorney should discuss any other positive factors you can think of that would be helpful to your case.

173. There are several issues related to time in immigration proceedings. It is important that you have a clear understanding of the chronology (timeline) of your history in the U.S.—when you arrived, how many trips you have taken outside of the U.S. and to your home country, etc.

174. The concept of a public charge is important in immigration proceedings. You may be deemed a public charge if you depend on the government for your income (in the form of public benefits). Immigration judges are more likely to grant relief to you if you have contributed to the U.S. economy and have been able to support yourself and your family. On the other hand, if you have received any public benefits or welfare, you should be honest about it because this is not the only factor that the judge will consider.

175. Immigration judges look favorably on people who have paid taxes, again probably because they have not been public charges and instead have contributed to society as a whole.

176. If you did not file taxes in the past, it is not too late to pay your back taxes. You will have to pay a fine, interest, and the taxes you owe, but the filing of taxes from previous years can seriously help your immigration case. Visit this website for more information on how to file back taxes:
http://www.irs.gov/formspubs/article/0,,id=98339,00.html (last visited January 10, 2010).

(e) 212(h) Waiver ("Waiver of Inadmissibility")[177]

Under INA § 212(h); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h) (2006), the Attorney General may waive inadmissibility due to the commission of certain types of crimes, including (1) CIMTs; (2) a single possession of thirty grams or less of marijuana for personal use; (3) two or more offenses for which the aggregate sentences were five years or more; and (4) prostitution or commercialized vice.[178] There are three different ways to qualify for this kind of waiver, which are defined in three subsections of the INA: § 212(h)(1)(A)–(C); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h)(1)(A)–(C) (2006). The form that you must fill out to apply for any of these waivers is called an I-601 Form and can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/i-601.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

In order to qualify for any of these waivers, you must meet the following requirements:

(1) The crime for which you are facing inadmissibility is not murder, a criminal act involving torture, or an attempt or conspiracy to commit either murder or a criminal act involving torture; and
(2) If you are an LPR:
  (a) You must have resided continuously in the U.S. for a period of at least seven years immediately preceding the date of initiation of your removal proceedings; and
  (b) You have not been convicted of an aggravated felony.

In addition to these threshold requirements, you will also have to meet the specific eligibility requirements for each subsection listed below. The requirements vary depending on under which subsection of the statute you fall: 212(h)(1)(A), 212(h)(1)(B), or 212(h)(1)(C).

(i) 212(h)(1)(A) Waiver (Rehabilitation)

1. Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief under subsection 212(h)(1)(A) if you meet the following requirements: (1) you are inadmissible only under INA § 212(a)(2)(D)(i) or (ii); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(D)(i) or (ii) (2006)[179] or (2) the activities for which you are inadmissible[180] occurred more than fifteen years before the date of your application for a visa, admission, or adjustment of status.

2. Standard

You must convince the immigration judge that you have been rehabilitated. This means that while you made mistakes in the past, you have improved your life and are no longer likely to make the same or similar mistakes. In addition, you must convince that judge that allowing you to enter the U.S. would not be against the national welfare, safety, or security of the U.S.

3. Discretionary Factors

A positive factor considered for this type of relief is proof of rehabilitation. You can prove that you have been rehabilitated by providing the judge with copies of certificates of attendance at drug or alcohol rehabilitation programs or letters from your counselors, therapists, or sponsors. Sometimes, proof of involvement in a religious or civic organization or church group may also prove that you have been rehabilitated. You should obtain letters or affidavits from other members of the group who can attest to your good moral character.[181]

---

177. INA § 212(h)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h)(1) (2006).

178. This list is not exhaustive. The Attorney General can waive any offense listed in INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(I); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I) (2006), INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(II); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(II) (2006) insofar as it relates to a single possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana, or in INA § 212(a)(2)(B), (D), and (E); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(B), (D), and (E) (2006).

179. Basically, these include crimes relating to, or engaging in or soliciting prostitution.

180. For the purposes of this form of relief, you may be inadmissible for any activity listed in INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(I); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(I) (2006); INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(i)(II); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(i)(II) (2006) insofar as it relates to a single possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana; or INA § 212(a)(2)(B), (D)–(E); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(B), (D)–(E) (2006). These include but are not limited to CIMTs; a single possession of 30 grams or less of marijuana for personal use; two or more offenses for which the aggregate sentences were five years or more; and prostitution or commercialized vice.

181. See footnote 129, which lists what may bar a finding of good moral character.

(ii) 212(h)(1)(B) Waiver (Extreme Hardship)

1. Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief under subsection 212(h)(1)(B)if you are the spouse, parent, son or daughter of an LPR or CUS.

2. Standard

You must convince the judge that your deportation from the U.S. would result in "extreme hardship" to a CUS or LPR spouse, parent, child, or children.

3. Discretionary Factors

Examples of positive factors include

(1) Proof of CUS or LPR spouse, parent, child, or children in the U.S.[182]
   (a) Obtain and make copies of documentation that proves your spouse's, parent's, child's, or children's legal status in the U.S. These documents include, but are not limited to, birth certificates, family photos, green cards, U.S. passports or naturalization certificates, and letters or affidavits from family members.
(2) Examples of extreme hardship to CUS or LPR spouse, parent, child, or children
   (a) Mere inconvenience or sadness probably will not qualify for the kind of hardship required. You must show that your relatives will suffer more than the average family would because of your deportation. You can document financial and emotional support with the following items: letters, affidavits, and medical or financial records (including bank statements).[183]Proof that you are the parent of a child with disabilities might count as an extreme hardship. If your children have disabilities, obtain their medical, psychiatric, or educational records that show proof of disabilities.

(iii) 212(h)(1)(C) Waiver (Domestic Violence/Battery)

1. Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief under subsection 212(h)(1)(C) if you meet the following requirement: you qualify for classification under INA § 204(a)(1)(A)(iii) or (iv); 8 U.S.C. § 1154(a)(1)(A)(iii) or (iv) (2006) or INA § 204(a)(1)(B)(ii) or (iii); 8 U.S.C. § 1154(a)(1)(B)(ii) or (iii) (2006).[184]

(f) Adjustment of Status to Permanent Resident[185]

Another way to avoid deportation is by adjusting your immigration status to that of an LPR.[186] Adjustment of status may be used without another form of relief. Frequently, however, when adjustment of status is used as a form of relief, it is used in conjunction with another form of relief (or waiver). This may apply to you if you have more than one criminal conviction. For example, if you have a gun possession conviction and one CIMT, the above forms of relief alone may not prevent your deportation. In such a case, in order to avoid deportation, you would have to apply for the "212(c) waiver" as a form of relief as part of an application for an adjustment of status. This is because the "212(c) waiver" waives the CIMT[187] and

---

182. One of the reasons family ties in the U.S. are important for your case is because the government is reluctant to separate families. In other words, the judge will be more sympathetic to you if you have a lot of family members (especially if they are LPRs and/or CUSs) in the U.S. and have fewer family members in your home country.

183. If you are divorced, you should obtain any proof of child support/alimony payments. This will show the judge that you are not only reliable but also that someone is dependent upon your financial or emotional support.

184. Basically, you must be a victim (and/or child of a victim) of domestic violence or someone who has been battered or subject to extreme cruelty.

185. INA § 245(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1255(a) (2006). There are other ways in which non-CUSs can adjust their status. Some examples are the Cuban Adjustment Act, Pub. L. No. 89-732, 80 Stat. 1161 (1966), Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act, Pub. L. No. 105-100, 111 Stat. 2193 (1997), and registry procedures in INA § 249; 8 U.S.C. § 1259 (2006). See the notes to INA § 245; 8 U.S.C. § 1255 (2006) for more information about these alternative methods of adjusting your immigration status.

186. You can even use this form of relief if you already are an LPR.

187. Remember that you are not eligible for a 212(c) waiver if you have been convicted of an aggravated felony. See footnote 163.

adjustment of status waives the gun possession. Courts have allowed the simultaneous use of two forms of relief or waivers.[188]

To begin the process of adjustment of status, you will generally need a sponsor (family member or employer) to petition for a visa on your behalf. Depending on whether your sponsor is a family member or employer, your sponsor will be required to complete a Form I-130 ("Petition for Alien Relative") or a Form I-140 ("Immigrant Petition for Alien Worker"), and you will have to submit proof of your relationship. These applications can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-130.pdf and http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/i-140.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010). You must also submit an affidavit of support with your application. The affidavit of support is called a Form I-864 and can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-864.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).[189] In this affidavit of support, your family member proves that he is capable of financially supporting himself, his other dependents, and you. He also promises to do so if it becomes financially necessary.[190] If you are eligible for this form of relief, you will be required to complete a Form I-485 ("Application to Register Permanent Residence or Adjust Status"), which you can find online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/i-485.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

(i) Eligibility[191]

In order to obtain this form of relief in immigration court, you must be an LPR or a visa overstay[192] who either (1) is an immediate relative[193] of a CUS or (2) qualifies for one of the family- or employment-based preferences (have an approved I-130) with a current priority date[194] (this means your visa is immediately available). Because immigration court proceedings move quickly, if your family member or employer has not yet petitioned for you (completed, filed, and received approval of the I-130) and your visa is not immediately available, the process may take too long and the immigration judge will probably not be willing to wait.

---

188. In re Gabryelsky, 20 I. & N. Dec. 750, 754 (BIA 1993) (holding that a waiver under INA § 212(c) may be used in conjunction with an application for adjustment of status by an alien who is deportable for both drug and weapons offenses and that 8 C.F.R. § 245.1(e) (1993) permitted an alien to concurrently apply for adjustment of status and INA § 212(c) relief). See also In re Azurin, 23 I. & N. Dec. 695, 697 (BIA 2005) (reaffirming In re Gabryelsky). But see Powell v. Jennifer, 937 F. Supp. 1245, 1254 (E.D. Mich. 1996) (rejecting the In re Gabryelsky approach).

189. Your sponsor may instead be eligible to apply for the Form I-864EZ or the Form I-864W, which can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-864EZ.pdf and http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-864W.pdf, respectively (last visited January 10, 2010). Also, the Form I-864P ("Poverty Guidelines") does not need to be filed but is used to assist people in completing their Form I-864. The Form I-864P can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/i-864p.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010). For more information about who qualifies for these alternatives to Form I-864, you can refer to the USCIS website at www.uscis.gov or contact the USCIS Forms Line at 1-800-870-3676 or the National Customer Service Center ("NCSC") telephone line at 1-800-375-5283; TTY: 1-800-767-1833. A family member or attorney can also contact your local USCIS office by using Infopass, a web-based system allowing you to schedule appointments at USCIS offices.

190. The purpose of an affidavit of support is to prove that you will not become a public charge if lawfully admitted with permanent immigration status in the U.S. Your sponsor must maintain you at an annual income that is not less than 125% of the federal poverty line during the period in which the affidavit is enforceable. For more information about the eligibility, terms, and enforceability period for the affidavit of support, you should refer to INA § 213A; 8 U.S.C. § 1183a (2006) for the full text of the statute.

191. See INA § 245(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1255(c) (2006) for a complete list of aliens ineligible for adjustment of status.

192. If you are a non-LPR who entered the U.S. without inspection (EWI, for example), the only way you can adjust your status is if you have filed an approvable I-130 petition under INA § 245(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1255(i) (2006) on or before April 30, 2001.

193. Immediate relatives of CUSs, which include spouses, unmarried children under 21 years old, and parents (if the CUS is over 21 years old) have no quota or waiting time for approval of their visa. The government, however, does have quotas for all other family- and employment-based petitions. Therefore, if you are an immediate relative of a CUS who has completed an I-130 on your behalf, your visa would be immediately available to you and you would be eligible for this form of relief.

194. The priority date is the date on which the visa petition (for family-based petitions) is filed with USCIS or on which the labor certification (for employment-based petitions) is filed with the Department of Labor. In other words, it is the date on which your sponsor initiated the adjustment of status process on your behalf. The priority date is important because it is the date in which you are placed on the waiting line for your visa. Because the government has quotas for family- and employment-based petitions, there are many more applicants for these visas than there are available visas. This creates a backlog for these categories. If there is a backlog, your visa is not immediately available and you will not be eligible to obtain this form of relief in immigration court.

(ii) Standard

The statute does not define standards or discretionary factors required for adjustment of status, but the immigration judge may use some of the same or similar discretionary factors used for other forms of relief to determine whether you deserve to adjust your status and remain in the U.S. So, you should be prepared to prove that the following positive discretionary factors outweigh the negative factors.

(iii) Discretionary Factors

Examples of positive factors include[195]

(1) You can prove long-term residence in the U.S.[196] by showing some or all of the following things: apartment leases or mortgages, letters from neighbors, and utility bills (including telephone, cable and electric bills).
(2) You can prove a history of legal employment[197] by presenting letters from your employer, pay stubs, W-2 forms, and social security earnings statements.
(3) You can prove ownership of property in the U.S. by providing copies of your mortgages and bank statements or property deeds.
(4) You can prove payment of federal income taxes[198] by presenting copies of your yearly tax returns and/or a print-out of your tax records from the Internal Revenue Service. If you have never paid taxes or did not pay for a particular year, you can fix this by paying back taxes.[199]
(5) If you are a member of a church group, religious or civic organization, or perform some sort of community service, you should obtain letters from other members of the group, attesting to your contributions and humanity.
(6) Close family ties are also an indication that the positive factors in your life outweigh the negative ones. For all of your family members in the U.S. who have legal status (LPR or CUS), you should make copies of their documentation including birth certificates, family photos, green cards, U.S. passports, naturalization certificates, and notarized letters or affidavits from family members.

(g) Asylum, Withholding of Removal, and Protection under the Convention Against Torture ("CAT")

If you are eligible to apply for asylum, withholding of removal, or protection under the Convention Against Torture ("CAT"), you should apply for all three of these forms of relief. This way, even if the judge does not grant you your first choice, you may still be eligible for one of the others. While the standards differ slightly for each one of these forms of relief, the discretionary factors are the same and you will likely be submitting the same kinds of evidence for all three forms of relief. The discretionary factors and evidence will be described at the end of this Section.

The standards and the consequences differ for each of these forms of relief. If the judge grants you asylum, he will not order your deportation and you will be able to apply to adjust your status within a year to that of an LPR. If the judge grants you withholding of removal, however, you will be ordered deported, but that deportation order will be withheld or stopped. As a result, you will not be eligible to adjust your status, but you will be able to get employment authorization. There are two possible outcomes in your

---

195. This is not an exhaustive list; you, your witnesses, and your attorney should discuss any other positive factors you can think of that would be helpful to your case.

196. There are several issues related to time in immigration proceedings. It is important that you have a clear understanding of the chronology (timeline) of your history in the U.S.—when you arrived, how many trips you have taken outside of the U.S. and to your home country, etc.

197. The concept of a public charge is important in immigration proceedings. You may be deemed a public charge if you depend on the government for your income (in the form of public benefits). Immigration judges are more likely to grant relief to you if you have contributed to the U.S. economy and have been able to support yourself and your family. On the other hand, if you have received any public benefits or welfare, you should be honest about it because this is not the only factor that the judge will consider.

198. Immigration judges look favorably on people who have paid taxes, again probably because they have not been public charges but have instead contributed to U.S. society as a whole.

199. If you did not file taxes in the past, it is not too late to pay your back taxes. You will have to pay a fine, interest, and the taxes you owe, but the filing of taxes from previous years can seriously help your immigration case. Visit this website for more information on how to file back-taxes:
http://www.irs.gov/formspubs/article/0,,id=98339,00.html (last visited January 10, 2010).

immigration case if the judge grants you protection under CAT: (1) withholding and (2) deferral. Particularly serious crimes[200] are bars to withholding under the CAT, but they are not bars to deferral. You will not be eligible to adjust your status under either withholding or deferral, but you will be able to stay in the U.S. You will not be able to get employment authorization under deferral.

(i) Asylum[201]

The application that you must fill out to apply for asylum is called a Form I-589 and can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-589.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010). Asylum is a form of relief available to people who are unable to return to their home countries for certain reasons.

1. Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief if you meet ALL of the following requirements:

(1) You apply for asylum within one year of your arrival in the U.S.;[202]
(2) You have not been convicted of a particularly serious crime; and
(3) You have not been convicted of an aggravated felony.

2. Standard

You must prove to the immigration judge you are unable or unwilling to return to your home country because you have been persecuted there or because you have a well-founded fear that you will be badly mistreated there because of your race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.[203] Additionally, this persecution must either be done by part of your home country's government, by a group that is sanctioned (allowed or encouraged) by your home country's government or by a group or individual that your home country is unwilling or unable to stop. For an immigration judge to grant you asylum, he must be convinced there is a possibility[204] you will be persecuted.

It is not enough that your home country is in general political or social unrest. You must show how this will directly affect you or how you will be specifically targeted by this unrest.

(ii) Withholding of Removal[205]

The application that you must fill out to apply for this form of relief is called a Form I-589 and can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-589.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

1. Eligibility

You qualify for this form of relief if you meet ALL of the following requirements:

(1) You have not been convicted of a particularly serious crime; and
(2) You have not been convicted of an aggravated felony for which you received a sentence of five or more years in prison.[206]

---

200. If you are convicted of an aggravated felony, then you have been convicted of a particularly serious crime. INA § 208 (b)(2)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1158 (b)(2)(B) (2006). Some crimes can be considered particularly serious crimes even if they are not aggravated felonies. See In re Frentescu, 18 I. & N. Dec. 244, 247 (BIA 1982) ("While there are crimes which, on their face, are 'particularly serious crimes' or clearly are not 'particularly serious crimes,' the record in most proceedings will have to be analyzed on a case-by-case basis. In judging the seriousness of a crime, we look to such factors as the nature of the conviction, the circumstances and underlying facts of the conviction, the type of sentence imposed, and, most importantly, whether the type and circumstances of the crime indicate that the alien will be a danger to the community. Crimes against persons are more likely to be categorized as 'particularly serious crimes.' Nevertheless, we recognize that there may be instances where crimes (or a crime) against property will be considered as such crimes.") Additionally, the Attorney General may designate by regulation offenses that will be considered particularly serious crimes. INA § 208 (b)(2)(B)(ii); 8 U.S.C. § 1158 (b)(2)(B)(ii) (2006).

201. INA § 208; 8 U.S.C. § 1158 (2006).

202. See INA § 208(a)(2)(D); 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2)(D) (2006) for a few limited exceptions to this rule.

203. INA § 241(b)(3)(A); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3)(A) (2006).

204. Recent court decisions have held that an applicant seeking asylum does not have to show that persecution is highly probable; instead, the applicant only needs to show as little as a 10% probability of persecution if he is sent back. I.N.S. v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 440 (1987) ("There is simply no room in the United Nations' definition for concluding that because an applicant only has a 10% chance of being shot, tortured, or otherwise persecuted, that he or she has no 'well-founded fear' of the event happening.")

205. INA § 241(b)(3)(A); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3)(A) (2006).

2. Standard

Withholding of removal is very similar to asylum, but it is more difficult to obtain. You must prove to the immigration judge that you are unable or unwilling to return to your home country because your life or freedom would be threatened because of your race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. For a judge to grant you withholding of removal, he or she must be convinced that there is a probability[207] that you will be persecuted. If you are granted withholding of removal, the judge will still order you deported, but you will not have to return to your home country until it is safe for you to do so.

(iii) Convention Against Torture ("CAT")[208]

The CAT is an international treaty that prohibits the U.S. government from returning anyone to a home country where he may be subjected to torture.

1. Eligibility

You may seek protection withholding or deferral of a deportation under the CAT. You may not be eligible for withholding under the CAT if you are convicted of a particularly serious crime.

2. Standard

You must prove to the immigration judge that if you return to your home country, you will probably suffer severe pain and suffering that is intentionally done to you for an illicit (illegal) purpose. This pain and suffering must be caused or approved by a public official who has custody and control over you, and it must not arise out of a lawful sanction. For an immigration judge to grant you protection under the CAT, he must be convinced that it is more likely than not that you would suffer severe pain and suffering.[209]

(iv) Discretionary Factors for Asylum, Withholding, and CAT

If you are applying for asylum, withholding of removal, or protection under the CAT, you will need to present evidence about the current conditions in your home country and why you are afraid to return. This evidence may include country reports written by the U.S. Department of State and/or human rights organizations such as Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch. You can also use newspaper or magazine articles about the conditions in your home country related to human rights violations, the economy, or healthcare, if any of these apply to your situation.[210] Witness testimony may also support your claims.[211]

---

206. If you were convicted of an aggravated felony and were sentenced to less than five years in prison, the government still has the discretion to classify it as a particularly serious crime.

207. This "probability" standard is higher than the "possibility" standard required for asylum. Once you prove the possibility in asylum, the judge still has the discretion to deny you asylum. If, however, you prove the probability standard for withholding, the judge no longer has discretion and must grant you that form of relief. Therefore, withholding is more difficult to prove than asylum, but once you prove it, the judge is required to grant you that form of relief. It is also important to note you cannot adjust your status with withholding but you can with asylum.

208. As was the case with withholding, you cannot apply to adjust your status after obtaining relief under CAT as you would be able to do after obtaining asylum as a form of relief.

209. This is a higher standard than is required for asylum. In re J-E-, 23 I. & N. Dec. 291, 302 (BIA 2002) (citing Convention against Torture and Other Cruel Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, art. 3, Dec. 10, 1984, art. 3 S. Treaty Doc. No 100–20, 1465 U.N.T.S. 85 (1987) and referring to 8 C.F.R. § 208.16(c)(2) (2003), which states what evidence satisfies this standard).

210. Some countries treat deportees like criminals, making their lives extremely difficult when they return to their home countries. You should do research to prove any situations in your home country that may be relevant to your case. Some information you obtain may also be helpful in proving extreme hardship to you if you were to be deported.

211. Although immigration judges are aware of country conditions worldwide, do not assume your particular judge knows anything about your home country. Part of convincing the judge you should remain in the U.S. is educating him or her on the effect of your deportation to your home country. You should not, of course, exaggerate conditions, but be honest about what your life would be like and how you would be affected if you were to return to your home country.

(h) Voluntary Departure[212]

Voluntary departure gives you the option of volunteering to leave the U.S. and return to your home country instead of being deported by the U.S. government. If you do not leave the U.S. by the date set by the immigration judge, you are subject to a penalty of $1,000 to $5,000 and are ineligible for relief under the sections providing for cancellation of removal, voluntary departure, adjustment of status, change of non-immigrant classification, and record of admission for permanent residence for certain aliens.[213] The benefit of voluntary departure is that you may be able to return much sooner than if you were deported from the U.S.[214] However, a voluntary departure order is much harder to reopen than a deportation order.[215] Because voluntary departure is irreversible, you should consider all the consequences before requesting it.

(i) Eligibility

You cannot get voluntary departure if you are an arriving alien, if you have been convicted of an aggravated felony, or you if have a prior deportation order.

(ii) Standard

The standard you must meet to obtain voluntary departure varies depending on when you request it. In other words, if you request voluntary departure at the master calendar hearing, you will need to show the judge that you have (1) a valid travel document and (2) the means to buy a one-way open ticket (a ticket without a departure date) to your home country. If you wait until the individual hearing to request voluntary departure,[216] in addition to showing (1) and (2) above, you will also have to show that you were physically present in the U.S. for one year before the NTA was filed and that you have good moral character.[217]

If the judge grants you voluntary departure, he will give you a certain period of time to get your documents and ticket. If you request voluntary departure before the end of the immigration court proceedings, the judge can give you a maximum of 120 days to leave. If you make your request at the end of proceedings, the judge can grant you a maximum of sixty days to depart. Thus, the earlier you request voluntary departure, the greater the chance the judge will grant it.

G. Decision and Appeals

1. Decision

The immigration judge will decide your case based on the evidence both you and the government present to the court. If the judge orders you deported, the judge must notify you of the consequences of failure to depart.[218] At the end of the hearing, the judge will ask both you and the assistant chief counsel whether you expect to appeal the decision. If either you or the assistant chief counsel decides to appeal, the immigration judge will issue a long decision to preserve the record for the next stage. If you win your case and the assistant chief counsel does not reserve appeal, your case is final. You are now allowed to remain in the U.S. and retain your lawful immigration status. If your green card, passport, or other documents were taken from you, they may be returned at the end of the hearing, but it is more likely that these documents will be returned at a later time.

---

212. There is no formal application for voluntary departure as there is for each other form of relief. INA § 240B(d); 8 U.S.C. § 1229c(d) (2006).

213. INA § 240B(d); 8 U.S.C. § 1229c(d) (2006). If you have a ticket and travel document to leave by the date the judge sets and the only reason you do not leave is you are detained and DHS does not release you by that date, you should contact your immigration judge to inform him or the district director to extend your voluntary departure date.

214. See Part I of this Chapter, which discusses both legal and illegal reentry into the U.S.

215. Sometimes, at the time of your removal proceedings, you do not qualify for any forms of relief. You may anticipate, however, that you will qualify for a form of relief (such as adjustment of status) at a later date. At that later date, you may wish to reopen your immigration court proceedings. See Part G(3) of this Chapter, which describes the process of reopening immigration cases.

216. Sometimes people requesting other forms of relief listed in this Part will request voluntary departure as an alternative to those other forms of relief. This way, if they lose their case, they can still obtain voluntary departure.

217. See footnote 129, which lists what may bar a finding of good moral character.

218. INA § 240(c)(5); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(5) (2006).

If, however, you win your case and the assistant chief counsel appeals the judge's decision or you lose your case and you decide to appeal, your case is not over; you will have to wait until the appeal is decided to determine whether you will be able to remain in the U.S. If you lose and you appeal, you cannot leave the country while your case is pending without your case being deemed abandoned.

2. Appeals

(a) Appeals to the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA")

After the immigration judge gives his decision, both you and the government have the right to appeal the decision to the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA),[219] another type of administrative court. Because the BIA is located in Virginia, immigration appeals are essentially done on paper, and you do not have to be present at the time of your appeal. The BIA has very strict rules about how you file and prepare an appeal. Failure to follow these rules may result in your appeal being dismissed.

(b) Filing Deadlines and BIA Addresses

To appeal, you must file a Notice of Appeal with the BIA. The BIA must receive notice within thirty days of the immigration judge's decision. Note that it is not good enough to mail the Notice of Appeal by the thirtieth day; the notice must actually be in the clerk's office of the BIA by that day.[220] If it arrives even one day late, the appeal will be dismissed, and you will not have another opportunity to appeal the immigration judge's decision.

The notice can be sent by regular first class mail to this address:[221]

Board of Immigration Appeals
Clerk's Office
P.O. Box 8530
Falls Church, VA 22041

The notice can also be sent by courier or overnight delivery to this address:

Board of Immigration Appeals
Clerk's Office
5107 Leesburg Pike, Suite 2000
Falls Church, VA 22041

(c) Notice of Appeal

At the end of your hearing, the immigration judge should provide you with a Notice of Appeal on which you will state the reason for your appeal, giving all the legal claims you want to make. You must also indicate whether you plan to file a legal brief.[222] There is also a required fee of $110 for an appeal, regardless of whether you file a legal brief or not.[223] Once the BIA receives your Notice of Appeal, the BIA will notify you by sending you a receipt. If you said that you wanted to file a legal brief, you will later receive a transcript of the immigration hearing and a briefing schedule. The briefing schedule is a schedule that tells you and the government when your legal briefs are due. You can ask for an extension for more time, but generally the BIA only grants the first request for extra time by giving you an additional twenty-one days to file your legal brief. Any additional requests for more time are usually denied. You may also request oral

---

219. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(b) (2007). The BIA is the highest administrative body for interpreting and applying immigration law. It is composed of 15 members and is located at EOIR headquarters in Falls Church, Virginia. Generally, the Board does not conduct courtroom proceedings but in rare instances has heard oral arguments of appealed cases.

220. At the end of your individual hearing, the judge will give you his or her decision on a piece of paper that contains the date by which you must file your appeal.

221. Before sending anything to this address, or any addresses within the context of this Chapter or the appendices that follow it, be sure to confirm that it has not changed.

222. The legal brief is your written account of your immigration court proceedings, including why you believe the case should have been decided in your favor. The purpose of the legal brief is to persuade the BIA that you should have won your immigration case.

223. You should always check what the current fee is. If you cannot afford to pay the fee, you can request a fee waiver. In order to do so, you must complete a Fee Waiver Request Form EOIR-26A, available at http://www.justice.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir26a.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

argument on the Notice of Appeal, which is the chance to explain in person why your case was improperly decided by the immigration judge.[224] If you say you are going to file a legal brief and you do not file one, your appeal may be dismissed.

(d) Legal Brief

Writing a legal brief is not easy. That is why you should try to obtain the help of an attorney.[225] When writing a brief, you should start with a statement of facts, which outlines the following: (1) the essential facts of the case, including when and how you came to the U.S., (2) when the government began removal proceedings against you, and (3) the specific charges the government made against you. You should then briefly state the evidence that you presented to the immigration court during your hearings. If you have any new evidence that you did not previously present to the court, you cannot refer to it in your brief. You can only refer to evidence that was shown or presented to the immigration judge during one of your hearings.

After your statement of facts, you should then state your specific legal claim or claims. The BIA knows that you are not an attorney, so it does not expect you to use legal terms in the writing of your legal brief. You should, however, refer to cases that support your argument. If, in your original Notice of Appeal, you claim that you will file a legal brief and later fail to do so, the BIA may dismiss your appeal on that basis alone.

(e) BIA Decision

The BIA can take several months or even years to make a final decision on your immigration case.[226] Appeals involving detainees tend to move more quickly than the appeals of non-CUSs who are not currently detained. Once the BIA has made a decision on your appeal, it sometimes issues a brief summary of the case along with its decision. The BIA recently adopted a policy of issuing summary affirmances, which are one-page and usually one-line decisions simply stating that the immigration judge was correct without any discussion of the individual facts and circumstances of the case. With the use of summary affirmances, the BIA does not actually indicate why it is making its decision.[227]

3. Motion to Reopen or Reconsider

Under certain circumstances you may ask the immigration judge or the BIA to review your case again. There are two types of motions that accomplish this result, and both must be filed with the court that last decided your case. The motion to reopen is based on factual claims. The motion to reconsider is based on legal claims or changes in the law that are favorable to your case.

(a) Motion to Reopen

You can file one[228] motion to reopen,[229] which asks the court to reopen your immigration court proceedings. This motion must be filed within ninety days of the date of entry of the final administrative deportation order. If the basis for your motion to reopen is failure to appear in court due to exceptional circumstances and/or ineffective assistance of counsel,[230] the deadline for filing this motion is 180 days from

---

224. Requests for oral argument are rarely granted.

225. See Appendices C and D for more resources and legal service providers.

226. You can check on the status of your case by calling the Automated Status Query line, toll-free, at (800) 898-7180. You will need your Alien Registration Number when you call.

227. Within another 30 days, you may have the right to appeal the BIA decision to one final court—the Circuit Court of Appeals in your district. This court is part of the federal court system. Not everyone has the right to appeal a BIA decision. Most cases involving criminal convictions cannot be appealed to the Court of Appeals. This will be discussed in greater detail below.

228. There is one exception to the limitation of one motion to reopen, which falls under the special rule for battered spouses, children, and parents. INA § 240(c)(7)(C)(iv); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(7)(C)(iv) (2006).

229. INA § 240(c)(7); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(7) (2006).

230. In 2009, the Attorney General issued an order in which he asserted that people in removal proceedings generally have no right to have their cases reopened on grounds of ineffective counsel. In re Compean, 24 I. & N. 710, 727–730 (A.G. 2009). Several months later, the new Attorney General vacated this order and announced his intention to initiate a new rulemaking proceeding for regulations to govern ineffective counsel claims in removal proceedings. At the time of this writing, the new rules have not been issued. Until the rules are issued, the procedures governing ineffective counsel claims are those that existed before Compean.

the date of the final deportation order.[231] If you do not file within 180 days, the judge may reopen as a matter of discretion.[232] If the deportation order was issued in removal proceedings that occurred before June 13, 1992, there is no deadline. There also is no deadline if you are applying for asylum as the basis of relief, as long as your motion is based on changed home country conditions.[233]

Motions to reopen based on lack of notice or failure to attend your hearing due to exceptional circumstances will automatically stay (stop) your deportation. Motions based on new evidence or changed circumstances in your home country do not automatically stay your deportation.[234] If you do not request a stay or your request is denied, you may be deported before you receive a decision on your motion. If you are deported, the BIA will automatically dismiss your motion.

(i) New Evidence

The motion to reopen must state the new facts that you will prove at the hearing if the motion is granted and that these facts will be supported by evidence or affidavits. You must show why this evidence was not available at the time of your prior hearing.[235] If the basis of the motion is failure to appear due to exceptional circumstances or new facts or evidence, a filing fee of $110 is required.[236]

(ii) Lack of Notice/Failure to Attend Hearing

If you were ordered deported in your absence, you may file a motion to reopen if there were exceptional circumstances that prevented you from appearing at your immigration court date or if you can prove that you did not receive your NTA.[237] If the motion to reopen or motion to reconsider is based on a lack of notice, no fee is required.

(iii) Ineffective Assistance of Counsel[238]

The requirements for a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel are[239]

---

231. INA § 240(c)(7)(iii); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(7)(C)(iii) (2006). Some jurisdictions consider ineffective assistance of counsel an exceptional circumstance. See Lopez v. INS, 184 F.3d 1097, 1100–01 (9th Cir. 1999). But see Gunawan v. Gonzales, No. 04-3091, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 10502, at *9 n.4 (3d Cir. June 7, 2005) (noting that the Third Circuit has not joined the First, Sixth, and Ninth Circuits in holding that ineffective assistance of counsel is an exceptional circumstance).

232. In Lopez v. I.N.S., the court found that for cases in which deportation was ordered in your absence, the 180-day deadline for motions to reopen was tolled due to ineffective assistance of counsel. 184 F.3d 1097, 1100–01 (9th Cir. 1999). When a statute is tolled, the time for the statute of limitations is suspended, and the time you have to move to reopen is extended. In other words, although you may have 180 days to file the motion to reopen based on ineffective assistance of counsel, the clock may not start running until you know or should have known that you were a victim of ineffective assistance of counsel.

233. INA § 240(c)(7)(C)(ii); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(7)(C)(ii) (2006) ("[T]here is no time limit on the filing of a motion to reopen if the basis of the motion is to apply for relief under sections INA § 208 or 241(b)(3); 8 U.S.C. § 1158 or 1231(b)(3) of this title and is based on changed country conditions arising in the country of nationality or the country to which removal has been ordered, if such evidence is material and was not available and would not have been discovered or presented at the previous proceeding.")

234. You must request a stay from the BIA in order to obtain one in this situation.

235. There is a very important difference between (a) evidence that you were unable to get despite your best efforts because it did not exist or was unavailable and (b) evidence that you could have gotten, but you neither obtained nor presented to the court for some reason. For the purposes of your motion to reopen, (a) would probably constitute a valid reason for reopening your immigration case whereas (b) would probably not be enough.

236. You should always check what the current fee is. If you cannot afford to pay the fee, you can request a fee waiver. In order to do so, you must complete a Fee Waiver Request Form EOIR-26A, available at http://www.justice.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir26a.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

237. INA § 240(c)(7); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(7) (2006). For the purposes of motions to reopen, the term "exceptional circumstances" is defined in INA § 240(e)(1); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(e)(1) (2006) as "battery or extreme cruelty to the alien or any child or parent of the alien, serious illness of the alien, or serious illness or death of the spouse, child or parent of the alien, but not including less compelling circumstances beyond the control of the alien."

238. There is generally a fee of $110 associated with filing a motion to reopen based on ineffective assistance of counsel. You should always check whether there is an applicable fee. If there is and you cannot afford to pay the fee, you can request a fee waiver. In order to do so, you must complete a Fee Waiver Request Form EOIR-26A, available at http://www.justice.gov/eoir/eoirforms/eoir26a.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

239. In re Lozada, 19 I. & N. Dec. 637, 639 (BIA 1988), aff'd 857 F.2d 10 (1st Cir. 1988); In re Rivera-Claros, 21 I. & N. Dec. 599, 604–05 (BIA 1996); In re Grijalva, 21 I. & N. Dec. 472, 474 (BIA 1996).

(1) The motion must be supported by an affidavit (a sworn statement in which you attest to the relevant facts) that includes a statement of agreement between you and your attorney with respect to representation. In other words, you must explain the situation and how you developed a relationship with your former attorney, including any proof that you had an attorney-client relationship. This may include evidence of any payments you made to your attorney, receipts, or a retainer agreement.
(2) Before you file the motion to reopen, you must inform your former attorney of the claims you are going to make and allow him or her the opportunity to respond to you first. If you do receive a response from your former attorney, you should include that in the motion as well.
(3) The court may not consider a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel unless you also file a formal complaint against your former attorney with the bar association in the state where your attorney practices, or with another disciplinary authority. Each state has different requirements on how to file a complaint. Your motion should include any attempt you made to report this attorney and, if you have not done so, your motion should include the reasons for not doing so.
(4) You must also show that you were prejudiced (that you were hurt) because of your former attorney's actions. If, however, your attorney's incompetence actually resulted in a deportation order, you do not need to show prejudice.

(b) Motion to Reconsider

You can file one motion to reconsider, which asks the court to reconsider the decision that you are deportable in light of new case law or changes in the law. This motion must be filed within thirty days of the date of entry of the final administrative deportation order. It must specify the errors of law or fact in the previous order.[240]

4. Appeal to the Court of Appeals[241]

The REAL ID Act of 2005 ("REAL ID Act"),[242] which was passed in May 2005, purports to eliminate all reviews of final deportation orders and direct appeals by habeas corpus. This means that the REAL ID Act would prevent you from filing an appeal with the federal district court.[243] You may still file a petition for review if your claim is a question of law or a constitutional claim, which includes a claim that your criminal conviction is not a deportable offense[244] or that the government did not prove your alienage. If your case concerned asylum, withholding of removal, or protection under the CAT, you must file a petition for review with the Federal Circuit Court in the judicial district where your immigration court decision was made. Your petition for review must be filed within thirty days of the BIA decision you are appealing. It is not enough to mail your petition for review by the thirtieth day; it must be received by the thirtieth day. The REAL ID Act, however, does contain bars to judicial review, including bars of review of certain discretionary decisions.

H. Detention

Non-CUSs who are subject to deportation are now much more likely than previously to be detained by Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE"). You may be held in immigration detention while your case is pending or until your deportation is arranged. Immigration detention is not the same as criminal imprisonment. Although a criminal conviction may have started your immigration court proceedings, immigration law is not criminal law; it is civil law. Immigration detention might seem harsh, but it is technically not considered punishment. Both of these facts result in you having fewer rights as an immigration detainee than you do as a criminal prisoner. You do have the right, however, to contact the consulate of your home country. The ICE arresting agent must inform you of this right when he takes you into custody.

---

240. INA § 240(c)(6); 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(c)(6) (2006).

241. The rules regarding review in federal courts are very complicated and are still evolving. You should consult an attorney when filing anything with a federal court.

242. REAL ID Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109–13, 119 Stat. 231 (2005) (codified as amended in scattered sections of 8 U.S.C.).

243. This is a very controversial and complicated law, and efforts have been made—and are continuing to be made—to amend or repeal it. You should consult an attorney to find out how the Real ID Act could affect your case.

244. See Part D of this Chapter, which discusses grounds of deportability. See also INA § 237(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2) (2006) (listing deportable offenses).

Immigration detention is seen as a way in which the government can temporarily "hold" you while your case and future are determined. The government's primary reason for detaining you is to ensure your deportation if the judge orders you deported.

1. Mandatory Detention

Depending on your immigration status and/or criminal record, you may be subject to mandatory detention. This means you will not be eligible for the bond discussed below. If you are in mandatory detention, you will have to fight your removal proceedings (i.e., make the requests for forms of relief discussed above) from inside the DHS detention center or the jail or prison contracting with DHS. You will not be released from the detention center until your removal proceedings are completed. If you win your immigration case, then you will be released. If, however, you lose and are ordered deported, you will remain in the detention center until you leave the U.S.

Non-CUSs who are deportable for certain crimes (including possession of a firearm) must be detained.[245] In 2000, the BIA held if you were released from physical custody after criminal arrest (regardless of whether you were sentenced to incarceration) after October of 1998, you are subject to mandatory detention.[246] In 2003, the Supreme Court decided the government is allowed to hold non-CUSs who have been convicted of any of the crimes listed below in mandatory detention without a bond hearing.[247] So, if you were convicted of any of the crimes listed below and released from physical custody after October of 1998, you are subject to mandatory detention and are ineligible for a bond.[248] If you are in this situation, you will have to defend your removal proceedings from within the detention enter.

(a) Mandatory Detention of Inadmissible Non-CUSs

If you are an inadmissible non-CUS, you may be subject to mandatory detention if you have committed any offense listed in INA § 212(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2) (2006) or INA § 212(a)(3)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(3)(B) (2006).[249] Some of the grounds for inadmissibility that make you subject to mandatory detention include, but are not limited to: (1) one CIMT, although the petty offense exceptions apply; (2) a controlled substance offense; (3) a drug trafficking offense; (4) two or more offenses with aggregate sentences of five years; (5) prostitution; (6) or a domestic violence offense or violation of an order of protection.

(b) Mandatory Detention of Deportable Non-CUSs

If you are a deportable non-CUS, you may be subject to mandatory detention if you have committed any offense listed in INA § 237(a)(2)(A)(ii), (A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(ii), (A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D) (2006) or 237(a)(2)(A)(i); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(i) (2006) if your prison sentence was at least one year or in INA § 237(a)(4)(B); or 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(4)(B) (2006).[250] Some of the grounds for deportability that make you subject to mandatory detention include, but are not limited to: (1) two CIMTs at any time; (2) an aggravated felony; (3) a controlled substance offense, with the exception of possession of thirty grams of marijuana for personal use; or (4) a firearms offense.

You may also be subject to mandatory detention if you are a suspected terrorist.[251]

---

245. INA § 236(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (2006).

246. In re West, 22 I. & N. Dec. 1405, 1407 (BIA 2000) (holding that only aliens released from criminal custody after October 8, 1998, are subject to mandatory detention); In re Roman Kotlair, 24 I. & N. Dec. 124, 135 (BIA 2007) (finding that an alien who is released from criminal custody after October 8, 1998, is subject to mandatory detention even if no jail term was served).

247. Demore v. Kim, 538 U.S. 510, 531, 123 S. Ct. 1708, 1722, 155 L. Ed. 2d 724, 734 (2003) (finding that a criminal alien can be held in detention without bond procedures).

248. However, if DHS does not pick you up and detain you immediately upon release, you may be able to argue that you are no longer subject to mandatory detention. See Boonkue v. Ridge, No. 04-556, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9648, at *4 (D. Or. May 7, 2004) (finding that an alien taken into custody over five years after release was not subject to mandatory detention).

249. INA § 236(c)(1)(A); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(A) (2006) and INA § 236(c)(1)(D); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(D) (2006).

250. INA § 236(c)(1)(B); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(B) (2006) and INA § 236(c)(1)(C); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c)(1)(C) (2006).

251. INA § 236A; 8 U.S.C. § 1226a (2006).

2. Bond[252]

If you are not subject to mandatory detention, but you are being detained in an immigration detention center (not the same as serving your criminal prison sentence), you may be able to request a bond hearing, sometimes referred to in immigration court as a "Joseph Hearing."[253] A bond is similar to paying bail for your release from prison. If you are released on an immigration bond, you may be able to defend your removal proceedings from outside of the detention center.[254]

(a) Eligibility

To prove eligibility for bond, you must demonstrate that (1) you do not meet the requirements for mandatory detention and that (2) you are not an arriving alien.[255]

If you think you may be eligible for one of the forms of relief listed in Part F of this Chapter, you should present evidence of why you think you may be granted that particular form of relief. A judge is less likely to release you from detention if there is little chance you will be able to get a form of relief.

(b) Standard

At a bond hearing, you must persuade the immigration judge that you are not a flight risk or a danger to society.[256] A flight risk is someone who is likely to disappear and never return to immigration court to face removal proceedings. A danger to society is someone who the government believes is likely to commit crimes if released. Therefore, in order to prove that you are not a flight risk or a danger to society, you must show that you are responsible and that the government will be able to find you if it needs to find you.[257]

(c) Discretionary Factors

Examples of positive factors include

(1) Proof that you are not a flight risk or a danger to society
   (a) You should first show the judge where you will be living if you are released on an immigration bond. Leases, mortgages, and property deeds will prove that you own a home or have long-term residence in the same place. A letter from someone who agrees to let you stay with him or her can also be submitted. In any case, you should give the court the address of where it can reach you. A complete address has a street number and name, apartment number (if you live in an apartment), city, state, and zip code.

---

252. INA § 236(a)(2); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a)(2) (2006) states that an immigration judge is not allowed to set a bond below $1,500 but can release you on "conditional parole," which means the judge can let you go without any bond. This may also be referred to as "released on your own recognizance."

253. See In re Joseph, 22 I. & N. Dec. 799, 809 (BIA 1999) (finding that if the alien is not subject to mandatory detention, the alien "could be considered by the Immigration Judge for release" in a bond hearing).

254. A "bond" is an agreement you make with the government whereby the government releases you on the condition that you agree to appear for all of your hearings and will obey the judge's order at the end of your case. To secure this agreement, you must give the government a sum of money that will be returned at the end of the proceedings. A friend or family member may pay the bond for you. If your family pays the bond directly to the government, the bond money will be returned to your family only when your court case is completed and only if you have complied with the court's order, even if that order is to leave the country. If you are ordered deported and you do not comply with the order, you or your family member will not receive your bond money back.

255. You are an arriving alien if you are "an applicant for admission coming or attempting to come into the United States at a port-of-entry, or an alien seeking transit through the United States at a port-of-entry, or an alien interdicted in international or United States waters and brought into the United States by any means…" 8 C.F.R. § 1001.1(q) (2007).

256. See In re Ellis, 20 I. & N. Dec. 641, 634 (BIA 1993) ("[T]he alien bears the burden of showing that he was lawfully admitted to the United States, that he is not a threat to the community, and that he is likely to appear before any scheduled hearings."). A bond hearing is a completely different hearing from both the master calendar hearing and the individual hearing discussed in Part E of this Chapter.

257. Although you may submit the same or similar evidence for your bond hearing as you would for your individual hearing (if you are applying for one of the forms of relief discussed in Part F of this Chapter), you must resubmit all relevant evidence for each of your hearings.

(b) If you have an employer willing to hire you once you are released from immigration detention, you should show the judge proof that this person will employ you. If you were enrolled or plan on enrolling in educational courses, you can also submit evidence of this.

(c) If in the past you have always appeared for your scheduled court dates and complied with court orders, you should present evidence of past court records. If, however, there has ever been a warrant issued for your arrest, you should be prepared to explain why you failed to appear in court.

(d) If you are married or have children, you should show proof of these relationships by presenting marriage or birth certificates.

(2) Proof of rehabilitation

(a) You can prove that you have been rehabilitated by providing the judge with copies of certificates of attendance at drug or alcohol rehabilitation programs and letters from your counselors, therapists, or sponsors. Sometimes proof of involvement in a religious or civic organization or church group may also prove that you have been rehabilitated. You should obtain letters or affidavits from other group members who can attest to your good moral character.[258]

(b) The immigration judge will also look to your criminal convictions, especially to determine whether you are a danger to society. If you have any convictions including, but not limited to, violent crimes or acts in which you put someone else's life or well-being in danger, you should be prepared to prove that you would no longer commit such acts.

3. Bond Appeal

If you disagree with the judge's determination in your bond request, you may file a bond appeal with the BIA.[259] The government may also appeal the judge's decision if the assistant chief counsel believes that the judge should not have set bond or set the bond too low.[260] In certain circumstances, when the assistant chief counsel appeals the bond, he or she invokes an automatic stay of your release, which prevents you from being released from detention even though the judge granted your request for bond.[261] This stay could last until the BIA has made its decision on the bond appeal.

I. Failure to Depart from the U.S. and Returning to the U.S. After Deportation

1. Departure

If you are ordered deported, you will most likely have to leave the U.S. within ninety days. These ninety days are referred to as your removal period. The removal period begins either the moment your deportation order becomes administratively final or when you are released from detention, whichever occurs later. The government has the right to extend this ninety-day period and to detain you during your removal period. If you have not departed within ninety days and your deportation is still pending, the government can also release you under an order of supervision.[262]

You may be fined and imprisoned for up to four years if you have been ordered deported and do any of the following: (1) fail to depart within your removal period, (2) fail to make timely applications for travel or other documents necessary to depart the U.S., (3) attempt to prevent your departure from the U.S., or (4) fail to present yourself at the designated time and place pursuant to your deportation order.[263] Classes of aliens who fall under INA § 237(a)(1)(E), 237(a)(2), 237(a)(3), or 237(a)(4); 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(1)(E), 1227(a)(2),

---

258. See footnote 129, above which lists what may bar a finding of good moral character.

259. When the judge decides your appeal, he or she will give you a form known as a "Notice of Appeal." You must complete and file the Notice of Appeal with the BIA within 30 days of the judge's decision. The BIA may take several months to decide your bond appeal, and the immigration judge may order you removed before you receive a decision from the BIA. You will be held in detention while your appeal is being decided. See generally Part G, which describes the appeals process in greater detail.

260. The government also has a limited time to file the appeal. If it does not file an appeal, the judge's bond decision becomes final. Again, the immigration judge may decide to order you deported before you receive a decision from the BIA on the question of your bond.

261. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.19(i)(2) (2007).

262. The terms of supervision after the 90-day period are outlined in INA § 241(a)(3); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(3) (2006).

263. INA § 243(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1253(a) (2006).

1227(a)(3), or 1227(a)(4) (2006) may face imprisonment of up to ten years for failure to depart after a final order of removal.[264]

2. Bars To Reentry

If you are deported from the U.S., you will be prohibited from returning to the U.S. Depending on the reasons why you were deported, you may be able to apply for reentry into the U.S. after a designated time period. The time periods listed below refer to how long you must wait before you apply for reentry to the U.S. Even if you wait the required amount of time, this does not mean that your application to reenter the U.S. will be approved.[265] Therefore, everyone who is deported from the U.S. faces the possibility of never being able to return.

(1) Failure to Appear. If you were deported because of failure to appear at your removal proceedings, you can apply for reentry to the U.S. after five years.
(2) Inadmissibility. If you were deported based on inadmissibility grounds (except controlled substance offenses), you can apply for reentry to the U.S. after five years.
(3) Deportability. If you were deported based on deportability grounds (except aggravated felonies), you can apply for reentry to the U.S. after ten years.
(4) Laws Prior to 1996. If you were deported based on the immigration laws prior to 1996, you can apply for reentry to the U.S. after ten years.
(5) Two Deportation Orders. If you were ordered deported because of two deportation orders, you can apply for reentry to the U.S. after twenty years.
(6) Controlled Substance Offense/Aggravated Felony. If you were deported because of a controlled substance offense or aggravated felony, then you will never be allowed to reenter the U.S.

You should discuss your possibilities for reentry with your attorney before attempting to reenter the U.S. because the consequences for illegal reentry are very serious.

3. Illegal Reentry

If you enter or attempt to reenter the U.S. illegally after being deported from the U.S., you may be fined or imprisoned in a federal prison for up to twenty years.[266]

J. Conclusion

This Chapter has given you an overview of immigration law. As immigration law is very complicated and changes frequently, you should now do additional research on any forms of relief that you think might apply to you. You should think about the arguments that you will make to convince the judge that you meet the positive discretionary factors and fulfill the standard for a form of relief. You should also collect documents that support your arguments.

---

264. For the full statute, see INA § 243; 8 U.S.C. § 1253 (2006).

265. If you have unlawful presence in the U.S., you may face additional bars to reentry. If you have been unlawfully present in the U.S. between 180 days and one year, you must wait three years before applying for reentry. If you were unlawfully present for one or more years, you must wait 10 years before applying for reentry into the U.S.

266. For the full statute, see INA § 276; 8 U.S.C. § 1326 (2006). The fines are determined according to Title 18 of the U.S.C. The length and terms of imprisonment are determined according to the basis for your original deportation order from the U.S.

APPENDIX A

GLOSSARY

Acquired Citizenship
The U.S. citizen status of children born abroad (in another country) to parents who are already U.S. citizens (either by birth or naturalization).

Adjustment of Status
The process by which a non-CUS already in the U.S. may apply to change his status to a lawful immigration status. Non-CUSs admitted as non-immigrants, refugees, or parolees may adjust to become lawful permanent residents if they meet the requirements outlined in INA § 245; 8 U.S.C. § 1255 (2006). See Part F of this Chapter, which discusses adjustment of status as a form of relief from deportation in greater detail.

Affidavit
A written or printed statement of facts that is made voluntarily (freely) by a person who swears to the truth of the statement before a public officer, such as a notary public.

Aggravated Felony
A general term which includes the crimes listed at INA § 101(a)(43); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (2006) and includes murder, rape, sexual abuse of a minor, illegal drug trafficking, illegal trafficking in firearms or explosive material, theft or burglary if the punishment was a prison sentence of more than one year, child pornography, owning or managing prostitutes, some types of money laundering in excess of $10,000, fraud or tax evasion where the loss to the victim(s) is over $10,000, smuggling aliens, crimes of violence that receive a sentence of imprisonment for one or more years, and attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the above. A conviction for an aggravated felony will bar a non-CUS from most forms of relief.

Alien Registration Number (also known as "A number")
An eight- or nine-digit number preceded by the letter A (for example, "A00000000"), which can be found on a resident alien card (for LPRs) or other governmental documents relating to immigration. An "A number" will also appear on the top of an NTA and is used to identify a non-CUS in immigration court proceedings.

Assistant Chief Counsel
See Chief Counsel.

Asylum (Asylee)
Protection from persecution in one's home country offered by a foreign government. A person who entered the U.S. either legally or illegally may seek asylum if he fears returning to his country of origin due to past persecution or a well-founded fear of being persecuted based upon race, religion, nationality, political opinion, or membership in a particular social group. A person who has been granted asylum is called an "asylee." See INA § 208; 8 U.S.C. § 1158 (2006).

Attorney-Client Relationship
The formal and official representation of a person by a lawyer. This relationship is given certain protections by the court, such as the evidentiary privilege of attorney-client confidentiality, which means that a lawyer cannot be forced to testify about things told to him by his client.

Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA")
The highest administrative body for interpreting and applying immigration laws. The BIA hears appeals from immigration courts, and its decisions are reviewed by the federal appellate courts. Generally, the BIA does not conduct courtroom proceedings (and instead decides cases based on a written record and briefs submitted by both sides), but it has heard oral arguments of appealed cases in rare instances. It is made up of eleven administrative judges and is located at Executive Office for Immigration Review headquarters in Falls Church, Virginia.

Bond
A payment made to the government to guarantee an agreement between a non-CUS and the government. The government agrees to release the non-CUS from immigration detention, and the non-CUS agrees to appear at all court proceedings and to follow the immigration judge's final order. Paying an immigration bond is like paying bail in criminal law.

Bond Hearing
An immigration court proceeding in which the non-CUS requests bond and attempts to convince the judge that he is not a flight risk or danger to society (for example, because he has strong family connections in the community). A non-CUS might present some of the same or similar evidence in his bond hearing as he would in other immigration court proceedings.

Briefing Schedule
A schedule issued by the BIA that tells a non-CUS appealing a decision in his removal proceedings and the government when briefs are due.

Cancellation of Removal
A form of relief from deportation available to LPRs under INA § 240A(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(a) (2006) and to non-LPRs under INA § 240A(b); 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(b) (2006). See Part F of this Chapter, which discusses forms of relief in greater detail.

Certificate of Disposition
An official court document stating the final outcome of a criminal court proceeding, for instance acquittal or conviction. This document is useful in immigration court proceedings for proving if and how a prior criminal case against a non-CUS was resolved.

Chief Counsel
The lawyers from ICE that represent the government in immigration court proceedings. An attorney from ICE, referred to as assistant chief counsel, will represent the government in all removal proceedings. These attorneys take immigration cases that involve criminal convictions very seriously and will generally vigorously fight these cases on the government's behalf.

Citizen of the United States ("CUS")
A person who has the right to live, work, and travel in the U.S. without restrictions, to participate in the U.S. political system, and to be represented and protected abroad through U.S. embassies and consulates. See also "acquired citizenship" and "derivative citizenship."

Citizenship and Immigration Services ("CIS")
An agency within the Department of Homeland Security that handles the administrative processing of non-CUS petitions and documents, including citizenship applications, visa petitions, and asylum applications. The CIS conducts inspection interviews, and its decisions are reviewed by the Executive Office for Immigration Review (which includes the immigration courts and Board of Immigration Appeals).

Commercialized Vice
The unlawful promotion of or participation in sexual activities for profit (e.g. prostitution). Commercialized vice is a grounds for inadmissibility under INA § 212(a)(2)(D); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(D) (2006).

Consulate
The U.S. office of a foreign government. For example, Mexico has several consulates in the United States, located in various cities such as Chicago and New York.

Controlled Substance Offense
A crime involving possession or use of anything the government has prohibited from sale and use in society, for example illegal drugs and some kinds of weapons.

Convention Against Torture ("CAT")
An international treaty that prohibits member countries, including the U.S., from returning anyone to a country where he may be tortured. A non-CUS can seek protection under the CAT as a form of relief from deportation.

Conviction
With respect to non-CUSs and for the purposes of removal proceedings, a formal judgment of guilt entered by a court; or, if adjudication of guilt has been withheld, where (1) a judge or jury has found the non-CUS guilty or the non-CUS has entered a plea of guilty or nolo contendere or has admitted sufficient facts to warrant a finding a guilt, and (2) the judge has ordered some kind of punishment or penalty. See INA § 101(a)(48); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(48) (2006).

Crime Involving Moral Turpitude ("CIMT")
A crime that is "inherently immoral" and reflects "conduct that shocks the public conscience as being inherently base, vile, or depraved, and contrary to the accepted rules of morality and the duties owed between persons or to society in general." Rodriguez v. Gonzales, 451 F.3d 60, 63 (2d Cir. 2006). CIMTs are defined by case law. An example of a CIMT is prostitution.

Crime of Violence
A crime that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against another person or the property of another. A crime of violence can also be any other offense that is a felony and by its nature involves a risk that physical force may be used against the person or the property of another in the process of committing the offense, for instance, robbery.

Customs and Border Protection ("CBP")
An agency within the Department of Homeland Security that is responsible for controlling which people and things enter the U.S. For instance, the CBP keeps out not only illegal aliens and illegal drugs, but also harmful diseases that may be unknowingly transported in foreign food and pets. The customs officers who interview arriving travelers to the U.S. are part of the CBP.

Danger to Society
Someone who is likely to threaten the safety and well-being of others or society as a whole, for instance because he is likely to commit a violent crime again. In order for the judge to grant a non-CUS an immigration bond, which will release him from immigration detention, the non-CUS must prove that he will not be a danger to society (or a flight risk) if he is released.

Deferred Inspection Appointment
A continuation of the interview begun by U.S. customs officers at a U.S. inspection point. The deferred inspection appointment is used when customs officers need to get more detailed information than is possible at an inspection point. For instance, if an arriving alien is interviewed by customs officers at a U.S. airport, he may be given a deferred inspection appointment to continue the interview later at his local DHS office.

Department of Homeland of Security ("DHS")
A U.S. executive department, created in March 2003, which oversees the protection of the territory of the U.S. DHS includes the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (CIS), the United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), and the United States Customs and Border Protection (CBP).

Deportation (also known as "Removal Proceedings")
The legal process by which the government removes non-citizens from the U.S. Deportation is now officially referred to as removal proceedings in immigration court. See also "removal proceedings."

Deportation Order (also known as "Removal Order")
An order from an immigration judge to remove an alien from the U.S. A deportation order is now technically referred to as a removal order. A final removal order is one where the BIA has either affirmed the immigration judge's removal order or reversed the immigration judge's grant of relief and issued a removal order instead. A prior deportation order is a removal order that was issued in the past.

Derivative Citizenship
The U.S. citizen status of children who become citizens as a result of their parent(s) being naturalized.

Detention
The holding of an alien at a DHS detention center (or a prison contracting with DHS) while his immigration case is pending. Because immigration is a civil matter, immigration detention is different from criminal imprisonment. An alien in a DHS detention center does not have the same rights as someone who is in prison serving a criminal sentence. See also "mandatory detention."

Detention Center (DHS Detention Center)
A place where non-citizens are held until their immigration court proceedings are complete. Technically, it is different from a prison because immigration is considered a civil matter, not a criminal matter. However, some immigration detainees are held in prisons that contract with DHS.

Direct Appeal
An appeal that skips the intermediate appellate court and goes directly from the trial court to the highest court.

Discretion
The power of a legal body, such as a court or agency, to act or decide something in the way it thinks best because the law provides no clear answers. For example, the judge may have discretion to grant forms of relief if the law does not say exactly how to do so.

Discretionary Factors
Individual facts about an alien's life, which a judge looks at to see if he should receive the forms of relief he has requested. The judge will decide based on these facts whether the form of relief would be positive for both the alien and the U.S.

Dismiss
To terminate (end) a case or an action without any further hearings or decisions. Sometimes, a dismissal can be appealed to the next highest court.

Entry Without Inspection ("EWI")
A term applied to people who come into the U.S. without proper authorization by the U.S. government. Examples of EWI include crossing a border without inspection or presenting false documents to border officials.

Evidence
Anything presented to a court that proves, or helps to prove, the claim of a party or the existence of a fact. Evidence can be presented orally by witnesses, or through documents, physical objects, or anything that will help prove a point.

Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR)
The part of the U.S. Department of Justice that handles immigration cases (for example, removal proceedings). The EOIR includes the immigration courts and the BIA.

Expedited Removal
Deportation without a hearing.

Expungement
The sealing of a criminal record so that it is not publicly available.

Failure to Appear
When a person is officially scheduled to go before a judge or a government agency at a certain time and does not do so.

Fee Waiver
Permission granted by a court or administrative body so that a person does not have to pay a fee that he would otherwise be required to pay. For instance, filing fees might be waived in a court case for a poor person.

Flight Risk
Someone who is likely to run from the law or fail to appear for future scheduled court dates. In order for the judge to grant an alien an immigration bond, he must prove that he is not a flight risk. See also "danger to society."

Forms of Relief (from deportation)
A legal excuse or waiver that cancels or suspends deportation for an alien facing removal proceedings. If a form of relief is granted by an immigration judge, the non-CUS will not be deported and will be allowed to remain in the U.S.

Green Card ("Resident Alien Card")
A US CIS I-551 Permanent Resident Card which is issued to non-CUSs who have permission to permanently live and work in the U.S. See also "Lawful Permanent Resident ("LPR")."

Home Country
The country in which an alien was born or the country to which he would be deported.

Home Country Conditions
The current state of political, social, economic, or healthcare conditions in an alien's home country. Some forms of relief, like asylum, require an alien to show his current home country conditions.

Illegal Immigrant Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 ("IIRIRA")
A set of changes to U.S. immigration laws that tightened immigration laws by expanding grounds for deportation, instituting mandatory deportation, detention, and lifetime bars to reentry, and removing judicial discretion in a lot of cases. These laws have been in effect since April 1, 1997.

Illegal Reentry
An attempt to reenter the U.S. after deportation.

Immediate Relative
For the purpose of adjustment of status, spouses and unmarried children under twenty-one years old of CUSs and parents of CUSs (if the CUS is over twenty-one years old).

Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE")
An agency within the Department of Homeland Security that investigates and enforces immigration laws. The attorneys that represent the government in immigration court proceedings are part of ICE and are referred to as assistant chief counsels. U.S. Customs investigators, the Federal Protective Service, and the Federal Air Marshal Service are also part of ICE.

Immigration Court
A special court that deals only with immigration issues such as deportation.

Immigration Detention
See detention.

Immigration Status
The legal or illegal status an alien has in the U.S., for example legal permanent resident (LPR), visa-holder, or undocumented (illegal). Part B of Chapter 1 of the Immigration Supplement discusses how to determine immigration status in the U.S.

Inadmissibility (Inadmissible)
For immigration purposes, lack of permission to enter the U.S. or unlawful presence in the U.S. An alien may be found to be inadmissible any time he seeks permission to enter the U.S., even if he is an LPR returning from a trip abroad. He may also be inadmissible if he is found to be present in the U.S. without permission. See INA § 212; 8 U.S.C. § 1182 (2006) for more information about inadmissibility.

International Treaty
A formal agreement between two or more states (nations) in reference to some aspect of international relations including, but not limited to, peace, human rights, and commerce.

Legal Brief
A written summary (explanation), submitted by either an alien or the government, of the particular facts and arguments in an alien's immigration court proceedings. A brief can be submitted by either an alien or the government to the BIA if a case is appealed, and it includes why the particular side believes the case should have been decided in its favor. The purpose of the legal brief is to persuade the BIA to decide the case a certain way.

Legal (or Lawful) Permanent Resident Status ("LPR")
The immigration status possessed by most green card or resident alien card holders. The exception is that some green cards are issued for conditional permanent residency and are valid for only two years. If an alien has one of these kinds of green cards and never obtained permanent residency, then he does not have LPR status. All other green cards are valid indefinitely, even if they have an expiration date printed on them. LPR also refers to the people who have LPR status. See also "green card."

Mandatory Detention
A situation where the law requires that an alien be held until immigration proceedings are finished. The terms and conditions of mandatory detention are outlined in INA § 236(c); 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) (2006) and INA § 236a; 8 U.S.C. § 1226a (2006) (mandatory detention of suspected terrorists). See also "detention."

Master Calendar Hearing
The first date for a removal hearing scheduled before an immigration judge in immigration court. An alien may have more than one master calendar hearing. If a judge finds that an alien is not eligible for any form of relief, she can order him deported at the master calendar hearing.

Motion
A request by one of the parties that the judge take a specific action or make a specific ruling.

Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act ("NACARA")
A law passed in 1997 that provides various forms of immigration benefits and relief from deportation to certain Nicaraguans, Cubans, Salvadorans, Guatemalans, nationals of former Soviet bloc countries, and their dependents. Individuals granted relief under NACARA will become LPRs and will be issued a green card. Those wishing to apply for relief under NACARA must complete and file Form I-881, which can be found online at http://www.uscis.gov/files/form/I-881.pdf (last visited January 10, 2010).

Notice (Notification)
Knowledge or information received. "Notice" has several meanings in the law. First, the law often requires that "notice" be given to an individual about a certain fact. For example, the government is required to provide "notice" to a defendant of the charges against him in criminal proceedings or in civil proceedings in which an individual's interests are involved. This means the government must give you a piece of paper explaining the charges. It also means that a civil plaintiff must tell the person he is suing about the lawsuit through "notice" by service of process. Second, "notice" is used in cases to refer to whether an individual was aware of something. For example, a statute may require that before an individual can be held liable for damages, he had to have "notice" about a certain fact.

Notice of Appeal
An alert (notification) that an appeal is being filed with a higher court. Aliens are often required to provide the government with notice of appeal if they choose to challenge immigration court decisions. See also "notice."

Notice to Appear ("NTA")
The government document that begins a removal proceeding. The NTA contains basic information about the alien being removed, including his name, country of origin, and how he entered the U.S., as well as the grounds for his deportability and/or inadmissibility. See INA § 239(a); 8 U.S.C. § 1229(a) (2006).

Parolee Status
The immigration status of those the U.S. government has allowed to physically enter the country for different reasons, such as humanitarian reasons including, but not limited to, illness or home country conditions. Sometimes the government sets a specific time for parolees to remain in the U.S. Other times, the government allows parolees to stay in the U.S. indefinitely. Some parolees can adjust their status after one year. The most common parolees are Mariel Cubans.

Petition for Review
A document submitted to an appellate court that asserts a legal claim on appeal. For immigration appeals of BIA decisions, the petition for review to the federal Court of Appeals should include the alien's name, the reason he is requesting that the court review his case, why the court has jurisdiction, and that the petition was timely filed.

Petty Offense Exception
An exception to the usual rule that a single CIMT is grounds for inadmissibility. The CIMT cannot be used against an alien if he falls within one of the exceptions described in INA § 212(a)(2)(A)(ii); 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(2)(A)(ii) (2006): either because he committed only one CIMT when he was under eighteen years old and the crime was committed more than five years before the date of application for admission into the U.S.; or he committed one crime and the maximum sentence of that crime does not exceed one year of imprisonment and he was not sentenced to more than 6 months of imprisonment.

Prior Deportation Order
A deportation order that was issued in the past.

Public Charge
Someone who depends upon public benefits as his main source of income. In the case of a non-CUS facing removal proceedings, officials may consider age, health, family status, assets, education, and whether he receives (or has ever received) public benefits in the past to determine whether he is or will become a public charge.

Rap Sheet
The unofficial term for the record of a person's criminal history.

Refugee
A person who seeks entry and resettlement in the U.S. due to past persecution or a well-founded fear of being persecuted based upon race, religion, nationality, political opinion, or membership in a particular social group. See INA § 101(a)(42); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(42) (2006).

Rehabilitation
The process of changing one's life for the better. For example, a drug addict who is rehabilitated has worked to overcome his addiction and stop using drugs. Rehabilitation is a positive discretionary factor that a judge may consider when evaluating certain applications for relief from removal.

Removal Period
The ninety days following a final deportation order or release from detention during which a deportable alien is supposed to leave the country. The government has the right to extend this 90-day period and to detain an alien during his removal period. If the alien has not departed within 90 days and his deportation is still pending, the government can also place him under an order of supervision, as defined in INA § 241(a)(3); 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(3) (2006).

Removal Proceedings
The legal process by which the government removes non-CUSs from the U.S. (formerly known as exclusion or deportation proceedings).

Retainer Agreement
A written contract for legal services between an attorney and client, which may or may not include an hourly rate or predetermined fee.

Stay
An order given by a judge to stop or postpone a proceeding or the carrying out of a legal order for a specific length of time or until a specific event occurs.

Summary Affirmance
Short (sometimes only one sentence) written decisions by an appellate court that agree with the lower court's decision.

Supporting Documents
Any documents presented by an alien to the court, immigration judge, and assistant chief counsel for the purposes of his immigration court proceedings (removal proceedings, master calendar hearing, individual hearing, and bond hearing). Supporting documents may also be referred to as documentary evidence.

Temporary Protected Status ("TPS")
An immigration status granted by the President to non-CUSs from certain countries if he finds that armed conflict, environmental dangers, or other extraordinary and temporary conditions in that country prevent people from returning there. The President reviews the conditions of the country on an annual basis to determine whether the TPS status is still necessary. If it is not, the TPS status will expire for the non-CUSs from that particular country.

Unlawful Presence
Describing any alien who is in the U.S. even though he has not been granted an official immigration status that gives him the right to be there.

Venue
The proper location at which a lawsuit can proceed. If venue is found improper at one location, the case will usually simply be brought again in the correct place. In addition, more than one venue may be proper, giving the person bringing a lawsuit or the government a choice. A change of venue is the transfer of a case from one court to another court in the same judicial system to fix a defect in venue, to lessen prejudice, or to secure a more convenient location for trial.

Visa
A document, issued by a U.S. Consul, authorizing non-CUSs to come to a U.S. port or inspection point to apply to be admitted to the U.S. Visas are given for a specific purpose. For example, non-CUSs who comes into the U.S. with a non-immigrant visa may have a student or visitor visa. Visas are not only given for a specific purpose, but also for a specific period of time. Once either the purpose or time of the visa expires, the non-CUS has overstayed his visa and no longer has legal status in the U.S. For example, if you come to the U.S. with a student visa and you are no longer a student, then your status has expired and you are now illegally present in the U.S. You have no legal right to remain in the U.S., which is enough of a reason to put you in removal proceedings. Therefore, if a non-CUS overstays his visa, it does not matter whether he has been convicted of any crimes; the government can still deport him.

Visa Overstay
See "visa."

Voluntary Departure
An option available to some non-CUSs facing deportation in which the alien agrees to leave the U.S. within a specified period of time (usually thirty days) instead of being ordered deported by the U.S. government. Persons convicted of aggravated felonies and individuals who may pose security risks to the U.S. are not eligible for voluntary departure.

Waiver
A form of relief that a judge can grant at a removal proceeding that ignores the immigration consequences of criminal activity.

Withholding of Removal
A form of relief from deportation that is very similar to asylum, but more difficult to obtain. To qualify, a non-CUS must prove to the immigration judge that he is unable or unwilling to return to his country because his life or freedom would be threatened there due to race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. For a judge to grant withholding of removal, he must be convinced that there is a probability that the non-CUS will be persecuted. If withholding of removal is granted, the judge will still order the non-CUS deported, but he will not have to return to his home country until it is safe to do so.

Witness
A person who is called upon by a party in a legal proceeding to verify the truth of an event or story. In immigration court, it is helpful to have witnesses appear to confirm the evidence submitted. Witnesses can include, but are not limited to, family members, co-workers, neighbors, and community members. At a hearing, the judge and/or assistant chief counsel may question witnesses.

APPENDIX B

FORMS

AR-11: Change of Address Form

G-28: Notice of Entry of Attorney (filed when dealing with DHS, not with the court)

G-325A: Biographic Information Form (this form is submitted with most applications and contains specific personal information about you)

I-90: Application to Replace Permanent Resident Card ("Green Card")

I-94: Arrival-Departure Record

I-130: Petition for Alien Relative (completed by the sponsoring relative in an adjustment of status application)

I-140: Immigrant Petition for Alien Worker (completed by the sponsoring employer in an adjustment of status application)

I-864: Affidavit of Support (alternatives to the affidavit of support are the Form I-864EZ and Form I-864W)

I-864P: Poverty Guidelines (not filed, but used only for assistance in completing I-864 forms)

I-191: Application for Advanced Permission to Return to Unrelinquished Domicile (used in 212(c) applications)

I-485: Application to Register Permanent Residence or Adjust Status (submitted by the individual wishing to obtain permanent residence; usually filed with supporting evidence and may be filed with other petitions or applications)

I-601: Application for Waiver of Ground of Inadmissibility

I-765: Application for Employment Authorization

I-881: Application for Suspension of Deportation or Special Rule Cancellation of Removal (pursuant to § 203 of Pub. L. No. 105-100, 111 Stat. 2160, 2193 (1997) ("NACARA"))

I-246: Application for Stay of Deportation or Removal

I-589: Application for Asylum and Withholding of Removal (can also be used to seek relief under CAT)

N-400: Application for Naturalization

N-600: Certificate of Citizenship (used for those who acquire or derive U.S. citizenship)

These forms are found on the EOIR website:

EOIR-33/IC:	Alien's Change of Address
EOIR-26:	Notice of Appeal from a Decision of an Immigration Judge
EOIR-26A:	Fee Waiver Request
EOIR-27:	Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Board of Immigration Appeals
EOIR-28:	Notice of Entry of Appearance as Attorney or Representative Before the Immigration Court
EOIR-42A:	Application for Cancellation of Removal for Certain Permanent Residents
EOIR-42B:	Application for Cancellation of Removal and Adjustment of Status for Certain Nonpermanent Residents (including VAWA)

APPENDIX C

IMMIGRATION AND LEGAL RESOURCES

American Immigration Lawyers Association ("AILA")
www.aila.org

Amnesty International
www.amnesty.org

Asylum Law
www.asylumlaw.org

Benders Immigration Bulletin
www.bibdaily.com

Cornell Legal Information Institute
http://www.law.cornell.edu/wex/index.php/Immigration

Department of Homeland Security
www.dhs.gov

Department of Justice
www.usdoj.gov

Department of State
www.state.gov

Department of State—Human Rights
http://www.state.gov/g/drl/hr/

Detention facilities of ICE
www.ice.gov/pi/dro

Executive Office for Immigration Review
www.usdoj.gov/eoir

FindLaw
www.findlaw.com

Foreign Consular Offices in the U.S. www.state.gov/s/cpr/rls/fco

Human Rights Watch
http://www.hrw.org/

International Gay and Lesbian Human Rights Commission
http://www.iglhrc.org/site/iglhrc

New York State Defenders Association: Immigrant Defense Project
www.nysda.org/idp/index.htm

National Immigration Forum
www.immigrationforum.org

National Legal Aid and Defenders Association
www.nlada.org/Defender/Defender_Immigrants

Summary of Resources for Home Country Conditions
http://www.law.yale.edu/library/immigration.asp#conditions

U.S. Attorneys Contact Information www.usdoj.gov/usao/offices

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services
http://uscis.gov/

To order USCIS forms, you can contact the USCIS forms line at 1-800-870-3676. For information on immigration laws, regulations and procedures or for information about any forms or applications, you can call the National Customer Service Center ("NCSC") telephone line at 1-800-375-5283; TTY: 1-800-767-1833. A family member or attorney can also contact your local USCIS office by using Infopass, a web-based system that allows you to schedule appointments at USCIS offices. The website for Infopass is http://infopass.uscis.gov/.

U.S. Courts
www.uscourts.gov

U.S. Customs and Border Protection
www.cbp.gov

U.S. Embassies and Missions Abroad
http://usembassy.gov

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE") www.ice.gov

United States Court of Appeals Second Circuit
www.ca2.uscourts.gov

United States Visas
www.unitedstatesvisas.gov

APPENDIX D

LIST OF LEGAL SERVICES PROVIDERS: NEW YORK

Buffalo Area

Michael Berger, Esq.
Berger & Berger, Attorneys
555 International Drive, Ste. 800
Buffalo, NY 14221
(716) 634-6500

Anne E. Doebler, P.C.
Statler Towers, Ste. 1480
107 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 898-8568

Erie County Bar Association
Volunteer Lawyers Project
700 Statler Towers
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 847-0752

- Press 1 for English, 2 for Spanish, 3 for French, 5 for Arabic
- Will ONLY represent persons who are detained at the Buffalo Federal Detention Facility in Batavia, NY
- Provides "Know Your Rights" orientation presentations to Batavia detainees twice per week

Allen W. Farabee, Esq.
Immigration and Citizenship Law
Mailing address:
P.O. Box 139
Buffalo, NY 14213
Office address:
1271 Delaware Ave.
Buffalo, NY 14209
(716) 882-4981
(716) 882-4982, fax

F. Alejandro Gutiérrez, Esq.
1201 Colvin Blvd., Ste. 5
Buffalo, NY 14223
(716) 877-4276

- Be prepared to provide the contact information of a family member who is not incarcerated

International Institute of Buffalo
864 Delaware Ave.
Buffalo, NY 14209
(716) 883-1900

- May charge a nominal fee
- Will NOT represent Canadian citizens who do not have family ties in the U.S.
- Languages: English, Spanish, and Arabic

Legal Aid Society of Rochester, Inc.
One West Main Street, Room 800
Rochester, NY 14614
(585) 295-5745 (within Monroe County)
(800) 963-5604 (outside Monroe County)

- Represents aliens seeking asylum
- Representation limited to persons residing in Allegheny, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Ontario, Orleans, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, and Yates Counties
- Will NOT represent detained aliens

Parmanand L. Prashad, Esq.
259 Traders Blvd. East, Unit 13
Mississauga, Ontario
Canada L4Z2E5
(905) 712-1680
(416) 410-8721

Robert Kolken, Esq.
Gordon Sacks, Esq.
Eric Schultz, Esq.
Matthew Kolken, Esq.
Kolken & Kolken, Attorneys at Law
135 Delaware Ave., Ste. 101
Buffalo, NY 14202
(716) 854-1541

Stephen K. Tills, Esq.
P.O. Box 635
6413 West Quaker Rd.
Orchard Park, NY 14127
(716) 662-5080

New York City Area

Catholic Charities of New York
Department of Immigrant and Refugee Services
1011 First Ave., 12th Floor
New York, NY 10022-4134
(212) 419-3700

- Languages: Spanish, Haitian-Creole, Mandarin, Cantonese, French, Russian, Polish, Albanian, Greek, Macedonian, Serbo-Croatian, Arabic, Turkish, Bosnian, Amharic, Italian, Hindi, Urdu, Punjabi, Vietnamese, Portuguese, Thai
- Asylum cases accepted
- May charge nominal fee

Central American Legal Assistance
240 Hooper St.
Brooklyn, NY 11211
(718) 486-6800

- Language: Spanish
- Asylum cases accepted

City Bar Justice Center
42 West 44th St.
New York, NY 10036
(212) 382-6710

- Languages: Spanish, French
- Limited to individuals seeking asylum, domestic violence survivors seeking legal status, and human trafficking victims

Gay Men's Health Crisis, Inc.
119 West 24th St.
New York, NY 10011
(212) 367-1040 (Legal Services Department)
(212) 367-1125 (Client Advocacy Helpline)

- Languages: Spanish, French, Creole
- Asylum cases accepted
- Limited to HIV-positive individuals only
- Client Advocacy Helpline open Wednesdays from 2:00pm to 5:30pm

Hebrew Immigrant AIDS Society ("HIAS")
333 7th Ave.
New York, NY 10001
(212) 613-1419
(212) 613-1420 (for Wackenhut Detainees only)

- Languages: Spanish, French, Russian, Polish
- Asylum cases accepted
- May charge nominal fee

Human Rights First (formerly Lawyers Committee for Human Rights)
333 7th Ave., 13th Floor
New York, NY 10001
(212) 845-5200
(212) 845-5299 (fax)

- Languages: Spanish, French
- Limited to asylum cases
- Detained cases from Varick and Elizabeth detention centers only

Caribbean Women's Health Association—Immigrant Service Center
123 Linden Blvd.
Brooklyn, NY 11226
(718) 826-2942

- Languages: Spanish, French, Creole
- Asylum cases accepted
- May charge nominal fee

Bhanu B. Ilindra, Esq.
Pasricha & Patel, LLC
1794 Oak Tree Rd.
Edison, NJ 08820
(732) 593-6200
(732) 593-6201 (fax)

The Legal Aid Society—Immigration Law Unit
199 Water St., 3rd Floor
New York, NY 10038
(212) 577-3300
(212) 577-3456 (Immigration Detention Hotline)

- Languages: Spanish, French, Russian, Italian, Mandarin
- Represents detained and non-detained cases before New York City immigration courts (except Wackenhut), including persons with criminal convictions
- Also coordinates the Juvenile Immigration Representation Project for persons aged eighteen and under in removal proceedings
- Asylum cases accepted
- Immigration Detention Hotline will accept collect calls from detention facilities; open Wednesdays and Fridays from 1:00pm to 5:00pm

Nassau County Hispanic Foundation, Inc.
Immigration Law Service
233 7th St., 3rd Floor
Garden City, NY 11530
(516) 742-0067

- Language: Spanish
- Asylum cases accepted
- May charge nominal fee

New York Association for New Americans
17 Battery Place, 9th Floor North
New York, NY 10004-1102
(212) 898-4180

- Languages: Spanish, French, Haitian-Creole, Cantonese, Mandarin, Russian, Romanian, Tibetan
- Asylum cases accepted
- May charge nominal fee
- Priority given to survivors of domestic abuse, persecution, and/or torture

Northern Manhattan Coalition for Immigrant Rights
665 West 182nd St.
New York, NY 10033
(212) 781-0355, ext. 300
(212) 781-0943 (fax)

- Language: Spanish
- No asylum cases accepted
- May charge nominal fee
- Limited to non-detained cases

Safe Horizon (victim services/travelers' aid)
Immigration Legal Services
74-09 37th Ave., Room 308
Jackson Heights, NY 11372
(718) 899-1233, ext. 129 (lawyers)

- Languages: Spanish, Russian
- Asylum cases accepted
- Priority given to survivors of domestic abuse, persecution, and/or torture
- Can represent people with non-violent criminal offenses
- May charge nominal fee

Carmelia Taylor, Esq.
100 Broadhollow Rd., Ste. 206
Farmingdale, NY 11735
(631) 293-8300

For a list of legal services providers outside of the New York area, you or someone you know with internet access should visit the EOIR website at http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/states.htm:

Arizona: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtAZ.htm
California: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtCA.htm
Colorado: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtCO.htm
Connecticut: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtCT.htm
Florida: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtFL.htm
Georgia: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtGA.htm
Hawaii: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtHI.htm
Illinois: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtIL.htm
Louisiana: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtLA.htm
Maryland: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtMD.htm
Massachusetts: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtMA.htm
Michigan: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtMI.htm
Minnesota: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtMN.htm
Missouri: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtMO.htm
Montana: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtMT.htm
Nebraska: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtNE.htm
Nevada: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtNV.htm
New Jersey: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtNJ.htm
Ohio: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtOH.htm
Oklahoma: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtOK.htm
Oregon: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtOR.htm
Pennsylvania: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtPA.htm
Tennessee: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtTN.htm
Texas: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtTX.htm
Utah: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtUT.htm
Virginia: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtVA.htm
Washington: http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/probono/freelglchtWA.htm

A JAILHOUSE LAWYER'S MANUAL

IMMIGRATION AND CONSULAR ACCESS SUPPLEMENT

Chapter 2:
The Right to Consular Access

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

Ninth Edition 2011

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

CHAPTER II

THE RIGHT TO CONSULAR ACCESS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter is of special interest to you if you are a citizen[1] of a country other than the United States. Part B explains your right to consular access. Part C discusses the reasons why you might want to contact your consulate and why you might not want to do so. Consular officers may be able to help you in criminal cases; for example, they can gather mitigating evidence in death penalty cases. They may also help you if your rights have been violated, and they will often help in deportation proceedings. Part D gives some practical advice on when and how to contact your consulate. The Appendix to this Chapter lists contact information for certain consulates, organized by country.

B. The Right to Consular Access

If you are a foreign national, you have the right to consular access. You are a foreign national if you are either a citizen of a country other than the United States of America or a dual citizen (a citizen of both another country and the United States). Consular access means that you have the right to contact your local consulate or embassy, as well as the right to have regular communications with consular officers from your native country.

1. The Vienna Convention on Consular Relations

The right to consular access is guaranteed under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations,[2] a multilateral treaty signed by over 100 countries, including the United States. You may also have this right under a bilateral (two-party) treaty between the United States and your country of nationality. Article 36(1) of the Vienna Convention reads as follows:

(1) consular officers shall be free to communicate with nationals of the sending State and to have access to them. Nationals of the sending State shall have the same freedom with respect to communication with and access to consular officers of the sending State;

(2) if he so requests, the competent authorities of the receiving State shall, without delay, inform the consular post of the sending State if, within its consular district, a national of that State is arrested or committed to prison or to custody pending trial or is detained in any other manner. Any communication addressed to the consular post by the person arrested, in prison, custody or detention shall also be forwarded by the said authorities without delay. The said authorities shall inform the person concerned without delay of his rights under this sub-paragraph;

(3) consular officers shall have the right to visit a national of the sending State who is in prison, custody or detention, to converse and correspond with him and to arrange for his legal representation. They shall also have the right to visit any national of the sending State who is in prison, custody or detention in their district in pursuance of a judgment. Nevertheless, consular officers shall refrain from taking action on behalf of a national who is in prison, custody or detention if he expressly opposes such action.[3]

---

* This Chapter was revised by Manfred Gabriel based in part on a previous version written by Lara A. Ballard.

1. See JLM Supplement Chapter 1, "Immigration Law: The Immigration Consequences of Criminal Activity" for a definition of a citizen, as well as some of the other terms used throughout this Chapter. Defined words appear in italics the first time they are used in this chapter.

2. Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, adopted Apr. 24, 1963, 21 U.S.T. 77, 596 U.N.T.S. 261 (entered into force with respect to the United States of America Dec. 14, 1967). See generally Logene L. Foster & Stephen Doggett, Vienna Convention: New Tool for Representing Foreign Nationals in the Criminal Justice System, Champion, Mar. 1997, available at http://www.nacdl.org/CHAMPION/ARTICLES/97mar02.htm (last visited Nov. 21, 2009) (describing the rights and obligations of consulates and domestic authorities under Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and discussing the impact of the treaty on arrested foreign nationals); Mark J. Kadish, Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations: A Search for the Right to Consul, 18 Mich. J. Int'l L. 565 (1997) (discussing the implications of the treaty and United States case law relating to the issue).

3. Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, adopted Apr. 24, 1963, art. 36, 21 U.S.T. 77, 596 U.N.T.S. 261 (entered into force with respect to the United States of America Dec. 24, 1969).

This treaty has the same status as a federal law, and it is therefore binding on federal, state, and local law enforcement authorities—all police must comply with it.[4] United States Department of Homeland Security officials are also bound by federal law.[5]

If you are a foreign national, this means that: (1) the police must inform you of your right to consular access (just like they must inform you of your Miranda rights); and (2) if you want to talk to a consular officer, the consular officer must be allowed to call, write, or visit you in prison in order to answer your questions and may offer you whatever assistance he or she wishes. Also, if you request it, the official who is holding you in custody must ensure that the nearest consulate or embassy is notified of your arrest without delay. In some cases, depending on what country you are from, the nearest consular officials must be notified of your arrest or detention, even if you do not wish that to happen. See Part B(3) below for a list of these countries.

If you were not notified of your right to consular access, or if you were denied the right to communicate with a consular officer, then it is important to raise these violations of Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations in trial court and on appeal. You must do so in order to preserve this right when the court considers the issue on appellate and post-conviction review. If you do not raise this violation at trial and on appeal, you may lose the right to habeas corpus review on these issues in states that require you to first raise these issues at trial.[6]

2. Suing for Violations of the Right to Consular Access

If the police deny you access to a consular officer, they are violating federal law.[7] However, it is unclear whether individuals can bring a lawsuit against law enforcement agencies for

---

4. The U.S. Department of State regularly sends letters to law enforcement agencies reminding them of these obligations and provides them with the phone numbers of consulates throughout the United States. See, e.g., U.S. Dep't of State, Notice for Law Enforcement Officials on Detention of Foreign Nationals (1992). This notice is updated every two to five years. The most recent notice of this kind is U.S. Department of State, Consular Notification and Access: Instructions for Federal, State, and Local Law Enforcement and Other Officials Regarding Foreign Nationals in the United States and the Rights of Consular Officials to Assist Them, available at http://travel.state.gov/pdf/CNA_book.pdf (last visited Oct. 10, 2008).

5. "Every detained alien shall be notified that he or she may communicate with the consular or diplomatic officers of the country of his or her nationality in the United States." 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(e) (2006). This is a regulation of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services in the Department of Homeland Security. The regulation is also followed by the FBI, DEA, U.S. Marshals Office, and all other Department of Justice agents. For more information on the legal grounds for consular notification, see U.S. Department of State, Consular Notification and Access: Instructions for Federal, State, and Local Law Enforcement and Other Officials Regarding Foreign Nationals in the United States and the Rights of Consular Officials to Assist Them, available at http://travel.state.gov/pdf/CNA_book.pdf (last visited Oct. 10, 2008).

There is some disagreement in the courts over the binding nature of international agreements when Congress has not passed laws to enforce them. In addition, it is not clear to what extent federal law can require state officials to take action. See Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 935, 117 S. Ct. 2365, 2384, 138 L. Ed. 2d 914, 944–45 (1997) (holding that the federal government may not require states to enact or implement federal regulatory programs and discussing federalism as concern for distribution of authority between the state and federal governments). Some courts, therefore, may not recognize the Vienna Convention as binding law. However, rights under international agreements have been recognized by the U.S. Supreme Court in Argentine Republic v. Amerada Hess Shipping Corp., 488 U.S. 428, 442, 109 S. Ct. 683, 692, 102 L. Ed. 2d 818, 833 (1989) (stating that the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976 (FSIA) was adopted subject to international agreements to which the United States was a party at the time of the FSIA's enactment).

6. In Medellin v. Texas, the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that states could abide by their own procedural rules on filing habeas corpus petitions despite an International Court of Justice judgment giving force to appellants' rights under the Vienna Convention of Consular Relations and a presidential memorandum directing states to reconsider convictions in light of the International Court of Justice's ruling. 128 S. Ct. 1346, 1363, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190, 218 (2008). See Part (B)(3) of this Chapter, "The Effect of Violations of Rights to Consular Access on Convictions" for more information on the legal effect of Medellin. For information on state habeas corpus, see Chapter 21 of the main volume of the JLM, and for information on federal habeas corpus, see Chapter 13 of the main volume.

7. The Vienna Convention and other consular treaties to which the United States is a party "have the status of treaties for purposes of international law and Article VI, clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States ('all treaties made … shall be the supreme law of the land')." These treaties "are binding on federal, state, and local government officials to the extent that they pertain to matters within such officials' competence." U.S. Dep't of State, Consular Notification and Access: Instructions for Federal, State, and Local Law Enforcement and Other Officials Regarding Foreign Nationals in the United States and the Rights of Consular Officials to Assist Them, available at violating their consular rights. Usually, courts find that international agreements, "even those directly benefiting private persons, generally do not create private rights or provide for a private cause of action in domestic courts."[8] This means that international agreements do not give you, an individual citizen, the right to sue a law enforcement agency for violating the agreement. Generally, only nations, not individual citizens, can sue for violations of the treaties that they sign, even if the individual citizens are harmed.

A few federal courts have held that there is a private right of action[9] for violations of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.[10] For example, in Standt v. City of New York, a civil case, a German citizen was arrested in New York for driving while intoxicated and without a license, and for failing to wear a seatbelt. Not only did the police fail to notify the German citizen of his right to contact the consulate, but the police also did not allow him to contact the German consulate when he repeatedly asked if he could. The German citizen filed an action against the City of New York and the police officers who arrested him for violating his rights under Article 36 of the Vienna Convention. The defendants alleged that the German citizen did not have standing, or was not the proper party, to bring suit before the court for the violations. They claimed the treaty did not provide a private right of action to him as an individual. However, the Second Circuit held that Article 36 of the Vienna Convention "was intended to provide a private right of action to individuals detained by foreign officials."[11]

The Seventh Circuit has also found that private parties do have a right under the Vienna Convention to be notified that they can contact their consulate if they are arrested, and can sue law enforcement officials if they are not notified. In Jogi v. Voges, an Indian citizen charged with aggravated battery with a firearm was never advised by a state official of his right under the Vienna Convention to contact the Indian consulate for assistance. He brought an action against the county law enforcement officials under the Alien Tort Statute (ATS), alleging that his rights were violated because officials did not inform him of his right under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations to notify his consulate of his arrest. The Seventh Circuit held that the part of the Vienna Convention that instructed authorities of the receiving state to notify an arrested foreign national of "his rights" under the Convention "without delay" did give individually enforceable private rights to undocumented immigrants who were in the United States from countries that were parties to the Convention.[12]

Other courts, however, have refused to recognize a private right of action for violations of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations. In United States v. Jimenez-Nava, a Mexican citizen was arrested in Texas for making fraudulent immigration documents.[13] He was informed of his right to consular access only after he was questioned about the crime. The Fifth Circuit rejected Jimenez-Nava's arguments that Article 36 of the Vienna Convention creates "judicially enforceable rights."[14] Instead, the court held that the presumption that international treaties do not create rights enforceable by private individuals in courts applies to the Vienna Convention.

---

http://travel.state.gov/pdf/CNA_book.pdf (last visited Oct. 12, 2008). But, how a treaty gets implemented in your particular state will depend on your state's procedural rules. For instance, if your state requires that you file claims concerning violations of your Vienna Convention rights at trial or on direct review and not after, then that state rule will likely govern and you will lose your right to challenge the violation if you do not raise the violations at trial or on direct review. Medellin v. Texas, 128 S. Ct. 1346, 1363, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190, 218 (2008) (holding that, for a Mexican national under a Texas death sentence, neither an International Court of Justice judgment concerning his rights under the Vienna Convention of Consular Relations nor a presidential memorandum counts as directly enforceable federal law trumping state procedural rules on filing habeas corpus petitions).

8. Medellin v. Texas, 128 S. Ct. 1346, 1357 n.3, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190, 211 n.3 (2008) (citing Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 907 cmt. a at 395 (1986)).

9. The right of an individual citizen to bring a suit in court to enforce a treaty, agreement, or law. See Black's Law Dictionary 1438 (9th ed. 2009).

10. See, e.g., Standt v. City of New York, 153 F. Supp. 2d 417, 427 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Ulmann v. Anderson, No. 02-405-JD, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 874, at *15 (D.N.H. Jan. 21, 2003) (acknowledging that the First Circuit has not decided whether there is a private right of action, but holding that an individual's claim that he was improperly denied sufficient consular access could go forward).

11. Standt v. City of New York, 153 F. Supp. 2d 417, 427 (S.D.N.Y. 2001).

12. Jogi v. Voges, 480 F.3d 822, 834 (7th Cir. 2007) (citing Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, adopted Apr. 24, 1963, art. 36, 21 U.S.T. 77, 596 U.N.T.S. 261 (entered into force with respect to the United States of America Dec. 24, 1969)).

13. United States v. Jimenez-Nava, 243 F.3d 192 (5th Cir. 2001).

14. United States v. Jimenez-Nava, 243 F.3d 192, 198 (5th Cir. 2001).

The Supreme Court has not directly resolved this disagreement among courts regarding whether there is a private right of action for Vienna Convention violations. The Supreme Court has stated that the Convention "arguably confers on an individual the right to consular assistance following arrest,"[15] but the presumption remains that treaties do not create private rights or private causes of action in domestic courts.[16] This does not mean that the Supreme Court has gone so far as to rule that the Vienna Convention does not allow for any individual right enforceable in the federal courts.[17]

3. The Effect of Violations of Rights to Consular Access on Convictions

What happens if your right to consular access is denied and you do not have access to your consulate until after you are convicted? In some capital cases, foreign countries have tried to stay (delay or stop) an execution order because the defendant's right to consular access was violated before conviction. They argue that if the consul had been able to get in touch with the defendant, the consulate might have been able to help the defendant to avoid the death penalty.[18] In the past, this argument has generally not worked in convincing a court to stay an execution.[19]

Although courts have been unwilling to stay executions, the International Court of Justice ("ICJ") has ordered courts to re-examine decisions in which a defendant's right to consular access has been violated. In Mexico v. United States (Avena), the ICJ ordered the United States to review the death sentences of fifty-one Mexican prisoners because their right to speak with Mexican consular officials after their arrests had been violated.[20] Although the ICJ refused Mexico's demand that the United States annul all fifty-one convictions, the court did order that the United States re-examine each case in order to determine if the defendant suffered legal prejudice (unfair case outcome) by not having early access to a diplomat. The ICJ held that such re-examination must be conducted by a court, rather than in a clemency proceeding before a state governor.[21] The ICJ suggested that the ruling applied to "other foreign nationals finding themselves in similar situations in the United States."[22]

When it was first issued, the ICJ's determination that re-examination must be conducted by a court seemed like an important qualification to that court's earlier holding in the LaGrand case.[23] In LaGrand, the ICJ held that the United States' doctrine of procedural default, which prohibits defendants from raising issues on appeal if they did not raise such issues at trial, could not apply to Vienna Convention violations.

---

15. Breard v. Greene, 523 U.S. 371, 376, 118 S. Ct. 1352, 1355, 140 L. Ed. 2d 529, 538 (1998).

16. Medellin v. Texas, 128 S. Ct. 1346, 1357 n.3, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190, 211 n.3 (2008); 2 Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 907 cmt. a at 395 (1987).

17. See Safety Nat'l Cas. Corp. v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, 543 F.3d 744 (5th Cir. 2008) (questioning whether the Supreme Court's dicta in Medellin v. Texas indicates only that the Convention's provisions on the enforcement of international arbitration tribunals' judgments are not self-executing or whether the Convention as a whole is not self-executing); De Los Santos Mora v. New York, 524 F.3d 183, 187 n.4 (2d Cir. 2008) (arguing the Supreme Court was unresolved in Medellin about whether the Vienna Convention is self-executing and whether individuals can sue in federal court); Gandara v. Bennett, 528 F.3d 823, 827–829 (11th Cir. 2008) (finding the Vienna Convention does not give individuals a judicially enforceable private right on the following grounds: the language in its preamble, the lack of private damages available, the general presumption against private rights, and domestic law).

18. See Breard v. Greene, 523 U.S. 371, 377, 118 S. Ct. 1352, 1355, 140 L. Ed. 2d 529, 538 (1998) (finding consul's advice might lead a defendant to elect plea bargaining and avoid the death penalty, although it did not in this case).

19. See, e.g., LaGrand v. Stewart, 133 F.3d 1253, 1261 (9th Cir. 1998) (denying claim based on lack of consular notification on grounds of procedural default because the claim was not raised in state proceedings); Fed. Republic of Germany v. United States, 526 U.S. 111, 111–12, 119 S. Ct. 1016, 1017, 143 L. Ed. 2d 192, 194 (1999) (denying enforcement of an order to stay execution of German citizens issued by the International Court of Justice partly because, according to the 11th Amendment which codifies the idea of state sovereign immunity, federal courts do not have jurisdiction to enforce a claim against a state that did not consent to jurisdiction). But see Torres v. State, 120 P.3d 1184, 1186–87 (holding that defendant was prejudiced because he was not informed that he had the right to contact his country's consulate, but denying the defendant any relief because the governor had already granted clemency to the defendant by changing his sentence to life without parole).

20. Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mex. v. U.S.), 2004 I.C.J. 128 (Mar. 31), available at http://www.icj-cij.org/docket/files/128/8188.pdf?PHPSESSID=df3b4135ad9bdc29003fe5449b033fbb (last visited Sept. 29, 2009).

21. Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mex. v. U.S.), 2004 I.C.J. 128 (Mar. 31), available at http://www.icj-cij.org/docket/files/128/8188.pdf?PHPSESSID=df3b4135ad9bdc29003fe5449b033fbb (last visited Sept. 29, 2009).

22. Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mex. v. U.S.), 2004 I.C.J. 128, 70 (Mar. 31), available at http://www.icj-cij.org/docket/files/128/8188.pdf?PHPSESSID=df3b4135ad9bdc29003fe5449b033fbb (last visited Sept. 29, 2009).

23. LaGrand Case (F.R.G. v. U.S.), 2001 I.C.J. 104 (June 27), available at http://www.icj-cij.org/docket/files/104/7736.pdf (last visited Sept. 29, 2009).

However, the LaGrand court left the decision of how and where defendants could bring up Convention violations to the United States. The ICJ decision in Avena attempted to narrow this ruling by holding that the manner in which defendants bring up Convention violations is not entirely up to the United States; re-examination must be conducted by a court, rather than in a clemency proceeding.

The Supreme Court, however, has specifically rejected the ICJ's LaGrand holding. In Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon, a recent pair of Supreme Court cases, the Court held that state procedural default rules can be applied to Vienna Convention violations.[24] That is to say, if your state has established general rules of procedure that require you to raise certain claims about rights violations at certain times, then those state rules will also apply to violations of rights granted to you in the Vienna Convention.

In the past, in addition to being a party to the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations ("Vienna Convention"), the United States ratified the Vienna Convention Optional Protocol Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes, which gave the ICJ the power (jurisdiction) to settle disputes between the United States and other nations regarding alleged violations of the Convention. On March 7, 2005, however, the United States decided to withdraw from this Optional Protocol, meaning that the ICJ no longer has the power to settle disputes between the United States and other nations regarding the Convention as it did in the Avena case.[25]

The ICJ, even when it has power to hear cases, never had the power to enforce its decisions in the U.S. On February 28, 2005, President Bush issued a memorandum directing state courts to give effect to (recognize) the ICJ's ruling in Avena and to review the cases of the Mexican citizens on death row in the United States.[26] The President issued this memorandum because the courts had inconsistently enforced the rights granted by the Vienna Convention. The memorandum directed the state courts to review and give effect to (enforce) the Avena decision "in accordance with the general principles of comity [reciprocity] in cases filed by the fifty-one Mexican nationals addressed in that decision."[27] As one scholar put it, "[b]efore Avena was issued, the U.S. Supreme Court had already denied post-conviction relief for some of the Mexican nationals, which effectively meant these individuals were out of court. The President's memorandum, at a minimum, re-opened the state court doors for these inmates."[28] As discussed above, in 2006, the Supreme Court announced that a state court may apply its regular procedural default rules to consular claims, though it did not decide whether the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations gave defendants a judicially enforceable right to consular access.[29]

In 2008, the Supreme Court decided Medellin v. Texas.[30] In Medellin, the Supreme Court found that the ICJ's judgment in Avena was not binding on United States state or federal courts. The Court distinguished between self-executing treaties and non-self-executing treaties. Although the Court did not directly rule on whether the Vienna Convention itself is self-executing, the Court reasoned that non-self-executing international treaties do not preempt state limitations on the filing of successive habeas petitions.[31] A treaty

---

24. Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon, 548 U.S. 331, 355–357, 126 S. Ct. 2669, 2685–86, 165 L. Ed. 2d 557, 582–83 (2006).

25. U.S. Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice sent a letter to the U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan, informing him that the United States "hereby withdraws" from the Optional Protocol. See Charles Lane, U.S. Quits Pact Used in Capital Cases, Wash. Post, Mar. 10, 2005, at A01. The letter stated in part: "This letter constitutes notification by the United States of America that it hereby withdraws from [Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations Concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes]. As a consequence of this withdrawal, the United States will no longer recognize the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice reflected in that Protocol." See Frederic L. Kirgis, Addendum to ASIL Insight, President Bush's Determination Regarding Mexican Nationals and Consular Convention Rights, Am. Soc'y of Int'l L., Mar. 2005, available at http://www.asil.org/insights050309.cfm (last visited Sept. 28, 2009).

26. See Memorandum from President George W. Bush to the Attorney General, Compliance with the Decision of the International Court of Justice in Avena (Feb. 28, 2005), available at http://www.unhcr.org/refworld/docid/429c2fd94.html (last visited Sept. 28, 2009).

27. See Memorandum from President George W. Bush to the Attorney General, Compliance with the Decision of the International Court of Justice in Avena (Feb. 28, 2005), available at http://www.unhcr.org/refworld/docid/429c2fd94.html (last visited Sept. 28, 2009).

28. Susan L. Karamanian, Briefly Resuscitating the Great Writ: the International Court of Justice and the U.S. Death Penalty, 69 Alb. L. Rev. 745, 759-60 (2006).

29. Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon, 548 U.S. 331, 356–357, 126 S. Ct. 2669, 2685, 165 L. Ed. 2d 557, 582–83 (2006).

30. Medellin v. Texas, 128 S. Ct. 1346, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190 (2008).

31. J. Scott Kohler, Note, Interpretive Federalism and the Treaty Power Implications of Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon, 46 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 468, 482 n.78 (2008) ("[T]he Court determined that neither the Optional Protocol nor the United Nations Charter is self-executing, that is, binding as a matter of domestic—as opposed to international—is non-self-executing if it does not have automatic domestic effect as federal law upon its ratification by the Senate.[32] Medellin indicated that, for a treaty to be self-executing, either the treaty must contain language that plainly provides for domestic enforceability, or Congress must ratify the international law by passing separate legislation.[33]

In Medellin, the Court also considered the preclusive effect (legal weight) of President Bush's memorandum. The Supreme Court found that the President could not order states to comply with ICJ rulings. The Court explicitly refused to require states to reconsider the convictions of prisoners under the Vienna Convention if hearing such claims did not conform to their own state procedural default rules.[34] State courts have begun to follow Medellin's invitation to deny petitions seeking review of convictions for failure to provide consular access.[35] States are still free to follow Avena if they choose.[36]

If you or the police have any questions about consular rights and obligations under the Vienna Convention, you or they should contact:

Office of Public Affairs and Policy Coordination for Consular Affairs
CA/P Room 4800
Bureau of Consular Affairs
U.S. Department of State
Washington, D.C. 20520
(202) 647-4415 (Monday through Friday, 9am to 5pm; closed for holidays)

After business hours, you can reach the State Department Operations Center at (202) 647-1512. If you ask to speak with your consulate and your request is denied, make sure to write down the date, time, and the name of the person who denied your request.

C. Why Contact the Consulate?

Under the Vienna Convention, it is up to you to decide whether or not you want to contact your consulate. You are not required to contact your home government. However, many countries have signed treaties with the United States requiring U.S. officials to automatically contact them if their citizens are arrested in the United States.[37] This means that even if you do not want your consulate to know that you law.").

---

32. Medellin v. Texas, 128 S. Ct. 1346, 1356 n.2, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190, 210 n.2 (2008); Abagninin v. AMVAC Chem. Corp., 545 F.3d 733, 738 (9th Cir. 2008).

33. Medellin v. Texas, 128 S. Ct. 1346, 1369, 170 L. Ed. 2d 190, 223–24 (2008).

34. See In re Fierro, No. 07-50336, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 11741, at *3 (5th Cir. June 2, 2008) (unpublished).

35. See, e.g., Gikonyo v. State, 102 Ark. App. 223 (Ark. Ct. App. 2008) (affirming conviction because the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations was not domestically enforceable); Graham v. State, 982 So. 2d 43, 33 Fla. L. Weekly D 1001 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2008) (affirming appellant's sentence where the non-self-executing ratifications of an international treaty (ICCPR) could not limit Florida's sentencing power); State v. Bonito, No. 8-144/06-1811, 2008 Iowa App. LEXIS 229 at * 7–8 (Iowa Ct. App. Apr. 9, 2008) (unpublished) (refusing to review appellant's motion claiming that he was not notified of his right to contact the Salvadoran consulate under the Vienna Convention where appellant failed to raise the issue in the district court); Medina v. State, No. 05-07-00330-CR, 2008 Tex. App. LEXIS 2694 (Tex. App. Apr. 16, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting appellant's argument that failure to comply with the Vienna Convention undermined the voluntariness of his plea).

36. Valerie Epps, Introduction: The Medellin v. Texas Symposium: A Case Worthy of Comment, 31 Suffolk Transnat'l L. Rev. 209, 213 (2008).

37. As of October 2007, the countries with bilateral treaties, which should receive notification immediately upon your arrest, included Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Azerbaijan, the Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Brunei, Bulgaria, China (People's Republic), Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Dominica, Fiji, Gambia, Georgia, Ghana, Grenada, Guyana, Hong Kong, Hungary, Jamaica, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Moldova, Mongolia, Nigeria, Philippines, Poland (non-permanent residents only), Romania, Russia, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Tajikistan, Tanzania, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uzbekistan, Zambia, and Zimbabwe. All successor states to the Soviet Union are still covered by an agreement the United States had with the U.S.S.R. British dependencies are covered by the agreement with the United Kingdom. These include Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands, Bermuda, Montserrat, and the Turks and Caicos Islands. For the most recent list of mandatory notification states, see Consular Notification and Access, Part 5: Legal Material, Agreements Pertaining to Consular Functions, available at http://travel.state.gov/law/consular/consular_744.html#agreements (last visited Oct. 20, 2008). The Department of State can provide more specific guidance in particular cases. "Foreign nationals subject to mandatory notification requirements should otherwise be treated like foreign nationals not subject to the mandatory notification have been arrested, the police might tell them anyway. But, the police often forget or do not bother to call the consulate. If you want to talk to your consulate, you should always tell the police.

You should think carefully about whether or not you want to contact your consulate. Some consulates are more helpful than others. Based on what you know about your own government, you may already know whether it would be willing and able to help you. Some consulates will send someone to visit you immediately, contact your family, and help you find a lawyer. Others have only limited office hours and resources and cannot or will not visit prisoners at all. Some governments have allegedly used their consular officers to harass their political opponents.[38] If you are in the United States because you were fleeing persecution in your home country, contacting your home government may not be a good idea.

At the very least, you should try to discuss the idea of contacting your consulate with a lawyer. Many criminal defense lawyers do not know about the Vienna Convention, and they might not know consular assistance is available. Your lawyer may not even know that you are a foreign citizen unless you specifically mention it. If you choose not to contact the consulate, you may want to contact a private organization instead. Some organizations that you may want to contact are listed in JLM Appendix IV.

1. Consulate Assistance with Legal and Non-Legal Matters in Criminal Cases

Good consular officers would assist you in the following ways: visit you in prison (or even at the police precinct); explain to you what is going on; explain to you how the U.S. legal system works; contact your family members for you; help you find a lawyer; help locate your medical, military, or school records; provide you with emergency financial assistance; and make sure that you are being treated well in prison. They would put pressure on the local government to see that your rights are not violated and provide your lawyer with interpreters, consultants, or investigators.[39] Your consulate may be a good place to call if your lawyer requirement. Thus, for example, the foreign national should be informed that notification has been made and advised that he/she may also specifically request consular assistance from his or her consular officials." U.S. Department of State, Consular Notification and Access: Instructions for Federal, State, and Local Law Enforcement and Other Officials Regarding Foreign Nationals in the United States and the Rights of Consular Officials to Assist Them, available at http://travel.state.gov/pdf/CNA_book.pdf (last visited Oct. 20, 2008). The State Department adds, "Privacy concerns or the possibility that a foreign national may have a legitimate fear of persecution or other mistreatment by his/her government may exist in some mandatory notification cases. The notification requirement should still be honored, but it is possible to take precautions regarding the disclosure of information. For example, it may not be necessary to provide information about why a foreign national is in detention." Most importantly, "under no circumstances should any information indicating that a foreign national may have applied for asylum in the United States or elsewhere be disclosed to that person's government." U.S. Department of State, Consular Notification and Access: Instructions for Federal, State, and Local Law Enforcement and Other Officials Regarding Foreign Nationals in the United States and the Rights of Consular Officials to Assist Them, available at http://travel.state.gov/pdf/CNA_book.pdf (last visited Oct. 20, 2008). The Department of State can provide more specific guidance in particular cases.

---

38. United Nations Conference on Consular Relations at 334, UN Doc. A/CONF.25/16, U.N. Sales No. 63.X.2 (1963) (remark of a delegate from the United Kingdom).

39. For example, when a U.S. citizen is arrested abroad, U.S. consular officers are expected to visit that person as soon as possible. U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual § 422.1-1 (Sept. 3, 2004), available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86605.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). This visit provides an opportunity for the consular officer "to explain the legal and judicial procedures of the host government and the detainee's rights under that government at a time when such information is most useful." U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual § 422(f) (Sept. 3, 2004) available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86605.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). The U.S. Embassy may also get local U.S. citizens to volunteer to visit the U.S. citizen in prison. U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual § 422.1-4 (Sept. 3, 2004), available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86605.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). Each U.S. consular post is also required to maintain a list of defense attorneys and to exclude attorneys with bad reputations from the list. U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual §§ 991(a), 993 (Apr. 21, 2009), available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86747.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). If the U.S. citizen's rights are being violated in the prison or in court, the U.S. consulate may make protests to the host government at the local level, and if necessary, at the state or federal level as well. U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual § 426.3 (Sept. 3, 2004), available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86605.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). Throughout the pretrial period, the consular officer is expected to visit the prisoner regularly as a sort of case worker or "case officer." The manual states that the consular officer should become "thoroughly familiar with the specific facts and problems of the prisoner's situation." U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual § 436(1) (Aug. 26, 2004), available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86606.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). This familiarity should help the officer to "become more efficient and responsive to the prisoner's needs" and a "more effective liaison with attorneys, court and prison officials, and prosecutors." U.S. Department of State, 7 Foreign Affairs Manual § 436(2)-(3) (Aug. 26, tells you things that you do not understand, if you are not sure that your lawyer is good or trustworthy, or if you are trying to make an important decision such as whether to accept a plea bargain or whether to testify. For example, if you are not familiar with the plea bargaining system in the United States, your consulate may be able to explain how it differs from the legal system in your home country. If you are suspected of having committed a crime in the United States, the consulate cannot prevent you from being tried for it, but it can help to make sure that you receive a fair trial.

It is usually better to call the consulate with specific questions or simple requests than to call and say "I need help" or "I'm in trouble." Consular officers are not lawyers. They usually cannot give you money for a lawyer and may not take an interest in your case at all unless you are facing very serious charges. However, if you have a specific request—such as "Can you help me contact my mother back home?", "Can you recommend a good attorney?", "Can you help me get my medical records from my home city?", or "Can you find a priest who will visit me in prison?"—the consulate may be able to help you even if you are facing only minor charges.

2. Gathering Mitigating Evidence in Death Penalty Cases

Not all consulates can help all criminal defendants, but many of them are willing to help with death penalty cases. Many countries, particularly Latin American countries, have taken a strong stance against the death penalty and will assist your defense attorney considerably if you are facing a possible death sentence. One of the main services consulates can provide to your lawyer is help gathering mitigating evidence, especially in your country of origin. Mitigating evidence is evidence that can be presented during the sentencing phase of your trial to show why you should not receive the death penalty, either because of positive factors (for example, you care for your ailing grandmother, are a good student, or have never been in trouble before) or because of negative factors (for example, you were physically abused as a child or suffer from a mental disorder).

A consulate may assist defendants in many ways. For example, in various cases involving Mexican citizens, the Mexican Consulate has organized testimony, helped locate and produce witnesses, written letters to judges and prosecutors, submitted affidavits to courts, met with defendants' lawyers to discuss plea bargains, arranged consular visits, verified records and documented family history, and assisted with translation.[40] Mexico, Ecuador, Canada, Paraguay, Honduras, the Dominican Republic, and Germany have also shown a particular interest in death penalty cases and have all tried to assist defendants facing the death penalty during appeals in cases in which the police failed to contact the consulate before trial.[41]

3. Assistance When Your Rights Have Been Violated

Most consulates will help you if your rights are being seriously violated. For example, if you were beaten by the police or prison guards, most consulates will step in to assist you. When a Haitian immigrant was beaten and tortured by members of the New York City Police Department on August 9, 1997, the Haitian

---

2004), available at http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/86606.pdf (last visited Sept. 26, 2009). Again, some consulates are better than others, and how your consular officer behaves will depend upon your home country's laws, not U.S. laws. Some countries do not have a foreign affairs manual like the one used by the U.S. State Department, and some have so few consular officers compared to the number of its nationals in the United States that it is impossible to visit all prisoners.

40. Application Instituting Proceedings Submitted by the Government of the United Mexican States, Case Concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals (Mex. v. U.S.), at 17–19 (Jan. 9, 2003), available at http://www.icj-cij.org/docket/files/128/1913.pdf (last visited Nov. 21, 2009).

41. See, e.g., LaGrand v. Stewart, 133 F.3d 1253 (9th Cir. 1998) (German nationals who were not given consular access before their convictions for murder were assisted in their post-conviction appeals by German consulate); Murphy v. Netherland, 116 F.3d 97 (4th Cir. 1997) (Mexico filed an amicus curiae brief on behalf of Mario Murphy, a Mexican national); Faulder v. Johnson, 81 F.3d 515 (5th Cir. 1996) (Canada submitted a brief on behalf of its citizen Joseph Stanley Faulder); Republic of Paraguay v. Allen, 134 F.3d 622 (4th Cir. 1998) (appeal of suit brought by Republic of Paraguay to vacate Breard's conviction and sentence, challenging the dismissal of the original suit on subject matter jurisdiction grounds); Breard v. Greene, 523 U.S. 371, 118 S. Ct. 1352, 140 L. Ed. 2d 529 (1998) (a separate civil suit brought by the Republic of Paraguay to overturn the conviction of Angel Francisco Breard, which the U.S. Supreme Court then considered along with Breard's habeas petition in the U.S. Supreme Court). In the death penalty case of Carlos Santana, a citizen of the Dominican Republic who was sentenced to death in Texas, the ambassador from the Dominican Republic attempted to meet with the governor of Texas to stop the execution. Ronan Doherty, Note, Foreign Affairs v. Federalism: How State Control of Criminal Law Implicates Federal Responsibility Under International Law, 82 Va. L. Rev. 1281, 1328 (1996).

Consulate helped bring public attention to his situation and helped put pressure on governmental authorities to bring charges against the police officers who were allegedly involved.[42]

4. Assistance with Deportation Proceedings

If you are to be "removed" (deported)[43] from the United States, consulates are usually notified of your status after the removal order becomes final so that they can process your travel papers.[44] If you are facing removal proceedings, you should be notified of your right to consular access and should be allowed to communicate with your consulate before your hearing. This right is guaranteed not only by treaties but also by a U.S. Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") regulation that implements the Vienna Convention and other treaties.[45] If the DHS fails to inform you of this right prior to the removal hearing, some federal courts will find the order of removal invalid. In a case of criminal conviction for illegal reentry into the United States, if the initial removal hearing was conducted in violation of these regulations, courts might even reverse the conviction due to "prejudice." This means that if having access to your consulate could have made a difference in your decision, the courts might reverse your conviction.[46] When you appeal a removal decision, you should always raise this claim of prejudice if your right to consular access was violated. If you do raise the claim, however, you will again probably have to show prejudice—that having access to your consulate could have made a difference in your removal proceeding.[47]

D. When and How to Contact Your Consulate

It is better to contact your consulate before you receive a criminal conviction because the consulate probably will not be able to help you as much if you contact it after you have already been convicted. Several countries have tried to get convictions reversed based on Vienna Convention violations, arguing that the Vienna Convention should work exactly like Miranda. So far, none of these attempts have succeeded. In 1998, a dual Paraguayan-Argentine national, who was convicted of capital murder in 1993, was executed in Virginia despite Virginia's open admission that it had failed to inform the defendant of his rights under the treaty when he was arrested.[48] This situation demonstrates that you should call your consulate sooner rather than later if you think that it can help you. After your conviction, the consulate may still be able to help you in small ways and ensure that your rights are not being further violated, but it probably will not be able to get your conviction reversed. However, it may be better to contact your consulate late rather than not at all.

If you cannot reach a consular office in an emergency, you might want to try your country's Permanent Mission to the United Nations in New York City, though it is not technically the job of a UN Permanent Mission to provide consular assistance. Not all countries listed in Appendix A are signatories to the Vienna Convention, and therefore follow it, or any other consular treaty with the United States, although most of them are.

All phone numbers and addresses listed in Appendix A refer to consulates and/or embassies (unless noted otherwise). Mail should be addressed to "Consulate [or Embassy] of [Your Country]," followed by the street address. If you decide to contact your consulate, it usually will not make a difference whether you

---

42. Interview with consular officer, Haitian Consulate, in New York, N.Y. (Apr. 7, 1998).

43. See JLM Supplement Chapter 1, "The Immigration Consequences of Criminal Activity" for an explanation of these terms and of immigration law and procedure in general.

44. Interview with Jamaican Deputy Consul-General, Jamaican Consulate, in New York, N.Y. (Apr. 7, 1998).

45. DHS immigration agents are required to comply with 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(e) (2009), which states, "Every detained alien shall be notified that he or she may communicate with the consular or diplomatic officers of the country of his or her nationality in the United States." It adds, "When notifying consular or diplomatic officials, Service officers shall not reveal the fact that any detained alien has applied for asylum or withholding of removal." 8 C.F.R. § 236.1(e) (2009). For information on similar regulations governing the FBI, DEA, U.S. Marshals, and other Department of Justice officials, see footnote 5 of this Chapter.

46. See, e.g., United States v. Rangel-Gonzales, 617 F.2d 529, 533 (9th Cir. 1980) (finding prejudice resulting from the failure of the United States to advise appellant of his right to consult the Mexican Consulate).

47. See, e.g., Waldron v. INS, 17 F.3d 511, 518–19 (2d Cir. 1993) (holding that though the INS had not followed its own regulations regarding the petitioner's right to communicate with diplomatic officers of his native country, this failure had not resulted in prejudice to the rights that the regulations were meant to protect); United States v. Calderon-Medina, 591 F.2d 529, 532 (9th Cir. 1979) (holding that a regulatory violation by the INS would render a deportation unlawful only if the violation prejudiced the rights of the aliens who were protected by the regulation).

48. Breard v. Greene, 523 U.S. 371, 377, 118 S. Ct. 1352, 1355, 140 L. Ed. 2d 529, 538 (1998).

contact the embassy or the consulate; diplomats and consular officers will usually share information and assist each other, especially in emergencies.

Most countries maintain an embassy with both diplomatic and consular officers in Washington, D.C. in addition to the Consul General's main office (usually located in New York City) and your country's Permanent Mission to the UN. Some countries that have a large number of nationals living in the United States—for example Mexico—may also have regional consular offices in other cities. Some very small countries, such as Belize, may only have an embassy in Washington, D.C., with no other offices at all (except for the Permanent Mission to the UN). Other countries—namely Iran and Cuba—do not carry on diplomatic relations with the United States and, therefore, have neither an embassy nor a consulate. However, most countries do maintain a Permanent Mission to the UN.

There are also many private organizations that help people of particular nationalities, perhaps even more so than your consulate. You should keep in mind, however, that these private organizations (unlike your consulate) do not have any particular right to communicate with you or visit you under the Vienna Convention. They can certainly communicate with you in prison, just like any friend or relative, but they will probably not be able to visit you at the police station and will not have the same right of access as your lawyer. For further information about your right to communicate while in prison, see Chapter 19 of the JLM. For additional information about such organizations, check JLM Appendix IV.

E. Conclusion

If you are a foreign national, you have the right to contact your local consulate or embassy as well as the right to have regular communications with consular officers from your native country. Under the Vienna Convention, the police must inform you of your right to consular access. Also, if you request it, the official who is holding you in custody must ensure that the nearest consulate or embassy is notified of your arrest without delay. The consular officer must be allowed to call, write, or visit you in prison in order to answer your questions and offer you whatever assistance he or she wishes. If you chose to contact your consulate, you should do so as soon as possible. A list of embassies, consulates, and private organizations that assist foreign nationals can be found in Appendix A of this Chapter.

APPENDIX A

LIST OF CONSULATES, EMBASSIES, MISSIONS, AND PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS

AFGHANISTAN
- Embassy: 2341 Wyoming Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-6410/6414; FAX (202) 483-6488
- Consulate – New York: 360 Lexington Ave., Floor 11, New York, NY 10017; (212) 972-2277; FAX (212) 972-9046
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11040 Santa Monica Blvd., Suite 300, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 473-6583; FAX (310) 473-6775
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 360 Lexington Ave., 11th Floor, New York, NY 10017 (212) 972-1212/1213; FAX (212) 972-1216
- Islamic Assoc. of Afghan Students: P.O. Box 1946, Los Angeles, CA 90078

ALBANIA
- Embassy: 2100 S St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 223-4942; FAX (202) 628-7342
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 320 E. 79th St. New York, NY 10021; (212) 249-2059/5654/5631/0842; FAX (212) 535-2917

ALGERIA
- Embassy: 2118 Kalorama Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 265-2800; FAX (202) 667-2174
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 326 E. 48th St., New York, NY, 10017; (212) 750-1960/1962/1965/1966; FAX (212) 759-5274/9538

ANGOLA
- Embassy: 2100-2108 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 785-1156; FAX (202) 785-1258
- Consulate – New York: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 552, New York, NY 10017; (212) 223-3588

ANTIGUA and BARBUDA
- Embassy: 3216 New Mexico Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20016; (202) 362-5122; FAX (202) 362-5225
- Consulate – Miami: Ingraham Building, 25 Southeast 2nd Ave., Suite 300, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 381-6762; FAX (305) 381-7908
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 3 Dag Condominiums, 305 E. 47th St., 6th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 541-4117; FAX (212) 757-1607

ARGENTINA
- Embassy: 1600 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 238-6400; FAX (202) 332-3171
- Consulate – New York: 12 West 56th St., New York NY 10019; (212) 603-0400; FAX (212) 541-7746
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 5055 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 210, Los Angeles, CA 90036; (323) 954-9155; FAX (323) 934-9076
- Consulate – Miami: 800 Brickell Ave., Penthouse 1, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 373-1889/4705/7794; FAX (305) 371-7108 and (305) 373-1598
- Consulate – Atlanta: 245 Peachtree Center Ave., Suite 2101, Atlanta, GA 30303; (404) 880-0805; FAX (404) 880-0806
- Consulate – Chicago: 205 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 4208/4209, Chicago, IL 60601-5914; (312) 819-2610; FAX (312) 819-2612
- Consulate – Houston: 2200 West Loop South, Suite 1025, Houston, TX 77027; (713) 871-8935
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One United Nations Plaza, 25th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 688-6300; FAX (212) 980-8395

ARMENIA
- Embassy: 2225 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 319-1976; FAX (202) 319-2982
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 50 N. La Cienega Blvd., Suite 210, Beverly Hills, CA 90211; (310) 657-6102; FAX (310) 657-7419
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 119 E. 36th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 686-9079; FAX (212) 686-3934

AUSTRALIA
- Embassy: 1601 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 797-3000; FAX (202) 797-3168
- Consulate General: 150 E. 42nd St., 34th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 351-6500; FAX (212) 351-6501
- Consulate – Los Angeles: Century Plaza Towers, 2029 Century Park East, 31st Floor, Los Angeles, CA 90067; (310) 229-2300; FAX (310) 229-2380
- Consulate – San Francisco: 575 Market St., Suite 1800, San Francisco, CA 94105; (415) 536-1970; FAX (415) 536-1982
- Consulate – Houston: 4623 Feagan St., Houston, TX, 7707; (713) 782-6009; FAX (713) 862-8364
- Consulate – Denver: 9200 West Cross Dr., Suite 100, Littleton, CO 80123; (303) 321-2234; FAX (303) 973-9938
- Consulate – Honolulu: 1000 Bishop St., Penthouse, Honolulu, HI 96813; (808) 524-5050; FAX (808) 531-5142
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 150 E. 42nd St., 33rd floor, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 351-6600; FAX (212) 351-6610

AUSTRIA
- Embassy: 3524 International Court, NW, Washington, D.C. 20008-3035; (202) 895-6700; FAX (202) 895-6750
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11859 Wilshire Blvd., Suite # 501, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 444-9310; FAX (310) 477-9897
- Consulate – Chicago: Wrigley Building, 400 North Michigan Ave., Suite 707, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 222-1515; FAX (312) 222-4113
- Consulate – New York: 31 E. 69th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 737-6400 FAX (212) 772-8926
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 600 Third Ave., 31st Floor, New York, NY 10016; (917) 542-8400; FAX (212) 949-1840

AZERBAIJAN
- Embassy: 2741 34th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 337-3500; FAX (202) 337-5911
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1410, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 444-9101; FAX (310) 477-4860
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 560, New York, NY 10017; (212) 371-2559/2832/2721; FAX (212) 371-2784

BAHAMAS
- Embassy: 2220 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 319-2660; FAX (202) 319-2668
- Consulate – Miami: Ingraham Building, 25 Southeast 2nd Ave., Suite 818, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 373-6295; FAX (305) 373-6312
- Consulate – New York: 231 E. 46th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-6420; FAX (212) 688-5926
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 231 E. 46th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-6925; FAX (212) 759-2135
- The Bahamian consulate, if notified of your arrest, will immediately visit you at the police precinct, take down your name, contact your family back home, if desired, and provide you with other assistance if needed. The consulate encourages you to register with it and to notify it if you are in trouble.

BAHRAIN
- Embassy: 3502 International Dr., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 342-1111; FAX (202) 362-2192
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 2nd Ave., 14th & 15th Floors, New York, NY 10017; (212) 223-6200; FAX (212) 319-0687

BANGLADESH
- Embassy: 3510 International Dr., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 244-0183; FAX (202) 244-2771
- Consulate – New York: 211 E. 43rd St., Suite 502, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-6767; FAX (212) 682-9211
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 4201 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 605, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (323) 932-0100; FAX (323) 932-9703
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 227 E. 45th, 14th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 867-3434; FAX (212) 972-4038

BARBADOS
- Embassy: 2144 Wyoming Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 939-9200; FAX (202) 332-7467
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3440 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1207, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 380-2198; FAX (213) 384-2763
- Consulate – San Francisco: 442 Post St., Suite 800, San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 421-8789
- Consulate – New York: 800 2nd Ave., 2nd Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 551-4325/4327; FAX (212) 867-8899
- Consulate – Miami: 150 Alhambra Circle, Suite 1000, Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 442-1994; FAX (305) 567-2844
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., 2nd floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 551-4300; FAX (212) 986-1030

BELARUS, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1619 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 986-1604; FAX (202) 986-1805
- Consulate – New York: 708 3rd Ave., 20th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 682-5392; FAX (212) 682-5491
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 136 E. 67th St., 4th Floor, New York, NY 10065; (212) 535-3420; FAX (212) 734-4810

BELGIUM
- Embassy: 3330 Garfield St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 333-6900; FAX (202) 338-4960
- Consulate – New York: 1065 Ave. of the Americas, 22nd Floor, New York, NY 10018; (212) 586-5110; FAX (212) 582-9657
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 6100 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1200, Los Angeles, CA 90048; (323) 857-1244; FAX (323) 936-2564
- Consulate – Atlanta: 230 Peachtree St., NW, Suite 2710, Atlanta, GA 30303; (404) 659-2150; FAX (404) 659-8474.
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 885 2nd Ave., 41st Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 378-6300; FAX (212) 681-7618

BELIZE
- Embassy: 2535 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-9636; FAX (202) 332-6888
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 4801 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 250, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (323) 634-9900; FAX (323) 634-9903
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 675 3rd Ave., Suite 1911, New York, NY 10017; (212) 593-0999; FAX (212) 593-0932

BENIN, PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2124 Kalorama Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 232-6656; FAX (202) 265-1996
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 125 E. 38th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 684-1339; FAX (212) 684-2058

BHUTAN, the Kingdom of
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 343 E. 43rd St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 682-2268; FAX (212) 661-0551

BOLIVIA
- Embassy: 3014 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-4410; FAX (202) 328-3712
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3701 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1065, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 388-0475; FAX (213) 384-6272
- Consulate – Atlanta (honorary): 1401 Peachtree St. NE, Suite 240, Atlanta, GA 30309; (404) 522-0777; FAX (404) 873-3335
- Consulate – New York: 211 E. 43rd St., Suite 702, New York, NY 10017; (212) 687-0530; FAX (212) 687-0532
- Consulate – Miami: 700 S. Royal Poinciana Blvd., Suite 505, Miami Springs, FL 33166; (305) 358-6303; FAX (305) 358-6305
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 801 Second Ave., New York, NY 10017; (212) 682-8132; FAX (212) 687-4642

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA
- Embassy: 2109 E St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20037; (202) 337-1500; FAX (202) 337-1502
- Consulate – Chicago: 737 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 820, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 951-1245; FAX (312) 951-1043
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 585, New York, NY 10017; (212) 751-9015; FAX (212) 751-9019

BOTSWANA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1531-3 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 244-4990; FAX (202) 244-4164
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 154 E. 46th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 889-2277; FAX (212) 725-5061

BRAZIL
- Embassy: 3006 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 238-2805; FAX (202) 238-2827
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 8484 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 711, Beverly Hills, CA 90211; (323) 651-2664; FAX (323) 651-1274
- Consulate – San Francisco: 300 Montgomery St., Suite 900, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 981-8170; FAX (415) 981-3628
- Consulate – Miami: 80 SW 8th St., 26th Floor, Miami, FL 33130; (305) 285-6200; FAX (305) 285-6240
- Consulate – Boston: 20 Park Plaza, Suite 1420, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 542-4000; FAX (617) 542-4318
- Consulate – New York: 1185 6th Ave., 21st floor, New York, NY 10036; (917) 777-7777; FAX (212) 827-0225
- Consulate – Houston: 1233 West Loop South, Park Tower North, Suite 1150, Houston, TX 77027; (713) 961-3063; FAX (713) 961-3070
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 747 3rd Ave., 9th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 372-2600; FAX (212) 371-5716

BRUNEI
- Embassy: 3520 International Court, NW, Washington D.C. 20008; (202) 237-1838; FAX (202) 885-0560
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 771 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017; (212) 697-3465; FAX (212) 697-9889

BULGARIA, PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1621 22nd St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 387-0174; FAX (202) 234-7973
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 11 E. 84th St., New York, NY 10028; (212) 737-4790; FAX (212) 472-9865

BURKINA FASO
- Embassy: 2340 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-5577; FAX (202) 667-1882
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 326, New York, NY 10017; (212) 308-4720; FAX (212) 308-4690

BURMA [See MYANMAR]

BURUNDI, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2233 Wisconsin Ave., NW, Suite 212, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 342-2574; FAX (202) 342-2578
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 336 E. 45th St., 12th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 499-0001; FAX (212) 499-0006

CAMBODIA
- Embassy: 4530 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20011; (202) 726-7742; FAX (202) 726-8381
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 420, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 223-0676/0435/0530; FAX (212) 223-0425

CAMEROON, UNITED REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2349 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 265-8790; FAX (202) 387-3826
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 22 E. 73rd St., New York, NY, 10021; (212) 794-2295; FAX (212) 249-0533

CANADA
- Embassy: 501 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20001; (202) 682-1740; FAX (202) 682-7726
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 550 S. Hope St., 9th Floor, Los Angeles, CA 90071; (213) 346-2700; FAX (213) 346-2767
- Consulate – San Francisco: 580 California St., 14th Floor, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 834-3180; FAX (415) 834-3189
- Consulate – Denver: 1625 Broadway, Suite 2600, Denver, CO 80202; (303) 626-0640; FAX (303) 572-1158
- Consulate – Miami: 200 S. Biscayne Blvd., Suite 1600, Miami,FL 33131; (305) 579-1600; FAX (305) 374-6774
- Consulate – Atlanta: 1175 Peachtree St., N.E., 100 Colony Square, Suite 1700, Atlanta, GA 30361; (404) 532-2000; FAX (404) 532-2050
- Consulate – Chicago: Two Prudential Plaza, 180 North Stetson Ave., Suite 2400, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 616-1860; FAX (312) 616-1877
- Consulate – Boston: 3 Copley Pl., Suite 400, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 262-3760; FAX (617) 262-3415
- Consulate – Detroit: 600 Renaissance Ctr., Suite 1100, Detroit, MI 48243-1798; (313) 567-2340; FAX (313) 567-2164
- Consulate – Minneapolis: 701 4th Ave. S., Suite 900, Minneapolis, MN 55415-1899; (612) 333-4641; FAX (612) 332-4061
- Consulate – Buffalo: 1 HSBC Centre, Suite 3000, Buffalo, NY 14203; (716) 858-9500; FAX (716) 852-4340

- Consulate – New York: 1251 Ave. of the Americas, New York, NY 10020; (212) 596-1628; FAX (212) 596-1790
- Consulate – Dallas: 750 N. St. Paul Pl., Suite 1700, Dallas, TX 75201; (214) 922-9806; FAX (214) 922-9815
- Consulate – Seattle: 1501 4th Ave., Suite 600, Seattle, WA 98101; (206) 443-1777; FAX (206) 443-9662
- Consulate – San Francisco: 580 California St., 14th Floor, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 834-3180; FAX (415) 834-3189
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One Dag Hammarskjold Plaza, 885 2nd Ave., 14th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 848-1100; FAX (212) 848-1128/1192/1195
- John Howard Society of Canada, 809 Blackburn Mews, Kingston, ON K7P 2N6 Canada; (613) 384-6272; FAX (613) 384-1847
- The John Howard Society of Canada is a support group that provides social services for prisoners in Canada and ex-offenders returning to Canada from U.S. prisons. Although they do not provide legal services, they will provide referrals.
- Elizabeth Fry Society of Ottawa, 311-211 Bronson Ave. Suite 301, Ottawa, ON K1R 6H5 Canada; (613) 237-7427; FAX (613) 237-8312
- The Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies is a nonprofit social service agency that provides a wide range of programs including direct services for and about women in conflict with the law.

CAPE VERDE, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 3415 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 965-6820; FAX (202) 965-1207
- Consulate – Boston: 607 Boylston St., 4th Floor, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 353-0014; FAX 617-859-9798
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 27 E. 69th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 472-0333; FAX (212) 794-1398

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

- Embassy: 1618 22nd St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-7800/7801; FAX (202) 332-9893

CHAD, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 2002 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 462-4009; FAX (202) 265-1937
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 211 E. 43rd St., Suite 1703, New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-0980; FAX (212) 986-0152

CHILE

- Embassy: 1732 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 785-1746; FAX (202) 887-5579
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 6100 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1240, Los Angeles, CA 90048; (323) 933-3697; FAX (323) 933-3842
- Consulate – San Francisco: 870 Market St., Suite 1058, San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 982-7662; (415) 982-2384
- Consulate – Miami: 800 Brickell Ave., Suite 1230, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 373-8624; FAX (305) 379-6613
- Consulate – Chicago: 1415 N. Dayton St., 2nd Floor, Chicago, IL 60642; (312) 654-8780; FAX (312) 654-8948
- Consulate – New York: 866 United Nations Plz., Suite 601, New York, NY 10017; (212) 980-3707, (212) 980-3366, (212) 980-3504, (212) 355-0612; FAX (212) 888-5288
- Consulate – Houston: 1300 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 1130, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 621-5853, (713) 963-9066; FAX (713) 621 8672
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 885 2nd Ave., 40th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (917) 322-6800; FAX (917) 322-6891

CHINA, PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 3505 International Pl., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 495-2266; FAX (202) 495-2138
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 443 Shatto Pl., Los Angeles, CA 90020; (213) 807-8088; FAX (213) 807-8091
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1450 Laguna St., San Francisco, CA 94115; (415) 674-2900; FAX (415) 563-0494
- Consulate – Chicago: 100 W. Erie St., Chicago, IL 60654; Tel: (312) 803-0095; FAX (312) 803-0110
- Consulate – New York: 520 12th Ave., New York, NY 10036; Tel: (212) 244-9456, (202) 244-9392; FAX (212) 465-1708
- Consulate – Houston: 3417 Montrose Blvd., Houston, TX 77006; ; Tel: (713) 520-1462; FAX (713) 521-3064
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 350 E. 35th St., New York, NY, 10016; (212) 655-6100; FAX (212) 634-7626

COLOMBIA
- Embassy: 2118 Leroy Pl., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 387-8338; FAX (202) 232-8643
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 8383 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 420, Beverly Hills, CA 90211; (323) 653-9863/4299; FAX (323) 653-2964
- Consulate – San Francisco: 595 Market St., Suite 2130, San Francisco, CA 94105; (415) 495-7195/96; FAX (415) 777-3731
- Consulate – Miami: 280 Aragon Ave., Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 448-5558/4179, (305) 441-1235; FAX (305) 441-9537
- Consulate – Atlanta: 5901 B Peachtree Dunwoody Rd., Suite 405, Atlanta, GA 30328; (770) 668-0451/0512/0552; FAX (770) 668-0763
- Consulate – Boston: 535 Boylston St., 11th Floor, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 536-6222; FAX (617) 536-9372
- Consulate – New York: 10 E. 46th St. New York, NY 10017; (212) 798-9000; FAX (212) 972-1725
- Consulate – Houston: 5851 San Felipe, Suite 300, Houston, TX 77057; (713) 527-8919/9093; FAX (713) 529-3395
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 140 E. 57th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 355-7776; FAX (212) 371-2813

COMOROS, FEDERAL AND ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 420 E. 50th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 972-8010; FAX (212) 983-4712
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 418, New York, NY 10017; (212) 750-1637; FAX (212) 750-1657, 715-0699

CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 4891 Colorado Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20011; (202) 726-5500; FAX (202) 726-1860
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 511, New York, NY 10017; (212) 319-8061; FAX (212) 319-8232

CONGO, REPUBLIC OF [CONGO-BRAZZAVILLE]
- Embassy: 4891 Colorado Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20011; (202) 726-5500; FAX (202) 726-1860
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 14 E. 65th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 750-1637; FAX (212) 750-1657, 715-0699

COSTA RICA
- Embassy: 2114 S St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 234-2945/2946; FAX (202) 265-4795
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 1605 West Olympic Blvd. Suite 400, Los Angeles, CA 90015; (213) 380-7915/6031; FAX (213) 380-5639.
- Consulate – San Francisco: P. O. Box 7643, Fremont, CA 94537; (510) 790-0785; FAX (510) 792-5249
- Consulate – Miami: 1101 Brickell Ave., Suite 401-N, Miami, Florida 33131; (305) 871-7487/7485; FAX (305) 871-0860.
- Consulate – Chicago: 203 N. Wabash Ave., Suite 702 , Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 263-2772; FAX (312) 263-5807

- Consulate – New York: 225 West 34th St. Penn Plaza Building, Suite 1202, NY 10122 ; (212) 509-3066/3067; FAX (212) 509-3068
- Consulate – Puerto Rico: 1413 Avenida Fernández Junco, Suite 2-D, San Juan, Puerto Rico 00909; (787) 723-6227; FAX (787) 723-6226
- Consulate – Houston: 3000 Wilcrest, Suite 112, Houston, TX 77042; (713) 266-0484; FAX (713) 266-1527
- Consulate – Atlanta: 1870 The Exchange, Suite 100, Atlanta, GA 30339; (770) 951-7025; FAX (770) 951-7073
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 211 E. 43rd St., Room 903, New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-6373; FAX (212) 986-6842

CÔTE D'IVOIRE
- Embassy: 2424 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 797-0300
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 46 E. 74th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 717-5555; FAX (212) 717-4492.

CROATIA
- Embassy: 2343 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 588-5899; FAX (202) 588-8936
- Consulate – New York: 369 Lexington Ave. #11, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-3066; FAX (212) 599-3106
- Croatian Center, 502 W. 41st St., New York, NY 10036; (212) 563-3395
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., 19th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-1585; FAX (212) 986-2011

CUBA
- Cuban Interests Section: 2630 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 797-8518; FAX (202) 797-8521
- Consular Section: 2639 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 769-8609/8610/8615; FAX (202) 986-7283
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 315 Lexington Ave., New York, NY, 10016; (212) 689-7215/7216/7217; FAX (212) 779-1697

CYPRUS, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2211 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 462-5772/0873; FAX (202) 483-6710
- Consulate – New York: 13 E. 40th St., 5th Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 686-6016/6017; FAX (212) 447-1988
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 13 E. 40th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 481-6023/6024/6025; FAX (212) 685-7316

CZECH REPUBLIC
- Embassy: 3900 Spring of Freedom St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 274-9100; FAX (202) 966-8540
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 1109-1111 Madison Ave., New York, NY 10028; (646) 981-4000; FAX (626) 981-4099;
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 10990 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1100, Los Angeles, CA 90024-4879; (310) 473-0889; FAX (310) 473-9813; E-mail: losangeles@embassy.mzv.cz

DENMARK
- Embassy: 3200 Whitehaven St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 234-4300; FAX (202) 328-1470
- Consulate – Baltimore: Redwood Tower, 217 E. Redwood St., Baltimore, MD 21202-3316; (410) 685-6711; FAX (410) 625-3801
- Consulate – Boston: 60 State St., Boston, MA 02109; (617) 542-1415, FAX (617) 482-6201
- Consulate – Chicago: 211 East Ontario, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 787-8780; FAX (213) 787-8744
- Consulate – Dallas: 2100 McKinney Ave., Suite 700, Dallas, TX 75201; (214) 661-8399; FAX (214) 661-8036
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 10877 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1402, Los Angeles, CA 90024; (310) 481-0391; FAX (310) 481-0390

- Consulate – Miami: 3107 Stirling Rd., Suite 101, Fort Lauderdale, Fl 33312-8500; (954) 322-0065; FAX (954) 322-0064
- Consulate – New Orleans: 400 N. Peters St., #203, New Orleans, LA 70130; (504) 586-8300; FAX (504) 523-1967
- Consulate – San Juan, Puerto Rico: 360 San Francisco St., San Juan, PR 00901; (787) 725-2532; FAX (787) 724-0339
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 1 Dag Hammerskjold Plaza, 885 2nd Ave., 18th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 308-7009; FAX (212) 308-3384

DJIBOUTI, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 1156 15th St., NW, Suite 515, Washington, D.C. 20005; (202) 331-0270; FAX (202) 331-0302
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 4011, New York, NY 10017; (212) 753-3163; FAX (212) 223-1276

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

- Embassy: 1715 22nd St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-6280; FAX (202) 265-8057
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1516 Oak St., Suite 321, Alameda, CA 94501; (510) 864-7777; FAX (510) 864-2222
- Consulate – Miami: 1038 Brickell Ave., Miami, FL 33131; (305) 358-3220; FAX (305) 358-2318
- Consulate – Chicago: 8700 West Bryan Maur, President's Tower Suite 81, Chicago, IL 60631; (773) 714-4924; FAX 773) 714-4926
- Consulate – New Orleans: World Trade Center, 2 Canal St., Suite 2100, New Orleans, LA 70130; (504) 522-1843; FAX (504) 522-1007
- Consulate – Boston: The Statler Building, 20 Park Plaza, Suite 601, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 482-2168; FAX (617) 482-8133
- Consulate – New York: 1501 BRd.way, Suite 410, New York, NY 10036; (212) 768-2480/81/82/83; FAX (212) 768-2677
- Consulate – Puerto Rico: Calle Mckinley #30 Oeste, 2nd Piso, Mayagüez, Puerto Rico 00680; (787) 833-4756 / 757-3170; FAX (787) 832-4066
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 144 E. 44th St., 4th Floor, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 867-0833/34; FAX (212) 986-4694

EAST TIMOR

- Embassy: 4201 Connecticut Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 966-3202; FAX (202)966-3205
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 2nd Ave., 9th Floor, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 759-3675; FAX (212) 759-4196

ECUADOR

- Embassy: 2535 15th St., NW Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 234-7200; FAX 202) 667-3482
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 8484 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 540, Beverly Hills, CA 90211; (323) 658-5146/1068; FAX (323) 658-1198
- Consulate – San Francisco: 235 Montgomery St., Suite 944, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 982-1819/1821; FAX (415) 982-1833
- Consulate – Miami: 1101 Brickell Ave., Suite M-102, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 373 8520/8536; FAX (305) 539-8313
- Consulate – Chicago: 30 S. Michigan Ave. Suite 204, Chicago, IL 60603; (312) 338-1002/1003; FAX (312) 338-1502
- Consulate – New York: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 600, New York, NY 10017; Phone(212) 808-0170 /0214; FAX (212) 808-0188
- Consulate – Houston: 4200 Westheimer Rd., Suite 218, Houston, TX 77027; (713) 572-8731; FAX (713) 572-8732
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Room 516, New York, NY 10017; (212) 935-1680/1681; FAX (212) 935-1835

EGYPT, ARAB REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 3521 International Ct., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 895-5400; FAX (202) 244-4319
- Consulate – San Francisco: 3001 Pacific Ave., San Francisco, CA 94115; (415) 346-9700/9702; FAX (415) 346-9480
- Consulate – New York: 1110 2nd Ave., Suite 201, New York, NY 10022; (212) 759-7120; FAX (212) 308-7643
- Consulate – Houston: 1990 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 2180, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 961-4915; FAX 713) 961-3868
- Consulate – Chicago: 500 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 1900 Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 828-9162; FAX (312) 828-9167
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 304 E. 44th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 503-0300; FAX (212) 949-5999

EL SALVADOR
- Embassy: 1400 16th St., NW, Suite 100, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 265-9671/9672; FAX (202) 232-3763
- Consulate – Chicago: 104 South Michigan Ave., Suite 816, Chicago, IL 60603; (312) 332-1393; FAX (312) 332-4446
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3450 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 250, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 383-5776/8580/8364/6134; FAX (213) 383-8599
- Consulate – San Francisco: 507 Polk St., Suite 280, San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 771-8524/8530/8531; FAX (415) 771-8522
- Consulate – Miami: 2600 Douglas Rd., Suite 104 (Douglas Centre), Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 774-0840; FAX (305) 774-0850
- Consulate – New York: 46 Park Ave., New York, NY 10016; (212) 889-3608; FAX (212) 679-2835
- Consulate – Houston: 1702 Hillendahl Blvd., Houston, TX 77055; (713) 270-6239; FAX (713) 270-9683
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 46 Park Ave., New York, NY 10016; (212) 679-1616/1617; FAX (212) 725-3467

EQUATORIAL GUINEA
- Embassy: 2020 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 518-5700; FAX (202) 518-5252
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 242 East 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 223-2324; FAX (212) 223-2366

ERITREA
- Embassy: 1708 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 319-1991; FAX (202) 319-1304
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., 18th Floor, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 687-3390; FAX (212) 687-3138

ESTONIA
- Embassy: 2131 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 588-0101; FAX (202) 588-0108; e-mail info@estemb.org
- Consulate – New York: 600 3rd Ave., 26th Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 883-0636; FAX (212) 883-0648
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 600 3rd Ave., 26th Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 883-0640; FAX (212) 883-0648

ETHIOPIA
- Embassy: 3506 International Dr., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 364-1200; FAX (202) 587-0195
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 Second Ave., 3rd Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-1830; FAX (212) 754-0360
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3460 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 308, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 365-6651
- Consulate – New York: 866 2nd Ave., Floor 3, New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-1830

FIJI
- Embassy: 2000 M St.., NW, Suite 710, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 466-8320; FAX (202) 466-8325
- Permanent Mission to the UN; 630 Third Ave., 7th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 687-4130; FAX (212) 687-3963

FINLAND
- Embassy: 3301 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 298-5800; FAX (202) 298-6030
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 1801 Century Park East, Suite 2100, Los Angeles, CA 90067; (310) 203-9903; FAX (310) 203-9186
- Consulate – New York: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 250, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 750-4400; FAX (212) 750-4418

FRANCE
- Embassy: 4101 Reservoir Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 944-6000; FAX (202) 944-6166
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 245 E. 47th St., 44th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 308-5700; FAX (212) 421-6889
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 10990 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 300, Los Angeles, CA 90024; (310) 235-3200; FAX (310) 479-4813
- Consulate – San Francisco: 540 Bush St., San Francisco, CA 94108; (415) 397-4330; FAX (415) 433-8357
- Consulate – Miami: Espirito Santo Plaza, Suite 1050, 1395 Brickell Ave., Miami, FL 33131; (305) 403-4150; FAX (305) 403-4151
- Consulate – Atlanta: 3475 Piedmont Rd., NE, Suite 1840, Atlanta, GA 30305; (404) 495-1660; FAX (404) 495-1661
- Consulate – Chicago: 205 North Michigan Ave., Suite 3700, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 326-5200; FAX (312) 327-5201
- Consulate – Boston: 31 St. James Ave., Park Square Building, Suite 750, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 832-4400; FAX (617) 542-8054
- Consulate – New York: 934 5th Ave., New York, NY 10021; (212) 606-3600; FAX (212) 606-3620
- Consulate – Houston: 777 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 600, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 572-2799; FAX (713) 572-2911
- Consulate – New Orleans: 1340 Poydras St., Suite 1710, New Orleans, LA 70112; (504) 523-5772

GABON
- Embassy: 2034 20th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 797-1000; FAX (202) 332-0668
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 18 E. 41st St., 9th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 686-9720; FAX (212) 689-5769
- Consulate – New York: 18 E. 41st St., 9th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 683- 7371

GAMBIA
- Embassy: 1156 15th St., NW, Suite 905, Washington, D.C. 20005; (202) 785-1399; FAX (202) 785-1430
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 Second Ave., Suite 400F, New York, NY 10017; (212) 949-6640; FAX (212) 856-9820

GEORGIA
- Embassy: 2209 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington D.C. 20008; (202) 387-2390; FAX (202) 387-0864
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One United Nations Plaza, 26th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 759-1949; FAX (212) 759-1832
- Consulate – New York: 144 E. 41st, 5th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 867-3617/3272; FAX (212) 867-3654

GERMANY

- Embassy: 4645 Reservoir Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007-1998; (202) 298-4000; FAX (202)298-4249
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 6222 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 500, Los Angeles, CA 90048; (323) 930-2703; FAX (323) 930-2805
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1960 Jackson St., San Francisco, CA 94109; (415) 775-1061; FAX (415) 775-0187
- Consulate – Miami: 100 N. Biscayne Blvd. Suite 2200, Miami, FL 33132; (305) 358-0290; FAX (305) 358-0307
- Consulate – Atlanta: Marquis Two Tower, 285 Peachtree Center Ave., Suite 901, NE, Atlanta, GA 30303; (404) 659-4760; FAX (404) 577-2719
- Consulate – Chicago: 676 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 3200, Chicago, IL 60611; (404) 577-2719; FAX (312) 202-0466
- Consulate – Boston: 3 Copley Pl., Suite 500, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 369-4900; FAX (617) 369-4940
- Consulate – Houston: 1330 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 1850, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 627-7770; FAX (713) 627-0506
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 871 UN Plaza, New York, NY 10017; (212) 940-0400; FAX (212) 940-0402

GHANA

- Embassy: 3512 International Dr., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 686-4520/21/22/23/24/25/26; FAX (202) 686-4527
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 19 E. 47th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 832-1300; FAX (212) 751-6743

GREECE

- Embassy: 2217 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 939-1300; FAX (202) 939-1324
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 Second Ave., 13th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 888-6900; FAX (212) 888-4440
- Consulate – New York: 69 E. 79th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 988-5500; FAX (212) 734-8492
- Consulate – Chicago: 650 North St. Clair St., Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 335-3915; FAX (312) 335-3958
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 12424 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 800, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 826-5555; FAX (310) 826-8670
- Consulate – San Francisco: 2441 Gough St. San Francisco, CA 94123; (415) 775-2102; FAX (415) 776-6815
- Consulate – Atlanta: 3340 Peachtree Rd., Suite 1670, NE, Atlanta, GA 30326; (404) 261-3313; FAX (404) 262-2798
- Consulate – Boston: 86 Beacon St. Boston, MA 02108; (617) 523-0100; FAX (617) 523-0511
- Consulate – Tampa: 601 Bayshore Bl., Suite 800, Tampa, FL 33606; (813) 865-0200; FAX (813) 865-0206
- Consulate – Houston: 520 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 450, Houston, TX 77027; (713) 840-7522; FAX (713) 840-0614
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 2nd Ave., 13th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 888-6900; (212) 479-1300; FAX (212) 888-4440

GRENADA

- Embassy: 1701 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 265-2561; FAX (202) 265-2468
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400-K, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-0301

GUATEMALA

- Embassy: 2220 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 745-4952; FAX (202) 745-1908
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 1625 W. Olympic Blvd., #1000, Los Angeles, CA 90015; (213) 365-9251/9252/1886; FAX (213) 365-9245
- Consulate – San Francisco: 785 Market St. #400, San Francisco, CA 94103; (415) 896-9181; FAX (415) 788-5653

- Consulate – Miami: 1101 Brickell Ave. #1003S, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 679-9945/9946/9947/9948 ext. 10, 14, 15; FAX (305) 679-9983
- Consulate – Chicago: 203 N. Wabash Ave. #910, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 332-1587; FAX (312) 332-4256
- Consulate – New York: 57 Park Ave., New York, NY 10016; (212) 686-3837; FAX (212) 447-6947
- Consulate – Houston: 3013 Fountain View, Suite 210, Houston, TX 77057; (713) 953-9531; FAX (713) 953-9383
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 57 Park Ave., New York, NY 10016; (212) 679-4760; FAX (212) 685-8741

GUINEA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2112 Leroy Pl., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 986-4300; FAX (202) 986-4800
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 140 E. 39th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 687-8115/8116/8117; FAX (212) 687-8248

GUINEA-BISSAU, REPUBLIC OF
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 211 East 43rd St., Room 704, New York, NY 10017; FAX (914) 636-3007

GUYANA
- Embassy: 2490 Tracy Pl., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 265-6900/6901; FAX (202) 232-1297
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 801 2nd Ave., Suite 501, New York, NY 10017; (212) 527-5828; FAX (212) 573-6225

HAITI
- Embassy: 2311 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-4090; FAX (202) 745-7215
- Consulate – Miami: 259 S.W. 13th St., Miami, FL 33131; (305) 859-2003; FAX (305) 854-7441
- Consulate – Chicago: 220 State St., Suite 2110, Chicago, IL 60604; (312) 922-4004; FAX (312) 922-7122
- Consulate – Boston: 545 Boylston St., Suite 201, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 266-3660, FAX (617) 266 4060
- Consulate – New York: 271 Madison Ave., 5th Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 697-9767, FAX (212) 681-6991
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 801 2nd Ave., 6th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 370-4840, FAX (212) 661-8698
- Haitian Lawyers Association: c/o Jeff P.H. Cazeau, Weiss Serota Heffman, 2525 Ponce De Leon Blvd., Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 854-0800; FAX (305) 854-2323

HOLY SEE
- Consulate – Washington, D.C.: 3339 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 333-7121; FAX (202) 337-4036

HONDURAS
- Embassy: 3007 Tilden St., NW, Suite 4M, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 966-7702; FAX (202) 966-9751
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3550 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 410, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 383-9244; FAX (213) 383-9306
- Consulate – San Francisco: 870 Market St., Suite 449, San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 392-0076; FAX (415) 392-6726
- Consulate – Chicago: 4506 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, IL 60639; (773) 342-8281/8289; FAX (773) 342-8293
- Consulate – New Orleans: 2 Canal St., Suite 1641, New Orleans, LA 70130; (504) 522-3118/3119; FAX (504) 523-0544
- Consulate – Miami: 7171 Coral Way, Suite 309, Miami, FL 33155; (305) 269-9399/9345/9322; FAX (305) 269-9445
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 417, New York, NY 10017; (212) 752-3370/3371; FAX (212) 223-0498, (212) 751-0403

HUNGARY
- Embassy: 3910 Shoemaker St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 362-6730; FAX (202) 686-6412
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 410, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 473-9344; FAX (310) 479-6443
- Consulate – New York: 223 E. 52nd St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 755-5753, (212) 752-0669; FAX (212) 755-5986
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 227 E. 52nd St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 752-0209, 755-5419/4594/6290; FAX (212) 755-5395

ICELAND
- Embassy: 1156 15th St., NW, Suite 1200, Washington, D.C. 20005; (202) 265-6653; FAX (202) 265-6656
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 3rd Ave., 36th Floor, New York, NY 10022; (212) 593-2700; FAX (212) 593-6269

INDIA
- Embassy: 2107 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 939-7000; FAX (202) 265-4351
- Consulate – San Francisco: 540 Arguello Blvd., San Francisco, CA 94118; (415) 668-0662; FAX (415) 668-9764
- Consulate – New York: 3 East 64th St., New York, NY 10065; (212) 774-0600; FAX (212) 861-3788
- Consulate – Chicago: 455 N. Cityfront Plaza Dr., Suite 850, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 595-0405; FAX (312) 595-0416
- Consulate – Houston: 1990 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 600, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 626-2148/2149; FAX (713) 626-2450
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 235 E. 43rd St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 490-9660; FAX (212) 490-9656

INDONESIA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2020 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 775-5200; FAX (202) 775-5365
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3457 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 383-5126; FAX (213) 487-3971
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1111 Columbus Ave., San Francisco, CA 94133; (415) 474-9571; FAX (415) 441-4320
- Consulate – Chicago: 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 920-1880; FAX (312) 920-1881
- Consulate – New York: 5 East 68th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 879-0600
- Consulate – Houston: 10900 Richmond Ave., Houston, TX 77042; (713) 785-1691; FAX (713) 780-9644
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 325 E. 38th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 972-8333; FAX (212) 972-9780

IRAN
- Iranian Interests Section: 2209 Wisconsin Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 965-4990; FAX (202) 965-1073
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 622 3rd Ave., New York, NY 10017; (212) 687-2020; FAX (212) 867-7086

IRAQ
- Iraqi Interests Section: 1801 P St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 483-7500; FAX (202) 462-8815
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 14 East 79th St., New York, NY 10075; (212) 737-4433, FAX (212) 727-9174

IRELAND

- Embassy: 2234 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 462-3939; FAX (202) 232-5993
- Consulate – San Francisco: 100 Pine St., 33rd Floor, San Francisco, CA 94111; (415) 392-4214; FAX (415) 392-0885
- Consulate – Chicago: 400 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 911, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 337-1868; FAX (312) 337-1954
- Consulate – Boston: Chase Building, 535 Boylston St., Boston, MA 02116; (617) 267-9330; FAX (617) 267-6375
- Consulate – New York: 345 Park Ave., New York, NY 10154; (212) 319-2555; FAX (212) 980-9475
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 1 Dag Hammarskjold Plaza, 885 2nd Ave., 19th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-6934; FAX (212) 752-4726

ISRAEL

- Embassy: 3514 International Dr., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 364-5500; FAX (202) 364-5423
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 6380 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1700, Los Angeles, CA 90048; (323) 852-5500; FAX (323) 852-5555
- Consulate – San Francisco: 456 Montgomery St. Suite 2100, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 844-7500; FAX (415) 844-7555
- Consulate – Miami: 100 North Biscayne (Yitzhak Rabin) Blvd., Suite 1800, Miami, FL 33132; (305) 358-8111; FAX (305) 371-5034
- Consulate – Atlanta: 1100 Spring St., NW Suite 440, Atlanta, GA 30309; (404) 487-6500; FAX (404) 487-6555
- Consulate – Chicago: 111 East Wacker Dr., Suite 1308, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 297-4800; FAX (312) 297-4855/4865
- Consulate – Boston: 20 Park Plaza, Suite 1020, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 542-0200; FAX (617) 535-0255
- Consulate – Houston: 24 Greenway Plaza, Suite 1500, Houston, TX 77046; (713) 627-3780; FAX (713) 627-0149
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., New York, NY 10017; (212) 499-5510; FAX (212) 499-5516

ITALY

- Embassy: 3000 Whitehaven St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 612-4400; FAX (202) 518-2154
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 12400 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 300, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 820-0622, (310) 826-6207; FAX (310) 820-0727
- Consulate – San Francisco: 2590 Webster St., San Francisco, CA 94115; (415) 931-4924/292-9210; FAX (415) 931-7205
- Consulate – Miami: 4000 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Suite 590, Coral Gables, FL 31146; (305) 374-6322; FAX (305) 374-7945
- Consulate – Chicago: 500 North Michigan Ave., Suite 1850, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 467-1550/51/52; FAX (312) 467-1335
- Consulate – Boston: 100 Boylston St., Suite 900, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 722-9201/02/03; FAX (617) 722-9407
- Consulate – Detroit: Buhl Building, 535 Griswold, Suite 1840, Detroit, MI 48226; (313) 963-8560; FAX (313) 963-8180
- Consulate – New York: 690 Park Ave., New York, NY 10021; (212) 737-9100; FAX (212) 249-4945
- Consulate – Philadelphia: Public Ledger Building, 150 S Independence Mall West, Suite 1026, Philadelphia, PA 19106; (215) 592-7329; FAX (215) 592-9808
- Consulate – Houston: 1300 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 660, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 850-7520; FAX (713) 850-9113
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 2 UN Plaza, 24th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 486-9191; FAX (212) 486-1036

IVORY COAST (See COTE D'IVOIRE)

JAMAICA

- Embassy: 1520 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 452-0660; FAX (202) 452-0081
- Consulate – Miami: 25 South East Second Ave., Suite 609, Ingraham Building, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 374-8431; FAX (305) 577-4970
- Consulate – New York and Permanent Mission to the UN: 767 3rd Ave., New York, NY, 10017; (212) 935-7509; FAX (212) 935-7607
- The Jamaican Consulate in New York will make phone calls to Jamaica for you if you are in prison and cannot make the calls yourself. They will probably also assist you if you are being mistreated in prison or if your rights are in some way being violated.

JAPAN

- Embassy: 2520 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 238-6700; FAX (202) 328-2187
- Consulate – Anchorage: 3601 C St., Suite 1300, Anchorage, AK 99503; (907) 562-8424; FAX (907) 562-8434
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 350 South Grand Ave., Suite 1700, Los Angeles, CA 90071; (213) 617-6700; FAX (213) 617-6727
- Consulate – San Francisco: 50 Fremont St., Suite 2300, San Francisco, CA 94105; (415) 777-3533; FAX (415) 777-0518
- Consulate – Atlanta: One Alliance Center, 3500 Lenox Rd., Suite 1600, Atlanta, GA 30326; (404) 240-4300; FAX (404) 240-4311
- Consulate in Honolulu: 1742 Nuuanu Ave. Honolulu, HI 96817; (808) 543-3111; FAX (808) 543-3170
- Consulate – Chicago: Olympia Centre, Suite 1100, 737 North Michigan Ave. Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 280-0400; FAX (312) 280-9568
- Consulate – New Orleans: 639 Loyola Ave. Suite 2050, New Orleans, LA 70113; (504) 529-2101; FAX (504) 568-9847
- Consulate – Boston: Federal Reserve Plaza,14th Floor, 600 Atlantic Ave., Boston, MA 02210; (617) 973-9772/9773/9774; FAX (617) 542-1329
- Consulate – New York: 299 Park Ave., 18th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 371-8222; FAX (212) 319-6357
- Consulate – Portland: Wells Fargo Center, Suite 7200, 1300 SW 5th Ave. Portland, OR 97201; (503) 221-1811; FAX (503) 224-8936
- Consulate – Houston: 1000 Louisiana St. Suite 2300, Houston, TX 77002; (713) 652-2977; FAX (713) 651-7822
- Consulate – Seattle: 601 Union St. Suite 500, Seattle, WA 98101; (206) 682-9107; FAX (206) 624-9097
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017; (212) 223-4300; FAX (212) 751-1966

JORDAN, HASHEMITE KINGDOM OF

- Embassy: 3504 International Dr., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 966-2664; FAX (202) 966-3110
- Permanent Mission to UN: 866 2nd Ave., 4th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 832-9553; FAX (212) 832-5346

KAZAKHSTAN

- Embassy: 1401 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 232-5488; FAX (202) 232-5845
- Permanent Mission to UN: 305 East 47th St., 3rd Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 230-1900/1972; FAX (212) 230-1172

KENYA

- Embassy: 2249 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 387-6101; FAX (202) 462-3829
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 4801 Wilshire Blvd. Mezzanine Floor, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (323) 939-2408; FAX (323) 939-2412

- Consulate – New York: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 4014, New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-4740; FAX (212) 486-1985
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 486, New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-4740; FAX (212) 486-1985

KIRIBATI
- Consulate – Honolulu: 95 Nakolo Pl., Room 265, Honolulu, HI 96819; (808) 834-6775; FAX (808) 834-7604

KOREA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2450 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 939-5600; FAX (202) 797-0595
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3243 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 385-9300; FAX (213) 385-1849
- Consulate – San Francisco: 3500 Clay St., San Francisco, CA 90010; (415) 921-2251; FAX (415) 921-5946
- Consulate – Atlanta: International Tower, 229 Peachtree St. Suite 500, Atlanta, GA 30303; (404) 522-1611; FAX (404) 521-3169
- Consulate – Guam: 125C Tun Jose Camacho St. Tamuning, Guam 96913: (671) 647-6488; FAX (671) 649-1336
- Consulate – Honolulu: 2756 Pali Highway, Honolulu, HI 96817; (808) 595-6109; FAX (808) 595-3046
- Consulate – New York: 335 E. 45th St. 4th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (646) 674-6000, (212) 692-9120; FAX (646) 674-6023
- Consulate – Chicago: NBC Tower, 455 North City Front Plaza Dr., Suite 2700, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 822-9485; FAX (312) 822-9849
- Consulate – Houston: 1990 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 1250 Houston, TX 77056; (713) 961-0186; FAX (713) 961-3340
- Consulate – Seattle: 2033 Sixth Ave., Suite 1125, Seattle, WA 98121; (206) 441-1011; FAX (206) 441-7912
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 335 E. 45th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 439-4000; FAX (212) 986-1083

KUWAIT, STATE OF
- Embassy: 2940 Tilden St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 966-0702; FAX (202) 364-2868
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 321 E. 44th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 973-4300; FAX (212) 370-1733

KYRGYZSTAN (KYRGYZ REPUBLIC)
- Embassy: 2360 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 338-5141; FAX (202) 386-7550

LAO PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC
- Embassy: 2222 S St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-6416/6417; FAX (202) 332-4923
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 317 E. 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 832-2734/0095; FAX (212) 750-0039

LATVIA
- Embassy: 2306 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 328-2840; FAX (202) 328-2860
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 333 E. 50th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 838-8877; FAX (212) 838-8920

LEBANON
- Embassy: 2560 28th St., Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 939-6300; FAX (202) 939-6324
- Consulate – New York: 9 East 76th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 744-7905; FAX (212) 794-1510
- Consulate – Detroit: New Center One Building, 3031 West Grand Blvd., Suite 560, Detroit, MI 48202; (313) 758-0753/0754/0755; FAX (313) 758-0756

- Consulate – Los Angeles: 660 South Figueroa St., Suite 1050, Los Angeles, CA 90017; (213) 243-0999/0990
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Room 531-533, New York, NY 10017; (212) 355-5460/5461; FAX (212) 838-2819/6756

LESOTHO, KINGDOM OF
- Embassy: 2511 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 797-5533/5334; FAX (202) 234-6815
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 204 E. 39th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 661-1690/1691/1692; FAX (212) 682-4388

LIBERIA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 5201 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20011; (202) 723-0437; FAX (202) 723-0436
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 United Nations Plaza, Room 480, New York, NY 10017; (212) 687- 1033/1034; FAX (212) 687-1035/1846

LIBYA
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 309-315 East 48th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 752-5775; FAX (212) 593-4787

LIECHTENSTEIN
- Embassy: 888 17th St., NW, Suite 1250, Washington, D.C. 20006; (202) 331-0590; FAX (202) 331-3221
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 633 3rd Ave., 27th Floor, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 599-0220; FAX (212) 599-0064

LITHUANIA
- Embassy: 4590 MacArthur Blvd., NW, Suite 200, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 234-5860; FAX (202) 328-0466
- Consulate – Chicago: 211 E. Ontario St., Suite 1500, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 397-0382; FAX (312) 397-0385
- Consulate – New York: 420 5th Ave., 3rd Floor, New York, NY 10018; (212) 354-7840; FAX (212) 354-7911
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 708 3rd Ave., 10th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 983-9474; FAX (212) 983-9473

LUXEMBOURG
- Embassy: 2200 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 265-4171; FAX (202) 328-8270
- Consulate – New York: 17 Beekman Plaza, New York, NY 10022; (212) 935-3589; FAX (212) 935-5896
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1 Sansome St., Suite 830, San Francisco, CA 94014; (415) 788-0816; FAX (415) 788-0985
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 17 Beekman Plaza, New York, NY 10022; (212) 935-3589; FAX (212) 935-5896

MACEDONIA, FORMER YUGOSLAV REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 3050 K St., Suite 210, NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 337-3063; FAX (202) 337-3093
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 517, New York, NY 10017; (212) 308-8504/8723; FAX (212) 308-8724

MADAGASCAR, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2374 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 265-5525/5526; FAX (202) 483-7603
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., Room 800, New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-9491/9492/2827; FAX (212) 986-6271

MALAWI
- Embassy: 1156 15th St., NW, Suite 515, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 721-0270
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 600 Third Ave., 21st Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 949-0180/0181/0182; FAX (212) 599-5021

MALAYSIA
- Embassy: 3516 International Court, NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 572-9700; FAX (202) 483-7661
- Consulate – New York: 313 E. 43rd St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 490-2722
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 313 E. 43rd St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-6310; FAX (212) 490-8576

MALDIVES, REPUBLIC OF
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400E, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-6194/6195; FAX (212) 661-6405

MALI, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2130 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-2249; FAX (202) 332-6603
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 111 E. 69th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 737-4150, (212) 794-1131; FAX (212) 472-3778

MALTA
- Embassy: 2017 Connecticut Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 462-3611; FAX (202) 387-5470
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 249 East 35th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 725-2345; FAX (212) 779-7097

MARSHALL ISLANDS
- Embassy: 2433 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 234-5414; FAX (202) 232-3236
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., 18th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 983-3040; FAX (212) 983-3202

MAURITANIA, ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2129 Leroy Pl., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 232-5700; FAX (202) 319-2623
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 116 East 38th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 252-0113/0141; FAX (212) 252-0175

MAURITIUS
- Embassy: 4301 Connecticut Ave., NW, Suite 441, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 244-1491/1492; FAX (202) 966-0983
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 211 East 43rd St., 15th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 949-0190/0191; FAX (212) 697-3829/953-1233

MEXICO
- Embassy: 1911 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20006; (202) 728-1600; FAX (202) 728-1698
- Consulate – Albuquerque: 1610 4th St., NW, Albuquerque, NM 87102; (505) 247-2147/4177; FAX (505) 842-9490
- Consulate – Atlanta: 2600 Apple Valley Rd., Atlanta, GA 30319; (404) 266-2233; FAX (404) 266-2309/2302
- Consulate – Austin: 800 Brazos St., Suite 330, Austin, TX 78701; (512) 478-2866; FAX (512) 478-8008
- Consulate – Boston: 20 Park Plaza, Suite 506, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 426-4181, 350-5263/5264/5266/2250/8782; FAX (617) 695-1957
- Consulate – Brownsville: 301 Mexico Blvd. Suite F-2 Brownsville, TX 78520; (956) 542-4431/2051/5182; FAX (956) 542-7267
- Consulate – Calexico: 408 Heber Ave. Calexico, CA 92231; (760) 357-3863/4132; FAX (760) 357-6284
- Consulate – Chicago: 204 S. Ashland Ave, Chicago, IL 60607; (312) 738-2383; FAX (312) 491-9072

- Consulate – Dallas: 8855 N. Stemmons Freeway, Dallas TX 75247; (214) 252-9250/9252/9253; FAX (214) 630-3511
- Consulate – Denver: 5350 Leetsdale Dr., Suite 100, Denver, CO 80246; (303) 331-1110/1112; FAX (303) 331-1872
- Consulate – Detroit: The Penobscot Building, 645 Griswold Ave., 17th Floor, Suite 830, Detroit, MI 48226; (313) 964-4515/4532/4534; FAX (313) 964-4522
- Consulate – Douglas: 1201 F Ave., Douglas, AZ 85607; (520) 364-3107/3142; FAX (520) 364-1379
- Consulate – El Paso: 910 East San Antonio Ave., El Paso, TX 79901, P.O. Box 812; (915) 533-5714, (915) 544-6177; FAX (915) 532-7163
- Consulate – Fresno: 2409 Merced St., Fresno, CA 93721; (559) 233-3065; FAX (559) 233-6156
- Consulate – Houston: 4507 San Jacinto St., Houston, TX 77004; (713) 271-6800, (995) 1225-0218; FAX (713) 271-3201, (713)772-1229
- Consulate – Indianapolis: 39 West Jackson Pl., Suite 103 Indianapolis, IN 46225; (317) 951-0005/4174/1044; FAX (317) 951-0006/4176
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 2401 West 6th St., Los Angeles, CA 90057; (213) 351-6800; FAX (213) 383-7306
- Consulate – Laredo: 1612 Farragut St., Laredo, TX 78040; P.O. Box 659; (956) 723-6369/0990; FAX (956) 723-1741
- Consulate – Miami: 5975 SW 72 St., Suite 101, Miami, FL 33143; (786) 268-4900; FAX (786) 268-4895
- Consulate – Nogales: 571 N. Grand Ave., Nogales, AZ 85621; (520) 287-2521/3381/3386; FAX (520) 287-3175
- Consulate – New York: 27 East 39th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 217-6400; FAX (212) 217-6493
- Consulate – Omaha: 3552 Dodge St., Omaha, NE 68131-3210; (402) 595-1841; FAX (402) 595-1845
- Consulate – Orlando: 100 West Washington St., Orlando, FL 32801-2315; (407) 422-0514; FAX (407) 422-9633
- Consulate – Oxnard: 3151 West Fifth St., E-100, Oxnard, CA 93030; (805) 984-8738/2162/2673/4105; FAX (805) 984-8747
- Consulate – Philadelphia: 111 South Independence Mall East, Suite 310, Philadelphia, PA 19106; (215) 922-4262; FAX (215) 923-7281
- Consulate – Phoenix: 1990 West Camelback Rd., Suite 110, Phoenix, AZ 85015; (602) 242-7398, (602) 249-2363, (602) 433-2294, (602) 242-8569; FAX (602) 242-2957
- Consulate – Portland: 1234 South West Morrison St., Portland, OR 97205; (503) 274-1442, (503) 478-0435; FAX (503) 274-1540
- Consulate – Raleigh: 336 E Six Forks Rd., Raleigh, NC 27609; (919) 754-0046; FAX (919) 754-1729
- Consulate – Sacramento: 1010 8th St., Sacramento, CA 95814; (916) 441-3287/3065; FAX (916) 441-3147
- Consulate – San Antonio: 127 Navarro St., San Antonio, TX 78205; (210) 227-9145/9156; FAX (210) 227-1817
- Consulate – San Bernardino: 293 North D St., San Bernardino, CA 92401; (909) 889-9836/9837/9808; FAX (909) 889-8285
- Consulate – San Diego: 1549 India St., San Diego, CA 92101; (619) 231-8414; FAX (619) 231-4802/3561
- Consulate – Seattle: 2132 Third Ave., Seattle, WA 98121; (206) 448-3526/6819/8971; FAX (206) 448-4771
- Consulate – San Francisco: 532 Folsom St. San Francisco, CA 94105; (415) 354-1700/1701; FAX (415) 495-3971
- Consulate – San Jose: 540 North First St., San José, CA 95112; (408) 294-3414/3415; FAX (408) 294-4506
- Consulate – Santa Ana: 828 N. BRd.way St. Santa Ana, CA 92701-3424; (714) 835-3069; FAX (714) 835-3472
- Consulate – St. Paul: 797 East 7th St., Saint Paul, MN 55106; (651) 771-5494; FAX (651) 772-4419

- Consulate – Yuma: 600 W. 16th. St., Yuma, AZ 85364; (928) 343-0066/9600/9699; FAX (928) 343-0077
- Permanent Mission to the UN: Two United Nations Plaza, 28th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 752-0220; FAX (212) 688-8862

MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF
- Embassy: 1725 N St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 223-4383; FAX (202) 233-4391
- Consulate – Guam: Old Hakubotan Bldg., 973 S. Marine Dr., Suite 201, Tamuning, Guam 96911; (671) 646-9154; FAX (671) 649-6320
- Consulate – Hawaii: 3049 Ualena St., Honolulu, HI 96819; (808) 836-4775; FAX (808) 836-6869
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., Suite 17A, New York, NY 10017; (212) 697-8370; FAX (212) 697-8295

MOLDOVA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2101 S St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 667-1130; FAX (202) 667-1204
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 573-577 3rd Ave., New York, NY 10016; (212) 682-3523; FAX (212) 682-6274

MONACO
- Embassy: 565 5th Ave, 23rd Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 286-0500; FAX (212) 286-1574
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 520, New York, NY 10017; (212) 832-0721; FAX (212) 832-5358

MONGOLIA
- Embassy: 2833 M St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 333-7117/6214; FAX (202) 298-9227
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 6 E. 77th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 861-9460/737-3874/472-6517; FAX (212) 861-9464

MOROCCO, KINGDOM OF
- Embassy: 1601 21st St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 462-7979
- Consulate – New York: 10 E. 40th St., 24th Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 758-2625; FAX (212) 779-7441
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 2nd Ave., 6th and 7th Floors, New York, NY, 10017; (212) 421-1580; FAX (212) 980-1512/412-7826

MOZAMBIQUE, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1990 M St., NW, Suite 570, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 293-7146/7149; FAX (202) 835-0245
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 135 E. 36th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 644-5965/6800; FAX (212) 644-5972/0528

MYANMAR, THE UNION OF
- Embassy: 2300 S St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-3344/4350/4352; FAX (202) 332-4351
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 10 E. 77th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 535-1310/1311; FAX (212) 737-2421

NAMIBIA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1605 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 986-0540; FAX (202) 986-0433
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 135 E. 36th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 685-2003; FAX (212) 685-1561

NAURU, REPUBLIC OF
- Consulate – Guam: Ada Professional Bldg. Marine Dr., 1st Floor, Agana, Guam 96910; (671) 649-7106/7107
- Consulate – Hawaii: 841 Bishop St., Suite 506, Honolulu, HI 96813; (808) 523-7821
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 Second Ave., Suite 400D, New York, NY 10017; (212) 937-0074; FAX (212) 937-0079

NEPAL, KINGDOM OF
- Embassy: 2131 Leroy Pl., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 667-4550; FAX (202) 667-5534
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., Suite 17B, New York, NY 10017; (212) 370-3988/3989; FAX (212) 953-2038

NETHERLANDS, THE
- Embassy: 4200 Linnean Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 244-5300; FAX (202) 362-3430
- Consulate – Chicago: 303 E. Wacker Dr., Suite 2600, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 856-0110; FAX (312) 856-9218
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1150, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 268-1598; FAX (310) 312-0989
- Consulate – Miami: 701 Brickell Ave., 5th Floor, Miami, FL 33131; (786) 866-0480; FAX (786) 866-0497
- Consulate – New York: 1 Rockefeller Plaza, 11th Floor, New York, NY 10020; (212) 246-1429; FAX (212) 333-3603
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 235 E. 45th St., 16th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 697-5547; FAX (212) 370-1954

NEW ZEALAND
- Embassy: 37 Observatory Circle, NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 328-4800; FAX (202) 667-5227
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 2425 Olympic Blvd., Suite 600E, Santa Monica, CA 90404; (310) 566-6555; FAX (310) 566-6556
- Consulate – New York: 222 East 41st St., Suite 2510, New York, NY 10017; (212) 832-4038; FAX (212) 832-7602
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One UN Plaza, 25th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 826-1960; FAX (212) 758-0827

NICARAGUA
- Embassy: 1627 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 939-6570; FAX (202) 939-6542
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 33550 Wilshire Bl., Suite 200, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 252-1170/1171/1174; FAX (213) 252-1177
- Consulate – San Francisco: 870 Market St., Suite 1050, San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 765-6821; FAX (415) 765-6826
- Consulate – Miami: 8532 S.W. 8 St., Suite 270, Miami, FL 33144; (305) 265-1415; FAX (305) 265-1780
- Consulate – New York: 820 2nd Ave., Suite 802, New York, NY 10017; (212) 983-1981; FAX (212) 989-5528
- Consulate – Houston: 6300 Hillcroft St., Suite 250, Houston, TX 77081; (713) 272-9628/9629; FAX (713) 272-7131
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., 8th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 490-7997; FAX (212) 286-0815

NIGER, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2204 R St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-4224; FAX (202) 483-3169
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 417 E. 50th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 421-3260/3261/3286; FAX (212) 753-6931

NIGERIA, FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1333 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 986-8400
- Consulate – Atlanta: 8060 Roswell Rd, Atlanta, GA 30350; (770) 394-6261
- Consulate – New York City: 828 2nd Ave., New York, NY 10017; (212) 808-0301
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 828 Second Ave., New York, NY 10017 (212) 953-9130; FAX (212) 697-1970

NORWAY
- Embassy: 2720 34th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 944-8939; FAX (202) 337-0870
- Consulate – San Francisco: 20 California St., 6th Floor, San Francisco, CA 94111; (415) 986-0766

- Consulate – Houston: 2777 Allen Pkwy., Suite 1185, Houston, TX 77019; (713) 521-2900
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 825 3rd Ave., 39th Fl., New York, NY 10022; (212) 421-0280/0281/0282/0283/0284; FAX (212) 688-0554

OMAN, SULTANATE OF
- Embassy: 2535 Belmont Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 387-1980/1981/1982; FAX (202) 387-2186
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 540, New York, NY 10017; (212) 355-3505/3506/3507; FAX (212) 644-0070

PAKISTAN
- Embassy: 3517 International Court, NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 243-6500; FAX (202) 686-1534
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 10850 Wilshire Bl., Suite 1250, Los Angeles, CA 90024; (310) 441-5114; FAX (310) 474-4871
- Consulate – Boston: 558 Clapboardtree St., Westwood, MA 02090; (617) 267-9000; FAX (617) 266-6666
- Consulate – Chicago: 333 North Michigan Ave., Suite 728, Chicago, Illinois 60601; (312) 781-1831/1832, (312) 781-1833; FAX (312) 781-1838, (312) 781-1839
- Consulate – New York: 12 E. 65th St., New York, NY 10065; (212) 879-5800; FAX (212) 517-6987
- Permanent Mission to the UN: Pakistan House, 8 E. 65th St., New York, NY 10065; (212) 879-8600; FAX (212) 744-7348

PALAU, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1701 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Suite 300, Washington, D.C. 20006; (202) 452-6814; FAX (202) 349-8597

PALESTINE
- Permanent Observer Mission to the UN: 115 E. 65th St., New York, N.Y. 10021; (212) 288-8500; FAX (212) 517-2377

PANAMA
- Embassy: 2862 McGill Terrace, NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-1407; FAX (202) 483-8416
- Consulate – Miami: 5757 Blue Lagoon Dr., Suite 320, Miami, FL 33126; (305) 447-3700; FAX (305) 447-4142
- Consulate – Tampa: Galleria Office Building, 4326 El Prado Bl., Suite 4, Tampa, FL 33629; (813) 251-0316; FAX (813) 831-6685
- Consulate – Honolulu: 1568 Uluhaku Pl., Kailua, Honolulu, HI 96734; (808) 549-6883; FAX (808) 521-5043
- Consulate – New Orleans: 2424 World Trade Center, 2 Canal St., New Orleans, LA 70130; (504) 525-3458/3459; FAX (504) 424-8960
- Consulate – New York: 1212 Ave. of the Americas, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10036; (212) 840-2450; FAX (212) 840-2451
- Consulate – Philadelphia: 124 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, PA 19106; (215) 574-2994; FAX (215) 574-4225
- Consulate – Houston: 24 Greenway Plaza, Suite 1307, Houston, TX 77046; (713) 622-4451/4459; FAX (713) 622-4468
- Consulate – San Diego: 402 West BRd.way Way, Suite 670, San Diego, CA 92101; (619) 235-4441; FAX (619) 235-4442
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 4030, New York, NY 10017; (212) 421-5420/5421; FAX (212) 421-2694

PAPUA NEW GUINEA
- Embassy: 1779 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Suite 805, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 745-3680; FAX (202) 745-3679
- Consulate – Fallbrook: 1308 Banyan Dr., Fallbrook, CA 92028; (760) 731-0436; FAX (760) 731-0472
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 201 East 42nd St., Suite 405, New York, NY 10017 (212) 557-5001; FAX (212) 557-5009

PARAGUAY

- Embassy: 2400 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-6960/6961/6962; FAX (202) 234-4508
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 6033 West Century Blvd., Suite 985, Los Angeles, CA 90045; (310) 417-9500; FAX (310) 417-9520
- Consulate – Miami: 25 South East 2nd Ave., Suite 705, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 374-9090; FAX (305) 374-5522
- Consulate – New York: 211 East 43rd St., Suite 2101, New York, NY 10017; (212) 692-9442; FAX (212) 682-9443
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 211 East 43rd St., Suite 400, New York, NY 10017; (212) 687-3490/3491; FAX (212) 818-1282

PERU

- Embassy: 1700 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington D.C. 20036; (202) 833-9860/9861/9862/9863/9864/9865/9866/9867/9868/9869; FAX (202) 659-8124
- Consulate – Atlanta: 4360 Chamblee Dunwoody Rd., Suite 580, Atlanta, GA 30341; (678) 336-7010, (800) 701-3919; FAX (678) 990-1920
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3450 Wilshire Bl., Suite 1005, Los Angeles, CA 90036; (213) 252-5910/9795/8599; FAX (213) 352-8130
- Consulate – San Francisco: 870 Market St., Suite 1067, San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 362-5185/5647/7136
- Consulate – Miami: 444 Brickell Ave., Suite M135, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 374-1305; FAX (305) 381-6027
- Consulate – Chicago: 180 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 1830, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 853-6173/6174; FAX (312) 704-6969
- Consulate – Boston: 20 Park Plaza, Suite 511, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 338-2227; FAX (617) 338-2742
- Consulate – New York: 241 East 49th St., New York, NY 10017; (646) 735-3828/3847; FAX (646) 765-3866
- Consulate – Houston: 5177 Richmond Ave., Suite 695, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 355-9571/9438; FAX (713) 355-9377
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., Suite 1600, New York, NY 10017; (212) 687-3336; FAX (212) 972-6975

PHILIPPINES, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 1600 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 467-9300; FAX (202) 467-7614
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3600 Wilshire Bl., Suite 500, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 639-0980, Emergency Tel.: 213-268-9990 (after hours); FAX (213) 639-0990
- Consulate – San Francisco: Philippine Center Bldg., 447 Sutter St., 6th Fl., San Francisco, CA 94108; (415) 433-6666; FAX (415) 421-2641
- Consulate – Agana: Suite 601-2, ITC Bldg., Marine Dr., Tamuning, Guam 96913; (671) 646-4620/4630, FAX (671) 649-1868
- Consulate – Honolulu: 2433 Pali Hwy., Honolulu, HI 96817; (808) 595-6316; FAX (808) 595-2581
- Consulate – Chicago: 30 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 2100, Chicago, IL 60602; (312) 332-6458; FAX (312) 332-3657
- Consulate – New York: Philippine Ctr., 556 5th Ave., New York, NY 10036; (212) 764-1330; FAX (212) 382-1146
- Consulate – Saipan: Marianas Businesss Plaza, 5th Floor, P.O. BOX 500731CK SAIPAN; MP 96950 CNMI; (670) 234-1848, (670) 235-8360; FAX (670) 234-1849
- Permanent Mission to the UN: Philippine Ctr., 556 5th Ave., 5th Floor, New York, NY 10036; (212) 764-1300/1301/1302/1303/1304 or (212) 704-7322; FAX (212) 840-8602

POLAND, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2640 16th St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 234-3800; FAX (202) 328-6271
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 9 E. 66th St., New York, NY, 10021; (212) 744-2506; FAX (212) 517-6771
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 12400 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 555, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 442-8500; FAX (310) 442-8515
- Consulate – Chicago: 1530 N. Lake Shore Dr., Chicago, IL 60610; (312) 337-8166; FAX (312) 337-7841/7476
- Consulate – New York: 233 Madison Ave., New York, NY 10016; (646) 237-2100; (212) 561-8160 FAX (646) 237-2105
- Polish American Immigration & Relief Comm., Inc.: 180 2nd Ave., New York, NY 10003; (212) 254-2240; FAX (212) 254-2240

PORTUGAL
- Embassy: 2012 Massachusetts Ave., Washington, D.C., 20008; (202) 328-8610/9025/8789; FAX (202) 462-3726
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 1801 Ave. of the Stars, Suite 400, Los Angeles, CA 90067; (310) 277-1491
- Consulate – San Francisco: 3298 Washington St., San Francisco, CA 94115; (415) 346-3400; FAX (415) 346-1440
- Consulate – Boston: 1 Exeter Pl., Floor 7, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 536-8740; FAX (617) 536-2503
- Consulate – New Bedford: 628 Pleasant St., Room 218/225, New Bedford, MA 02740; (508) 997-6151; FAX (508) 992-1068
- Consulate – Newark: Main Floor, The Legal Ctr., One Riverfront Plaza, Newark, NJ 07102; (973) 643-4200; FAX (973) 643-3900
- Consulate – New York: 630 5th Ave., Suite 310, New York, NY 10111; (212) 246-4580; FAX (212) 459-0190
- Consulate – Providence: 56 Pine St., 6th Floor, Providence, RI 02903; (401) 272-2003; FAX (401) 273-6247
- Consulate – Philadelphia: 7950 Loretto Ave., Philadelphia, PA 19111; (215) 745-2889; FAX (215) 745-2867
- Consulate – Houston: 700 Louisiana, Suite 4200, Houston, TX 77002; (713) 759-1188; FAX (713) 230-0016
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 2nd Ave., 9th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 759-9444; FAX (212) 355-1124

QATAR
- Embassy: 2555 M St., NW, Washington, DC 20037; (202) 274-1600/1603; FAX (202) 237-0061
- Consulate – Houston: 1900 Post Oak Blvd., Suite 810, Houston, TX 77056; (713) 355-8221; FAX (713) 968-9841
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 809 United Nations Plaza, 4th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 486-9335/9336; FAX (212) 758-4952, (212) 308-5630

ROMANIA
- Embassy: 1607 23rd St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-4848, (202) 387-6901; FAX (202) 232-4748
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 560, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 444-0043
- Consulate – Chicago: 737 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 1170, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 573-1315
- Consulate – New York: 200 E. 38th St., 3rd Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 682-9120; FAX (212) 972-8463
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 573-577 3rd Ave., New York, NY 10016 (212) 682-3273/3274; FAX (212) 682-9746

RUSSIAN FEDERATION
- Embassy: 2650 Wisconsin Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 298-5700; FAX (202) 298-5735
- Consular Division of the Embassy: 2641 Tunlaw Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 939-8907; FAX (202) 483-7579

- Consulate – Seattle: 2323 Westin Building, 2001 6th Ave., Seattle, WA 98121; (206) 728-1910; FAX (206) 728-1871
- Consulate – San Francisco: 2790 Green St., San Francisco, CA 94123; (415) 202-9800; FAX (415) 929-0306
- Consulate – Houston: 1333 West Loop South, Suite 1300, Houston, TX 77027; (713) 337-3300; FAX (713) 337-3305
- Consulate – New York: 9 E. 91st St., New York, NY 10128; (212) 348-0926; FAX (212) 831-9162
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 136 East 67th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 861-4900/4901/4902; FAX (212) 628-0252

RWANDA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1714 New Hampshire Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 232-2882; FAX (202) 232-4544
- Consulate – Chicago: 666 Dundee Rd., Suite 1401, Northbrook, IL 60062; (708) 205-1188
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 124 East 39th St., New York, NY, 10016; (212) 679-9010/9023/9024; FAX (212) 679-9133

SAINT KITTS AND NEVIS
- Embassy: 3216 New Mexico Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20016; (202) 686-2636; FAX (202) 686-5740
- Consulate – Dallas: 6336 Greenville Ave. Dallas, TX 75206
- Consulate – Atlanta: 644 Antone St., NW, Atlanta, GA 30318
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 414 East 75th St., 5th Floor, New York, NY 10021; (212) 535-1234; FAX (212) 535-6854

SAINT LUCIA
- Embassy: 3216 New Mexico Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20016; (202) 364-6792/6793/6794/6795; FAX (202) 364-6725
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 2250 Century Hill, Los Angeles, CA 90067; (310) 557-9000
- Consulate – New York: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 900E, New York, NY 10017; (212) 697-9360; FAX (212) 697-4993
- Consulate – Miami: 1101 Brickel Ave., Suite 1602, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 523-6380; FAX (305) 523-6383
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400J, New York, NY 10017; (212) 697-9360/9361; FAX (212) 697-4993

SAINT VINCENT & THE GRENADINES
- Embassy: 3216 New Mexico Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20016; (202) 364-6730/6736; FAX (202) 364-6736
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 801 2nd Ave., 21st Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 687-4490/4491; FAX (212) 949-5946

SAMOA
- Embassy: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400D, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-6196/6197; FAX (212) 599-0797
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400J, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-6196/6197; FAX (212) 599-0797

SAO TOME AND PRINCIPE
- Embassy and Permanent Mission to the UN: 400 Park Ave., 7th Floor, New York, NY 10022; (212) 317-0533; FAX (212) 317-0580
- Consulate – Atlanta: 512 Means St., Suite 305, Atlanta, GA 30318; (404) 221-0203; FAX (404) 221-1006

SAUDI ARABIA
- Embassy: 601 New Hampshire Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20037; (202) 342-3800; FAX (202) 337-4084
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 2045 Sawtelle Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 479-6000; FAX (310) 479-2752

- Consulate – New York: 866 United Nations Plaza, Suite 480, New York, NY 10017; (212) 752-2740; FAX (212) 983-4895
- Consulate – Houston: 5718 Westheimer Rd., Suite 1500, Houston, TX 77057; (713) 785-5577; FAX (713) 785-1163
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 809 United Nations Plaza, 10th and 11th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 557-1525; FAX (212) 983-4895

SENÉGAL

- Embassy: 2112 Wyoming Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 234-0540/0541; FAX (202) 332-6315
- Consulate –New York: 271 West 125th St., Suite 412, New York, NY 10027; (917) 493-8950; FAX (917) 493-8953
- Consulate – Houston: Stone Crest International, 3602 S. McGregor Wa.., Houston, TX 77021; (713) 748-5016; FAX 713-782-3495
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 238 E. 68th St., New York, NY 10021; (212) 517-9030/9031/9032; FAX (212) 517-3032.
- If you are near New York and have an emergency, contact the UN Permanent Mission. They can provide you with interpreters and other assistance on the scene.

SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO

- Embassy: 2134 Kalorama Rd., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 332-0333; FAX (202) 332-3933
- Consulate – Chicago: 201 East Ohio St., Suite 200, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 670-6707; FAX (312) 670-6787
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 854 5th Ave., New York, NY 10021; (212) 879-8700; FAX (212) 879-8705

SEYCHELLES, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400C, New York, NY 10017; (212) 972-1785; FAX (212) 972-1786
- Consulate – Seattle: 3620 S.W. 309th St., Federal Way, Seattle, WA 98023; (253) 874-4579; FAX (253) 838-2787
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 800 2nd Ave., Suite 400C, New York, NY 10017; (212) 972-1785; FAX (212) 972-1786

SIERRA LEONE, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 1701 19th St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 939-9261; FAX (202) 483-1793
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 245 E. 49th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 688-1656/4985; FAX (212) 688-4924

SINGAPORE, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 3501 International Pl. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 537-3100; FAX (202) 537-0876
- Consulate – San Francisco: 595 Market St., Suite 2450, San Francisco, CA 94105; (415) 543-0474/4775; FAX (415) 543-4788
- Consulate – New York: 231 E. 51st St., New York, NY 10022-6520; (212) 223-3331; FAX (212) 826-5028
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 231 East 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 826-0840/0841/0842/0843/0844; FAX (212) 826-2964

SLOVAKIA (REPUBLIC OF SLOVAK)

- Embassy: 3523 International Court NW, Washington D.C., 20008; (202) 237-1054; FAX (202) 237-6438
- Consulate – Washington D.C.: 3525 International Court NW, Washington D.C. 20008; (202) 237-1054; FAX (202) 237-6438
- Consulate – New York: 801 2nd Ave., 12th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 286-8434; FAX (212) 286-8439
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 10940 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 2030, Los Angeles, CA 90024; (310) 209-1253; FAX (310) 209-1261
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 801 2nd Ave., 12th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 286-8880/8401/8418/8452; FAX (212) 286-8419

SLOVENIA
- Embassy: 2401 California St., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 667-5363; FAX (202) 386-6602
- Consulate – New York: 600 3rd Ave., 21st Fl., New York, NY 10016; (212) 370-3006; FAX (212) 370-3581
- Consulate – Cleveland: 55 Public Square, Suite 945, Cleveland, OH 44113; (216) 589-9220; FAX (216) 589-9210
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 600 3rd Ave., 24th Floor, New York, NY 10016; (212) 370-3007/1831; FAX (212) 370-1824

SOMALI DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 425 East 61st St., Suite 702, New York, NY 10065; (212) 688-9410/5046; FAX (212) 759-0651

SOUTH AFRICA
- Embassy: 3051 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 232-4400; FAX (202) 265-1607
- Consulate – Washington, D.C.: 4301 Connecticut Ave., NW, Suite 220, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 274-7991/2; FAX 202-244-9417
- Consulate – Chicago: 200 South Michigan Ave., 6th Fl., Chicago, IL 60604; (312) 939-7929; FAX (312) 939-2588
- Consulate – New York: 333 East 38th St., 9th Fl., New York, NY 10016; (212) 213-4880; FAX (212) 213-0102
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 6300 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 600, Los Angeles, CA 90048; (323) 651-0902; FAX (323) 651-5969
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 333 East 38th St., 9th Fl., New York, NY 10016; (212) 213-5583; FAX (212) 265-1607

SPAIN
- Embassy: 2375 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20037; (202) 728-2330; FAX (202) 728-2302
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 5055 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 860, Los Angeles, CA 90036; (323) 938-0158 FAX (323) 938-0112
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1405 Sutter St., San Francisco, CA 94109; (415) 922-2995/2996; FAX (415) 931-9706
- Consulate – Miami: 2655 Le Jeune Rd., Suite 203, Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 446-5511/5512/5513; FAX (305) 446-0585
- Consulate – Chicago: 180 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 1500, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 782-4588/4589; FAX (312) 782-1635
- Consulate – New Orleans: 2102 World Trade Ctr., New Orleans, LA 70130; (504) 525-4951; FAX (504) 525-4955
- Consulate – Boston: 31 St. James Ave., Suite 905, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 536-2506/2527; FAX (617) 536-8512
- Consulate – New York: 150 East 58th St., Floors 30-31, New York, NY 10155; (212) 355-4080/4081/4082/4085/4090; FAX (212) 644-3751
- Consulate – Houston: 1800 Bering Dr., Suite 660, Houston, TX 77057; (713) 783-6200/6205; FAX (713) 783-6166
- Consulate – Puerto Rico: Apartado Postal 9243, Santurce, PR 00908; (787) 758-6090/6142/6279
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One Dag Hammarskjöld Plaza, 245 East 47th St., 36th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 661-1050; FAX (212) 949-7247

SRI LANKA
- Embassy: 2148 Wyoming Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 483-4025/4028; FAX (202) 232-7181
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 3250 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1405, Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 387-0210; FAX (213) 387-0216

- Consulate – New York: 630 3rd Ave., 20th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-7040; FAX (212) 986-1838
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 630 3rd Ave., 20th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 986-7040/7041/7042/7043; FAX (212) 986-1838

SUDAN, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2210 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 338-8565; FAX (202) 667-2406
- Consulate – Washington, D.C.: 1729 Wisconsin Ave. NW, Washington D.C. 20007; (202) 333-4735
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 305 E. 47th St., 4th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 573-6033; FAX (212) 573-6160

SURINAME, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 4301 Connecticut Ave. NW, Suite 460, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 244-7488/7590/7591/7592; FAX (202) 244-5878
- Consulate – Miami: 6303 Blue Lagoon Dr., Suite 325, Miami, Fl 33126; (305) 265-4655; FAX (305) 265-4599
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 320, New York, NY 10017; (212) 826-0660/0661/0662/0663; FAX (212) 980-7029

SWAZILAND, KINGDOM OF
- Embassy: 1712 New Hampshire Ave., Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 234-5002; FAX (202) 234-8254
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 408 East 50th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 371-8910; FAX (212) 754-2755

SWEDEN
- Embassy: 2900 K St.. NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 467-2600; FAX (202) 467-2699
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 10940 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 700, Los Angeles, CA 90024; (310) 445-4008; (310) 824-4700; FAX (310) 473-2229
- Consulate – New York: 1 Dag Hammerskjold Plaza, 885 2nd Ave., 45th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 583-2550; FAX (212) 583-2599
- Consulate – San Juan: Menaco Building, 2nd & 3rd Floors, Rd. 550, No. 5, Luchetti Industrial Park, Marginal Oeste Park,Bayamon, San Juan, PR 00936; (787) 778-2377; FAX (787) 778-2365/2378
- Consulate – 120 Montgomery St., Suite 2175, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 788-2631; FAX (415) 788-6841
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One Dag Hammarskjöld Plaza, 885 2nd Ave., 46th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 583-2500; FAX (212) 832-2549

SWITZERLAND
- Embassy: 2900 Cathedral Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 745-7900; FAX (202) 387-2564
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1400, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 575-1145
- Consulate – San Francisco: 456 Montgomery St., Suite 1500, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 788-2272; FAX (415) 788-1402
- Consulate – Atlanta: 1275 Peachtree St., N.E., Suite 425, Atlanta, GA 30309; (404) 870-2000; FAX (404) 870-2011
- Consulate – Chicago: 737 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 2301, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 915-0061/4500; FAX (312) 915-0388
- Consulate – New York: 633 3rd Ave., 30th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 599-5700; FAX (212) 599-4266
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 633 3rd Ave., 29th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 286-1540; FAX (212) 286-1555

SYRIA (SYRIAN ARAB REPUBLIC)
- Embassy: 2215 Wyoming Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 232-6313; FAX (202) 234-4585
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 2nd Ave., 15th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 661-1313; FAX (212) 983-4439

TAIWAN
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office in the United States: 4201 Wisconsin Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20016; (202) 895-1800; FAX (202) 363-0999
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Atlanta: 1180 W. Peachtree St., N.E. Suite 800, Atlantic Center Plaza, Atlanta, GA 30309; (404) 870-9375; FAX (404) 870-9376
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Boston: 99 Summer St., Suite 801, Boston, MA 02110; (617) 737-2050; FAX (617) 737-1684
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Chicago: Two Prudential Plaza, 57th Floor, 180 North Stetson Ave., Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 616-0100; FAX (312) 616-1490
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Guam: Bank of Guam Building, 111 Chanlan Santo Papa Rd., Suite 505, Hagatna, GU 96910; (671) 472-5865; FAX (671) 472-5869
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Honolulu: 2746 Pali Highway, Honolulu, HI 96817; (808) 595-6347; FAX (808) 595-6542
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Houston: 11 Greenway Plaza, Suite 2006, Houston, TX 77046; (713) 626-7445; FAX (713) 626-1202
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Missouri: 3100 BRd.way, Suite 800, Kansas City, MO 64111; (816) 531-1298; FAX (816) 531-3066
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Los Angeles: 3731 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 389-1215; FAX (213) 389-1676
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Miami: 2333 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Suite 610, Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 443-8917; FAX (305) 442-6054
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in New York, 1 E. 42nd St., 4th Fl., New York, NY 10017; (212) 317-7300; FAX (212) 754-1549
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in San Francisco: 555 Montgomery St., Suite 501, San Francisco, CA 94111; (415) 362-7680; FAX (415) 362-5382
- Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Seattle: One Union Square, Suite 2020, 600 University St., Seattle, WA 98101; (206) 441-4586; FAX (206) 441-4320

TAJIKISTAN, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1005 New Hampshire Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20037; (202) 223-6090; FAX (202) 223-6091
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 216 E. 49th St., 4th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 207-3315; FAX (212) 207-3855

TANZANIA, UNITED REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2139 R St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 939-6125/6127; FAX (202) 797-7408; E-MAIL ubalozi@tanzaniaembassy-us.org
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 201 East 42nd St., Suite 1700, New York, NY 10017; (212) 972-9160; FAX (212) 682-5232

THAILAND
- Embassy: 1024 Wisconsin Ave. NW, Suite 401, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 944-3600; FAX (202) 944-3611
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 611 N. Larchmont Bl., Los Angeles, CA 90004; (213) 962-9574/9577; FAX (323) 962-2128; E-mail Thai-la@mindspring.com
- Consulate – New York: 351 E. 52nd St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 754-1770; FAX (212) 754-1907
- Consulate – Chicago: 700 North Rush St., Chicago, IL 60611-2504; (312) 664-3129; FAX (312) 664-3230; E-MAIL thaichicago@ameritech.net
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 351 East 52nd St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 754-2230; FAX (212) 688-3029; E-mail thailand@un.int

TOGO, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2208 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 234-4212/4213; FAX (202) 232-3190
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 112 East 40th St., New York, NY 10016; (212) 490-3455/3456; FAX (212) 983-6684

TONGA, KINGDOM OF

- Consulate – San Francisco: 360 Post St., Suite 604, San Francisco, CA 94108; (415) 781-0365; FAX (415) 781-3964
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 250 East 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (917) 369-1025; FAX (917) 369-1024; E-mail tongaunmission@aol.com

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

- Embassy: 1708 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 467-6490; FAX (202) 785-3130; E-mail info@ttembwash.com
- Consulate – Miami: 1000 Brickell Ave., Suite 800, Miami, FL 33131-3047; (305) 374-2199; FAX (305) 374-3199; E-MAIL ttmiami@worldnet.att.net
- Consulate – New York: 733 3rd Ave., Suite 1716, New York, NY 10017-3204; (212) 682-7272; FAX (212) 986-2146; E-mail ttcgny@idt.net
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 820 Second Ave., 5th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 697-7620/7621/7622/7623; FAX (212) 682-3580; E-mail tto@un.int

TUNISIA

- Embassy: 1515 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20005; (202) 862-1850; FAX (202) 862-1858
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 31 Beekman Pl., New York, NY 10022; (212) 751-7503/7534/5069; FAX (212) 751-0569

TURKEY, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 1714 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 659-8200; FAX (202) 659-0744
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 4801 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90010; (213) 937-0118; FAX (213) 932-0061
- Consulate – San Francisco: 3401 Sacramento St., San Francisco, CA 94102; (415) 922-9222
- Consulate – Chicago: 360 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 1405, Chicago, IL 60601; (312) 263-0644; FAX (312) 263 1295
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 821 UN Plaza, 10th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 949-0150; FAX (212) 949-0086

TURKMENISTAN

- Embassy: 2207 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 588-1500; FAX (202) 588-0697
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 424, New York, NY 10017; (212) 486-8908; FAX (212) 486-2521

UGANDA, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 5911 16th St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20011; (202) 726-7100/7101/7012; FAX (202) 726-1727
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 336 East 45th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 949-0110/0111/0112/0113; FAX (212) 687-4517

UKRAINE

- Embassy: 3350 M St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 333-0606; FAX (202) 333-0817
- Consulate – Chicago: 10 E. Huron St., Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 642-4388; FAX (312) 642-4385
- Consulate – New York: 240 E. 49th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 371-5690; FAX (212) 371-5547
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 220 East 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 759-7003; FAX (212) 355-9455

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

- Embassy: 1255 22nd St. NW, Suite 700, Washington, D.C. 20037; (202) 243-2400; FAX (202) 243-2432
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 305 East 47th St., 7th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 371-0480; FAX (212) 371-4923

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN & NORTHERN IRELAND

- Embassy: 3100 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 588-6500; FAX (202) 588-7870
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 11766 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 1200, Los Angeles, CA 90025; (310) 481-0031; FAX (310) 481-2960
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1 Sansome St., Suite 850, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 617-1300; FAX (415) 434-2018
- Consulate – Denver: World Trade Center, 1675 BRd.way, Suite 1030, Denver, CO 80202; (303) 592-5200
- Consulate – Miami: Brickell Bay Office, 1001 Brickell Bay Dr., Suite 2800, Miami, FL 33131; (305) 374-1522; FAX (305) 374-8196
- Consulate – Atlanta: Georgia Pacific Centre, 133 Peachtree St. N.E., Atlanta, GA 30303; (404) 954-7700; FAX (404) 954-7702
- Consulate – Chicago: 400 N. Michigan Ave., 13th Floor, Chicago, IL 60611; (312) 970-3800; FAX (312) 970-3852
- Consulate – New York: 845 3rd Ave., New York, NY 10022; (212) 745-0200; FAX (212) 754-3062
- Consulate – Seattle: 900 4th Ave., Suite 3001, Seattle, WA 98164; (206) 622-9255
- Permanent Mission to the UN: One Dag Hammarskjöld Plaza, 885 2nd Ave., New York, NY 10017; (212) 745-9200; FAX (212) 745-9316
- Consulate – New York: 801 Second Ave, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 754-7403; FAX (212) 838-9812
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 326, New York, NY 10017-7671; (212) 486-4242; FAX (212) 486-7998

URUGUAY

- Embassy: 1913 I St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20006; (202) 331-1313; FAX (202) 331-8645; Consular Section: (202) 331-4219
- Consulate – Los Angeles: 429 Santa Monica Blvd., Suite 400, Santa Monica, CA 90401; (310) 394-5777; FAX (310) 394 5140
- Consulate – Miami: 1077 Ponce De Leon Bldg., Coral Gables, FL 33134; (305) 443-9764/7453; FAX (305) 443-7802
- Consulate – New York: 420 Madison Ave, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 753 8191/8192; FAX (212) 753 1603
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 322, New York, NY 10017; (212) 752-8240; FAX (212) 593-0935

UZBEKISTAN, REPUBLIC OF

- Embassy: 1746 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 887-5300; FAX (202) 293-6804
- Consulate – New York: 801 Second Ave., 20th Floor, New York, NY 10017; (212) 754-7403; FAX (212) 838-9812, (212) 754-6178

VENEZUELA

- Embassy: 1099 30th St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20007; (202) 342-2214; FAX (202) 342-6820
- Consulate – San Francisco: 311 California St., Suite 620, San Francisco, CA 94104; (415) 347-3323; FAX (415) 955-1970
- Consulate – Chicago: 20 N. Wacker Dr., Suite 1925, 19th fl., Chicago, IL 60606; (312) 236-9655/9659; FAX (312) 580-1010
- Consulate – New Orleans: World Trade Center, 2 Canal St., Suite 2300, New Orleans, LA 70130; (504) 524-6700, (504) 522-3284; FAX (504) 522-7092
- Consulate – Boston: 545 Boylston St., 3rd Floor, Boston, MA 02116; (617) 266-9475/9368; FAX (617) 266-2350
- Consulate – New York: 7 E. 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 826-1660; FAX (212) 644-7471
- Consulate – Puerto Rico: Edf. Mercantil Plaza, PISO 6 Ponce De Leon Ave., Suite 601, Hato Rey, San Juan, Puerto Rico 00918; (787) 766-4250/4251/4255

- Consulate – Houston: 2925 Briar Park Dr., Suite 900, Houston, TX 77027; (713) 974-0028/9002; FAX (713) 974-1413
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 335 East 46th St., New York, NY 10017; (212) 557-2055; FAX (212) 557-3528

VIETNAM, SOCIALIST REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1233 20th St. NW, Suite 400, Washington, D.C. 20036; (202) 861-0737; FAX (202) 861-0917
- Consulate – San Francisco: 1700 California St., Suite 430, San Francisco, CA 94109; (415) 922-1707; FAX (415) 922-1848
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 866 UN Plaza, Suite 435, New York, NY 10017; (212) 644-0594; (212) 644-5732

WESTERN SAMOA [See SAMOA]

YEMEN
- Embassy: 2319 Wyoming Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 965-4760; FAX (202) 337-2017
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 413 East 51st St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 355-1730/1731; FAX (212) 750-9613

YUGOSLAVIA, FORMER S.F. REPUBLIC OF [See SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO]

ZAIRE (See DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO)

ZAMBIA, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 2419 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20008; (202) 265-9717
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 237 East 52nd St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 888-5770; FAX (212) 888-5213

ZIMBABWE, REPUBLIC OF
- Embassy: 1608 New Hampshire Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20009; (202) 332-7100; FAX (202) 483-9326
- Permanent Mission to the UN: 128 East 56th St., New York, NY 10022; (212) 980-9511/5084; FAX (212) 308-6705